When an effort was made to show the film in Springfield some time ago, Mayor Stacy refused to permit it to be produced. There was strong opposition there on the part of the colored people of the city, led by Rev. William N. DeBerry, who issued a statement last night deploring the stand of the selectmen of this town. He said that he had seen both the original film and the censored one and considered the latter more undesirable than the original form.

CLIPPING FROM Chicago Tribune
Date Sept 29 1915

and exceedingly well acted.

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

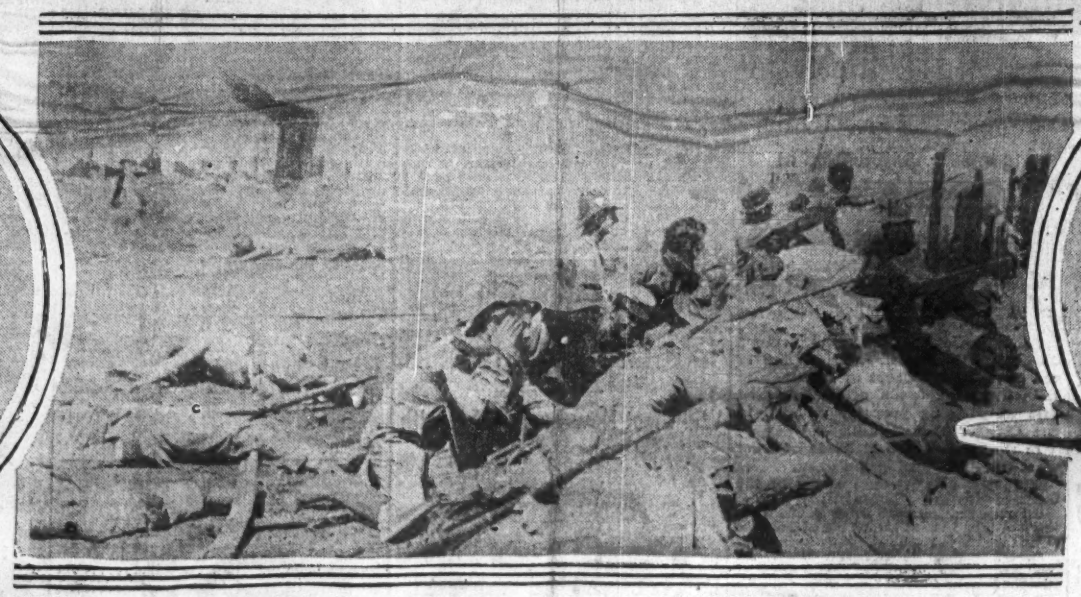
The historical drama "The Birth of a Nation" presented in motion pictures continues to draw crowds to the Nixon Theater. The popularity of this Griffith spectacle photoplay is not surprising because this picture so far surpasses the ordinary "movie" play that there can be no comparison. It seems strange to hear outbursts of applause during a "silent" drama but the scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are so stirring that one finds himself applauding almost unconsciously. As history the photoplay sets the north right concerning some phases of the activities in the south in carpet-bagging days after the war. Historically, also, the play reconstructs for the visual eye some of the scenes of 50 years ago. The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of Atlanta are a few of the historical scenes reproduced on the screen.

PHILADELPHIA (PA.) PUB. LED.
SEP 29

MAE MARSH "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" FOREST

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL MAKE ITS BOW TO SOUTH TONIGHT

General Robert E. Lee, as he is seen in "The Birth of a Nation"



Behind the Crater. One of the most thrilling of the battle scenes.

A megaphone and a big hat are constant companions. Mr. Griffith is seen here in the act of directing a big scene

HOW THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WAS CREATED

With the opening of a week's engagement at the Colonial theatre tonight, David W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will make its bow to the South.

New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, San Francisco and other large centers have been enthralled for months by the genius of the man who utilized 18,000 people, 2,000 horses and the rugged stage settings of the great outdoors in linking history with romance and immortalizing a story dear to the heart of every Southerner—the story of the Reconstruction. The unwillingness of playgoers in these large centers to be parted from the spectacle has made it impossible to present it in the smaller cities.

Tonight's presentation at the Colonial will be the first below the Mason and Dixon line, and while the local audience is being swayed between tears and laughter, another audience will be feeling the same emotions in a city beyond the seas; because, at the request of Mr. Griffith, the openings in London and Norfolk will be simultaneous. It is expected that the production will hold the center of the English stage for the next year in spite of the unsettled conditions over there.

Beginning tomorrow there will be daily matinees at the Colonial for the rest of the week, and it is expected that "The Birth of a Nation" will be witnessed by more people during its stay in Norfolk than any theatrical offering that the city has had in years.

In connection with the introduction of the spectacle in the South, the following article, dealing with the vastness of the offering and the personality of the man who transformed it from "dream stuff" to the most valuable theatrical property in the world, is interesting:

(By THEODORE MITCHELL.)

With the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in Los Angeles, David W. Griffith, the director, was confronted with the problem of what he should do during the unprofitable summer before him, as unprofitable Griffith decided to turn his hand growing, and he felt that the public would some day be ready and eager for better and truer film stories. These dreams were hinted occasionally until the men in the studio began to regard him as a joke. The general director looked upon him as a harmless and impractical dreamer, who was to be tolerated rather than encouraged, as he had proven histrionic ability.

Later the director had a picture about half finished when he was taken ill. The producers were anxious to push the production on the market. They permitted Griffith to complete it, and he started right in to work out a new theory he had been dreaming about. Prior to this event, the tradition of animated photography was that the picture must reveal the entire group of players in the scene. Griffith realized that in establishing this perspective, all hope to obtain intimate expression on the faces of the players was eliminated, and tried his invention, known as the "close-up," for the first time. He brought the players close enough to the camera to reveal to the audience just what is passing in the minds of the actors, whose face, head or shoulders or such parts of the body as required were shown to obtain this effect.

Young Griffith had his first picture completed and also a second before the general director returned to the studio. When the finished product of the Griffith pictures was shown, he threw up his hands before his eyes as if to hide some hideous nightmare from his vision. All the traditions were set at naught, and he insisted that two perfectly good pictures had been ruined. The authority of one who knew it all was exercised. Griffith entered no protest, but simply suggested that they put out the pictures and permit the public to pass judgment. The manager of the concern took the broad view of the situation. The pictures were needed to fill orders seen in a few large cities and is the sensation of the year, having been played to over a million people in less than four months, with receipts that rattled the dry bones of tradition in the box office. The total cost of the picture was nearly $500,000, and the receipts of five months more than absorbed this amount and it has proven the most profitable single production ever known in the photo-play world compared to the number of times and places it has been presented.

Griffith, the dreamer, is back in California again, working on another picture and dreaming more dreams. He insists that the day is not far distant when the people will pay as high as five dollars for a seat to see a motion picture. Look back over what he has accomplished in three years, and suspend judgment before you join in the chorus he has heard so often—as to dreamers being impractical—in a day when the people are still crying for something new and great, irrespective of the mere pecuniary cost. Daniel Webster's vision of "still more room at the top" still remains an inspiration to dreamers.

In far-off California amid the environments of the splendid out-of-doors theatre in which the great photo drama, "The Birth of a Nation," was born, I first witnessed the production of this remarkable achievement in the moving pitcure world. It was at the time that Mr. D. W. Griffith was receiving congratulations of friends and admirers the world over, and it seemed fitting that a son of Kentucky, born in the border state after the war had closed, should have produced this remarkable photo-play.

It has the concentrated intensity of an encyclopedia filled with dramas, and while imbued with the border state spirit he has most intelligently attuned the sentiment of his play to the spirit of a united nation and yet given us "fade-in" picture, and in all the pictures one can feel in the very sunlight the atmosphere of California. There is something in the very lights and shadows of the Pacific Coast sky that are distinctive even from those of the Southern States, but perhaps serves the purpose of the play even better than photographs taken of historical scenes where the battles occur.

Mr. Griffith was also the originator of the "close-up" picture, and in all his delicate changes and flashes has the masterly touch of Belasco, and in "The Birth of a Nation" has touched with a flash at every phase of the possibilities in a pictorial representation. You can all but hear the characters speak. It was not to be wondered at that the play met opposition when presented in Boston, the seat of very bitter memories on the race question. It was presented in Boston even against the author's wishes, but even in Boston, when all the facts and real purposes were known, and when it was established that "The Birth of a Nation" has eliminated the materially offensive phases of the play, which in no permanent way add to its strength, the likelihood is that "The Birth of a Nation" will continue for many years to be the great triumph of photoplays, and indeed represents the birth of new ideas as well as new ideals in moving pictures.

After witnessing a production like "The Birth of a Nation," the cheap, tawdry productions of ordinary reel scenarios in their early inception seem indeed out of date and passe. The exploitation of this play also indicates that producers must give some attention to have still pictures of their production made while in process of construction in order to give the people some idea on the printed page of the scenes they are to witness, and also eliminating the ghostly suggestion of flashlight pictures. If it is possible to tone down that ghostly, stagey manner on funeral notices, and, after him, an unproductive summer before him, young Griffith decided to turn his hand at poetry and short stories. The twin soul of the artistic temperament—morbidity—held him just in this period of his progression. After reading Nietzsche and Poe and kindred authors, his thoughts and literary effort necessarily reflected their spirit. He sold a poem to Mr. John A. Sleicher, and had submitted one or two weird short stories which were not, however, favored at the editorial conference. Sleicher took an interest in the young man, and suggested that he seek a wholly unexpected outlet for his work, and this chance suggestion determined a career.

Upper, Mr. Griffith directing a camera man during one of the wild dashes of the Clansmen. A high-power motor car was used in filming these scene in "The Birth of a Nation." Lower, hand-to-hand fighting is seen in all its grim realism in the battle of Petersburg.

"These moving picture fellows are looking for odd subjects, I am told," he informed young Griffith one day. "Why don't you make this story into a scenario and try your hand in that direction?"

Young Griffith had the dramatic fervor, and the idea took root. He had completed a play and submitted it to David Belasco. The "movies" were then not much in favor in legitimate dramatic circles, and the embryo dramatist feared a picture success might impair his idealistic literary ambitions. The play was finally produced. It had merit, but lacked popular appeal, and a few weeks' run found it removed with many others which have followed its fate, to the warehouse morgue.

Necessity was still tugging at the young actor-writer. In desperation he turned to the moving-picture field, which his editor friend had mentioned, as a last resort. They took his scenarios, but never produced them. But he was so persistent that one of the men of the concern suggested that he take a position as an actor with them until he could become better acquainted with what was required in motion picture stories. The pay was five dollars a day, and that was better than borrowing from friends, and Griffith took up acting in motion pictures. From the day he entered his first studio he became a "movie fan." He haunted the shop and wanted to know everything that could be learned.

Moving pictures were in their swaddling clothes in those days, and Griffith's genius found full vent. One-reel affairs of crude style were then produced, and there were already fixed traditions of the business, which, it was declared, must never be violated.

The spirit of the iconoclast is strong in Griffith. It manifested itself in those earlier days of his motion picture novitiate. He bombarded the directors and producers with suggestions which went in one ear and out the other, but persistently continued to write scenarios at odd times, only to have them turned back to him as impossible and entirely impracticable.

The picture realm held him a captive, and he never lost an opportunity to learn a new detail about how these one-reel "chasers," as they were known, were being produced. Five hundred dollars was then the limit of extravagance in the initial cost price of a picture. This "extra man," who had learned enough to be entrusted with more important roles, began to dream dreams which were to revolutionize the photo-play art. The demand for the crude film stories was into the story without arms or feet at times.

This settled Griffith's career. His acting was over, and he became a director with free rein to try his experiments. This marked an important step in the evolution of the motion picture in America. In rapid succession he invented the "switch back," the fading out of figures on the screen by a trick of the camera, and the newer effect of "dissolving in." These are now commonplaces of the art. The "switch back" is nothing but utilizing the old form of novels of jumping backward and forward in the lives of their characters to show the relationship of one chapter to the other in contrasted incidents. The "fade out" is the idea where the figure gradually disappears from the picture without moving. The "dissolving in" is the trick of photographing one picture upon another so that a new character arrives into the action from the mysterious nowhere.

As his technical knowledge widened, Mr. Griffith began to enlarge the entire scope of motion picture production. The old one-reelers were too limited to permit free rein for his pretentious ambitions, and he began casting about for feature stories for his pictures. He also began developing players to put his ideas across the screen to the audiences. It would take more than one big book to record all the new things he tried, the innovations he made and the players he developed. At the end of four years he made this modest little film concern a mighty force in a new form of expression. The men who had laughed at him had grown rich, and when he had left the old plant where they had scoffed at him as a dreamer, he was drawing a salary of $50,000 a year.

Literature may have lost a Balzac, the stage a successful dramatist, or a good actor, but this much is certain, the motion picture art had been inspired by a new force. The man with ideas and courage to test them out had turned the business inside out and had paved the way for greater achievements in the photo-play dramas.

The dreamer of dreams is never satisfied. This particular dreamer still had visions of an entirely new field of art in which the world was to be his background, and veritable armies of actors were to be employed in telling these new versions of old truths that would make people gasp in wonderment.

The mystical still appealed to him, and he sought enigmatical Browning for stories, and made them live in the flesh. Into the weird abysses of Poe's masterly works he brought forth thrilling subjects which had never been dreamed of in dramatic expressions. The rich mine of pageantry and poetry, the Bible, furnished plots. History suggested untold possibilities to this dreamer, and day and night he toiled and kept doing things that violated all precedent.

David W. Griffith is a native of Kentucky, whose father was a soldier in the Confederate army. He always had an idea that there were angles of this great conflict that had never been revealed, and utilized the novels by Thomas Dixon, Jr., as a setting for his big dreams. The suggestive matter of these tales was all he required to begin work upon which has proven a masterpiece. For eight months he toiled as quietly as possible, and he employed thousands of people all over the country to gather a mass of disjointed material upon the little celluloid strips which can be made to startle the world in the hands of a master. There was no book of record to crib from, for he wanted verified facts. University professors were employed to gather data for him and to search the secret archives of governmental records and history to furnish the truth that was stronger than fiction. They reported to him day by day, and he kept the chain of events, which his active brain evolved, an epic. West Point engineers with copies of old war maps were reproducing battlefields of the last days of the great struggle that were to be part of this picture story. Roadways were built, miles of trenches thrown up as in war times. Thousands of costumers and their workers were reproducing the costumes of the days before and during the Civil War.

A skilled musician was accompanying Griffith as he sauntered over the scenes catching snatches of old plantation melodies, and the "heart songs" he hummed during the time, he was working out a new scene in his story. At other times he was suggesting music of operatic scope, which under his supervision was being interwoven into an accompanying score, some of the most pretentious music ever written as a part of a motion picture production.

This mass of material under the guiding destiny of its creator assumed shape and symmetry after months of preparation and rehearsal.

The dreamer who had been able to secure capital enough to give him free rein, found himself face to face with the greatest problem of all. What was to be done with this gigantic work now that it was ready? Motion pictures were regarded as a ten-cent amusement enterprise. One rare picture had been shown in the regular theatres for fifty cents, with a few one-dollar seats, but to supplant legitimate dramatic production at old-time theatrical prices was counted impossible.

The conviction came upon Griffith that he had surpassed all standards of production, and he argued that it could be made to surpass all standards of exhibition. "We used to get five cents for a reel that cost two hundred dollars; why not get what is right for one that costs five hundred dollars? he argued with his business associates. His mathematics as well as his logic was correct.

Now everybody in the profession assured him he was crazy, but that was an old cry to him. He had been listening to this talk for years, every time he wanted to do something different. The financial backers were prevailed upon to let him take the matter in his own hands, and he began the preliminary work of launching the first two-dollar moving picture in the world in New York city. That picture is "The Birth of a Nation." It has been that should create admiration and sympathy for what the colored race have accomplished since the days of Reconstruction. It is a graphic revelation of the era of the carpet-baggers, who in these times have few sympathizers or defenders.

To look at these scenes taken in the San Fernando Valley by cameras covering an area of some twelve square miles, with artillery in action far in the distance and cavalry charging in the foreground, bombs exploding here and there, and colored action in every detail, one can have some conception of the perfection of this wonderful and spectacular triumph of photo-dramatization. There is something in Mr. Griffith's treatment that especially appeals to those who possess "Heart Songs," which was published at a time when the revival of old songs was just beginning, and Mr. Griffith recognized this in the introduction of old songs, and is doing his part towards preserving the melodies of bygone days. You are impressed with the feeling that you have had a graphic view of history, a sort of review of those events you read about, but the most touching thing in the whole play is the home-coming of the little Colonel. Griffith, with true instinct of an artist, knows how to blend pathos and humor and furnish the sad and gay in emotion flashes in striking contrast. He was the inventor of the "switch-back." He flashes one scene and then presents another which goes back in the story. He seems to understand the subtle art of reiteration and has utilized the quotation from President Wilson's "History of the United States" to support his presentation of origin and activities of the Ku Klux Klan. He was the originator of the

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) NEWS
SEPT. 27, 1915

DAVIDSON

GREAT HISTORY LESSON

The return engagement of the "Birth of a Nation," at the Davidson gives opportunity to again see this gigantic production which is the acme of perfection in the motion picture world in point of the number necessary to produce it, its historical value, its representation of Lincoln and the trying times which tested men's souls, Ford's theater in Washington, which was the scene of the greatest tragedy since the crucifixion, familiar scenes of two of the greatest generals of history, Grant and Lee, actual scenes of typical antebellum days, the ignorance, cupidity, loyalty and care-free days of the American negro, the basement of the "carpet baggers," the blind and unreasoning principles of the fanatics of the north who likened the freedom and enfranchisement of the negro slaves to the leading of the children of Israel out of the wilderness, and the common sense of the veterans of the northern army who had taken up their residence in the south and who could understand that instead of debasing the negro the greatest good to the fanatics of the north were really setting him back in the scale of civilization.

Lincoln had done more than anyone expected when in his emancipation proclamation of Jan. 1, 1863 he declared that the slaves were free. Even with that he realized the problem that would come up at the close of the war as to what should be done with them and how their relations with the whites could be adjusted, but the fanatical leader of the house, Stoneman, who it is claimed is the embodiment of Thaddeus Stevens, the noted champion in congress at the time of the colored race, had not the clear vision to foresee the unfitness of the newly freed negroes for self control, and made them the "equal of any white man," which was a terrible mistake. The play is one which can be seen more than once. New viewpoints are brought out as reading a good book a second time brings out beauties not noticed in the first reading.

Probably in no other theatrical production does one hear so many sweet tunes which under one name or another have been in existence practically for centuries. The most awe-inspiring part of the production is the assembling of the Ku-Klux Klan which is represented very numerous and in a high state of organization., but impartial historians now agree that the Republicans in congress exaggerated very greatly what was going on in the south in order to justify the "carpet-bag" reconstruction policy. One of the white-sheeted horsemen stopped at a negro cabin at midnight and asked for a bucket of water which he swallowed at one gulp, saying it was the first drink he had had since being killed at Shiloh." Those who are interested in this "Invisible Empire," which sprung up

9 ft. x 12 ft. Brus
close p

131

MANCHESTER (N. H.) MIRROR
SEPT. 23, 1915.

OR AND AMERICAN

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Famous Moving Picture, Longest and Most Important Ever Made, Witnessed By Big Audiences—At Auditorium for One Full Week.

Yesterday saw the opening performances of the much-talked-about spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," an historical drama in two gigantic parts, founded on Thomas Dixon's famous story, "The Clansmen." The Auditorium was filled at both performances with curious and expectant audiences.

A picturesque note was struck at the very beginning, for young women in crinolines and pantalettes, with flowing curls, distributed programs in the foyer as the patrons entered for their seats.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in photography upon which the producer, Mr. D. W. Griffith, and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unrivaled.

By Any Other Production

ever presented either in this city or any other. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The photo-marvel is much more than an engrossing entertainment. The first part is an eloquent and impassioned protest against the horrors of warfare. The tragic leave-takings, the wrecking of homes, the broken ties, the fearful sights on the battlefield are depicted with relentless fidelity. The flower of American youth is shown going forth from northern and southern homes to certain destruction in the terrific conflict which rages with appalling realism. The calamity in Europe is brought home with sickening vividness.

The picture is valuable as a lesson in history, for besides the decisive battles of the civil war, Lee's surrender to Grant, Sherman's march to the sea, (one of the finest pictures), the burning of Atlanta, the assassination of President Lincoln and the rise of the Ku-Klux Klan are among the incidents pictured, and here it might be well to state that some of the most wonderful and reckless riding is shown by hundreds of these daring horsemen.

There is, of course, as exciting plot which concerns the Cameron and Stoneman families, respectively

Of the South and North.

There is romance and tragedy, and in the second part of the picture thrilling melodrama. Here Flora Cameron, terrified by Gus, a renegade negro, jumps from a high cliff to her death. Her brother, Col. Ben Cameron, swears revenge, and this enables the producers to show the activities and ceremonies of the Ku-Klux. The play reaches an exciting climax in which the Ku-Klux is triumphant and villiany is punished.

It was difficult to pick and choose among the most striking pictures. The war scenes, the remarkable representation of Ford's theatre, with views in turn of the audience, the play in progress and the president's box, the Ku-Klux riders hastening on their deeds, the mob scenes, the happy plantation life which preceded the war,—all these excited wonder and admiration.

The cast, too, was excellent; each member was individually striking in facial play and pantomime. Young Ben Cameron was a picturesque hero, and the Misses Marsh, Cooper and Gish rivaled each other in daintiness and girlish charm. Mr. Seigmann was a stalwart and insinuating villain. Mr. Henaberry's portrayal of Abraham Lincoln was effective in make-up and bearing. Miss Lee provided comic relief.

Mr. Griffith, himself a southerner, in producing this marvelous pictorial spectacle must have had for his object a desire that would equal in eloquence the spoken word.

To Produce a Subject

A feature, in fact, a big feature of the performance, is the musical score which is rendered in conjunction with the production, synchronized with every action and scene, and presented by a picked orchestra of twenty concert players. The effects were wonderful and the whole presentation went off with such smoothness and finish that there was no surprise when the hearty outbursts of applause were heard.

RUTLAND (Vt.) HERALD
SEPT. 23, 1915.

Playhouse, School Histories and "The Birth of a Nation."

When one sees D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," and learns from it the many facts and sidelights of American history that are not to be found in the school editions of history, the thought comes that the educational departments of the country are neglecting the real education of the growing children. It is a known fact that the histories studied by the children in the schools of the South give an entirely different version of the great struggle of 1861 than that which is given the schools of the North.

Then "The Birth of a Nation" comes and in clear, impressive motion pictures, gives the real story of this great struggle and the spectator, be he a grown-up or a child, realizes that in his studies of the Great Rebellion he has learned but a small part of the actual history. For instance, it was new knowledge to many to learn that after the states of the Confederacy had signed a peace, there were Northern statesmen who wished and urged the president to treat the rebellious states as conquered provinces and to hang their leaders. This is but one of many things that are brought to light in "The Birth of a Nation" for the first time to millions of people who have always felt that they knew the better part of the real history of the Civil war.

The question arises in the minds of many: "Why are so many facts kept from the students in the schools of the North; and why should the people of the South be given a different version than the people of the North?" Why shouldn't there be one history for the entire country and that history absolutely truthful, unvarnished to suit the prejudices and sympathies of either class.

Must it remain for the motion pictures to give the people of the world the real truth of history and other educational matters? It would seem so. And if it must be, let there be more pictures produced like "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Playhouse of this city for an engagement of five more days. Make reservations today.—adv.

PHILADELPHIA (Pa.) INQUIRER
SEPT. 28, 1915

[illegible] properties, each of the adjoining owners [illegible] obliged to bear one-half the expense.

Thaddeus Stevens in "The Birth of a Nation"

Editor Inquirer:—If it is in your power to do so will you kindly answer the following in Everybody's Column:

In "The Birth of a Nation" does Stoneman represent Thaddeus Stevens, of Penna., or Charles Sumner, of Mass. If neither, who does he represent? Thanking you in advance.
C. F. H.

He is supposed to represent Thaddeus Stevens; as a matter of fact he grossly misrepresents the grand old Congressman of whom Pennsylvania at large and Lancaster in particular are so justly proud.

Portland Evening Express
9-28-15

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

The Birth of a Nation, which is the greatest spectacle in motion pictures that Portland has ever witnessed, opened its return engagement at the B. F. Keith Theater last evening with a well filled and enthusiastic house. Coming as it does, when the 49th anniversary of the G. A. R's is being held at Washington, D. C., which is being attended by many Maine Veterans, it grips us and inspires interest more than ever before.

From start to finish this immense and spectacular picture held its audience and as a propaganda for peace its work can hardly be rivaled. As for patriotism, no one present could have helped but feel some thrill as the soldiers in blue bearing the Star Spangled Banner marched firmly away at Lincoln's bidding. Then, too, when the inspiring strains of Dixie, which heralded the Confederates' approach were heard, the audience, Northern though it was in spirit could not refrain from applause. The battle scenes, which covered miles and miles of country, over which shot and shells were hurled, with men falling dead or wounded by the way, or rallying bravely to the Flag, could not fail but fill the audience with the emotion, both terrible and inspiring of war.

The love theme, which runs through the whole production, between the Northern and Southern sweethearts, pathetic in its seeming hopelessness causes many a tear, and in its sweetness softens the sordidness and suffering, which other parts of the picture depicts.

Perhaps the scene in which the assassination of Lincoln is given, stands out more clearly than any other. This setting is accredited as being absolutely historically correct as to its details. The character of Lincoln is carefully acted and the likeness is said to be startling.

The Ku Klux Klan in their mysterious costumes, bearing the flaming cross which summons all the members of the band to its secret rendezvous inspired great enthusiasm, and as they dashed with mad speed over miles of country to the rescue of a besieged party the excitement was at its highest point.

The Negro element with its cruel and bestial side maddened with rum showed well the horror of the reconstruction period. Yet this part should not be censored, as it is only a natural course of events in the readjustment of people who are thrust from abject slavery to freedom, to be maddened by their own power.

Still from all this horror and bloodshed, when tears came instead of laughter, when many families were broken and the homes of people made desolate there arose a Nation strong in its union and desire for liberty, a nation which is at present at peace with the world. And under the able direction of David W. Griffith, people of this generation may see this great and wonderful change take place. It is no wonder that at the end when the orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner that the whole audience as one person rose to its feet.

Portland Sunday Telegram
9-26-15

THE BIRTH OF A NATION HAS HEARTY WELCOME

Return of Great Film a Very Popular Occasion—Large and Enthusiastic Audiences at the Keith—Another Successful Week Assured.

Yesterday saw the opening performances of the return engagement of the much talked about screen spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at B. F. Keith's and again it enthused Portland audiences. It is easy to understand the tremendous drawing power of this great production, for it is unrivalled either in spoken drama or on the screen for magnitude of conception. It is a historical drama in two parts, founded on Thomas Dixon's well known story "The Clansman." This story had been dramatized for the spoken drama and had a certain vogue a few years ago, but it is not until one sees the picture that the story strikes home. It shows the period of reconstruction days in all its terrors and to a present day audience would seem gruesome and overdrawn if it were not authenticated by history and the present horrors of the great European war now raging.

The terrific and spectacular side of war is shown in the greatest mimic battles ever staged. With all the conflict in progress, with the bursting of shells and the hand-to-hand struggles it seems that there must have been accidents if not fatalities so realistic is it all. These battle scenes are so wonderful in detail that they can be seen again and again before one grasps all that passes before the eye.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in photography upon which the producer, David Wark Griffith and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unsurpassed. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The first part is an eloquent and impassioned protest against the horrors of warfare. The tragic leave takings, the wrecking of homes, the broken ties, the fearful sights on the battlefield are depicted with relentless fidelity. The flower of American youth is shown going forth from Northern and Southern home to certain destruction in the terrific conflict and the calamity in Europe is brought home with a vividness that will make everyone glad that we have a President of the calibre of Woodrow Wilson as chief executive to act with moderation and dignity, instead of embroiling our Country in another sanguinary conflict as might have so readily come to pass in the past few months.

The picture is valuable as a lesson in history, for besides the decisive battles of the Civil war, Lee's surrender to Grant, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, the assassination of President Lincoln and the rise of the Klu-Klux-Klan are among the incidents pictured, and here it might be noted that some of the most reckless and daring riding is shown by the sheeted riders.

There is an exciting plot which concerns the Cameron and Stoneman families, of the South and North respectively. There is romance and tragedy, as well as thrilling melodrama in the part where Flora Cameron, terrified by a renegade negro jumps from a high cliff to her death. Her brother, Col. Ben Cameron, swears revenge and this enables the producers to show the activities and ceremonies of the Klu-Klux. The play reaches an exciting climax in which the Klu-Klux is triumphant and villiany is punished. At the close are shown pictures touching on the reconstructed negro, the uplift of a race with education and culture at its disposal. It is only carping critics who will object to the truth. There is no reflection on the negro of today in the picture.

It is difficult to pick out any scene as excelling another. Of course for concerted action, the battle scenes stand out, but the scene in Ford's Theatre showing the assassination of Lincoln and the Klu-Klux incidents, the mob scenes, all arouse wonder and admiration.

The stage effects are worthy of special mention. The battle scenes are rendered splendidly realistic and arouses the audience to great enthusiasm. Another feature is the musical score, syncronised with every action and scene and presented by a picked orchestra of twenty players. One loses oneself in adjectives to adequately describe this great picture-drama. It must be seen to be appreciated. Portland theatregoers who have not already seen it should make a point of seeing it. There are two performances daily and Keith's will probably do another record week in attendance.

Portland Evening Express

"BIRTH OF A NATION"
SUPERBLY PRODUCED IN FILM
AT COLONIAL LAST NIGHT

A masterpiece of motion picture drama. "The Birth of a Nation," was presented at the Colonial last night to a well-filled house, and for sheer tenseness of dramatic interest is probably without parallel, holding the interest of the audience from start to finish.

It portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the old South, quiet in the calm preceding the great outbreak. Then the war. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation follow. The great battle that determined the war is staged and the work of rebuilding the South commences under the guidance of Lincoln; then the assassination of the one man who could control the dissenting force. Then the dark days of negro supremacy in the South are pictured.

With the coming of the Ku Klux the negro supremacy is put down through more bloodshed, following a guerilla warfare. The production shows the agony that the South endured that a nation might be born.

The music throughout the entire production is a notable feature.

Owing to the length of the play, the matinees will begin at 2:15 o'clock and the evening performance at 8:15 o'clock.

Dallas Dispatch Sept 28

"Birth of Nation" His Greatest, so All Reports Agree

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Dallas Opera House Monday, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle, according to all reports.

There is a historical punch in every scene.

REPORT (Conn.) POST
SEPT. 28, 1915.

GRANT AND LEE APPEAR IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Surrender of the Confederate Army Accurately Depicted by the Film.

DONALD CRISP AS GENERAL GRANT.

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at Poli's all next week, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Milmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox court house, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9 under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Milmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

Date ..... Oct
1915

The Play and History

"The Birth of a Nation," or "The Clansman," as the novel is called, is sometimes regarded as the answer of the South to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The fact is, however, that both works illustrate the evils of slavery in different ways. The sufferings of the slaves and the sufferings of the South after the war sprang from the same cause. The institution of slavery was wrong, and could not endure. It does not follow that every slaveholder was cruel. In fact, "Uncle Tom's Cabin"—the novel, not the play, which is a mere travesty of the novel—begins with a contrast between a kindly, paternal slaveholder and a vulgar grasping trader. In paternalism lay the compensations of the system. In regarding the slave as a piece of property and a subject of trade lay its curse.

"The Birth of a Nation," however, is not a defence of slavery, but an attack upon the method of reconstruction adopted after the war—the sudden elevation of the slave to a position of authority, and the introduction of the carpetbagger, the greedy and ignorant official, who understood neither the slave nor his old master.

The calamity was largely the result of the death of Lincoln. His successor, Johnson, claimed to be trying to carry out Lincoln's ideas, but it was a personality, not merely a policy, that was needed. Johnson was probably honest, but he had neither the capacity nor the patience required for the great task. What was required was diplomacy, tactful administration, consultation with the best of the Southern leaders and with the most intelligent of the African people, as to what was best to be done. Instead of that there was wrangling about cast-iron policies and cast-iron laws, none of which, without the most skillful and honest administration, would meet the case.

The Northern advocate says that the Southern Legislatures, under white control, sought to keep the negro in slavery. The Southern advocate dwells upon the corruption, ignorance, and extravagance of Legislatures under negro control, or under the control of whites who made the negroes their dupes. The fault lay in lack of diplomacy and administration and in allowing passion and faction to prevail. The best men in the North and the best men in the South should have "got together." Lincoln might have got them together, and a dark chapter in American history might not have been written.

The play is to be regarded as an artistic production, and so enjoyed, not as the final judgment of history, although it may be a contribution to history and a means of stimulating interest. The sternest foe of slavery, the strongest champion of the North, will fall in love with the Southern family depicted by the art of Dixon and the playwright, and will become their advocate for the time. Afterwards he might usefully devote his evenings to a study of the whole question of slavery and reconstruction. Let him read "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "The Clansman" again, and then draw upon the public libraries for all the literature of slavery, of the politics of slavery, of the war, of the period of reconstruction, and of the New South that we hear so much of to-day. The great schism, let us hope, is being healed and a brighter day is dawning for the South and for both races.

Trenton Ev Times
Sept 12, 15

GRIFFITH "ESCAPE" WINNER AT STATE

Those who saw the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," last week awaited anxiously the D. W. Griffith film, which is being given at State Street Theatre for three days. The house was crowded yesterday and all who saw the picture left with one idea, and that was that Griffith has produced another photoplay de luxe in "The Escape." A six-thousand-feet feature photoplay based on the play of Paul Armstrong is being presented.

While the remarkable direction of that great story was in the high standard of the Griffith art, still Blanche Sweet, that remarkable artist who has thousands of friends in Trenton because of her photoplay art, deserves credit for the wonderful portrayal of the daughter of the East Side demcrate. Mae Marsh, who will be remembered by those who saw "The Birth of a Nation" film, was remarkable in her trying part as the wife of the East Side tough. Owen Moore, F. A. Turner, Robert Harron, Donald Crisp and Ralph Lewis carried out their difficult parts without a flaw.

Griffith used the New York police department in the photoplay and his scenes on the East Side of New York gave him plenty of play for the sensational features that cropped up from time to time in the picture. It was easily the best production that State Street has presented to its patrons in some time. Six thousand feet of film told the following story.

May Joyce, a child of the slums, longed for a better life. She continually besought her father, a stevedore, to try to better the condition of his children. With the exception of May, these children were in a bad way. Jennie was a pitiful

Dallas Daily Times Herald Sept 28

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The Birth of a Nation," which will open a two weeks' engagement at the Dallas Opera House next Monday night, is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," but tells the story of the reconstruction of the South in a manner a thousand times more vividly than is posible in the words of any wielder of the pen.

As a prelude to reconstruction, David W. Griffth, the world's recognized master of film drama, depicts in detail some of the most terrific scenes of the conflict that rent a nation asunder. Griffith, a Southerner himself, and the son of an officer in the Confederate army, understands the passions and aims of the South, and for the first time in fifty years he has made others understand them, and take them home unmistakably to their hearts. On the massive Griffith screen, the battle of Petersburg is fought; Sherman marches to the sea and storms Atlanta; Lee and Grant meet and shake hands at Appomattox; Lincoln is assassinated in the crowded Ford's Theater; the South Carolina legislature, elected by the carpetbaggers, meets and passes pernicious laws tending to degrade the Aryan South; the Southerners arise in their might, forming an "invisible empire," and the Ku Klux Klans ride wildly forth on their deeds of vengeance and mercy. Throughout all, there runs a tender story of romance.

Accompanying the screen drama, is a musical score of grand operatic calibre, which is surely interprets the action as does the Wagnerian music the action of a great German drama. Yet this score has for its themes the airs of love and patriotism familiar to everybody, and never becomes difficult of comprehension. A symphony orchestra of thirty is carried to interpret this score.

CHATTANOOGA (Tenn.) NEWS
SEPT. 28. 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION" PRESENTED IN SOUTH

Is Shown at Norfolk Before a Large Audience—Greeted With Enthusiasm.

(Special to The News.)

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 28.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala theater, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," made its entry into the south at the Colonial theater here last night. An audience typical of the old dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Maye, with members of the council and board of aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard; Col. Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe; Representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others prominent in the official and social life of eastern Virginia were in the audience.

Never in the history of a southern playhouse was such a triumph achieved by a dramatic presentment of historic and romantic narrative as this production won. As in the short space of three hours the impelling drama of the final welding of this nation in bonds of unity was enacted in all its fascinating detail.

Griffith being a southerner born, the son of Brig.-Gen. John Griffiith, of Kentucky, has caught the psychology of this historic period of our national revolution. He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement; the threatening news of a presidential election in 1860 that was to disrupt the ties that hold us together. Impelling pictures of the heroism and sufferings of war as it actually is follow. Sherman's march to the sea is shown in its devastating totality, in a manner never reached by any other historian or dramatist. The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes, when those half-starved and worn out heroes offered a desperate resistance behind the crater's rim, which has challenged the admiration of the world.

Griffith does not tell you about it. He employes an art that makes you see it; feel yourself a part of it; and while it is being enacted before your eyes, the blood tingles with the heroism and the marvels of it. And all the time the master producer plants his great lesson that war is a futile thing in which to settle questions of dispute between civilized human beings. So many details follow this startling beginning that it is difficult to cover all in the briefest comment. You see the final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox; the memorable night in Ford's theater, when a fanatic's bullet laid Abraham Lincoln low and robbed the sorely tried nation of its guiding force.

The fairies break loose after this in eight years of the Reconstruction period. They are truthfully and forcefully told for the first time. A horde of scalawags and unscrupulous politicians come out of the north while the south is getting about its task of rehabilitation. The chivalrous men of that day organized an invisible empire to right these outrages. The ignorant freedmen who had been cousined and beguiled by the notorious carpet baggers were put right by their true friends. The south masters its task with will and bravery, the villians and the politicians are driven out and a new era dawns for a powerful part of the mightiest nation in the world's history in a way which brings this impelling, gripping narrative to a logical close.

Words are not strong enough to convey the work behind this production or to hint at the marvelous details which Griffith infuses into part I.

It is great because it is truth linked to romance and pictures the best traditions of as noble people as ever held a place in the world's history.

SEPT. 28. 1915
HOUSTON (TEX.) CHRONICLE

THEAT

"Birth of a Nation" Makes Hit in Norfolk

Special to The Chronicle.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 28.—Simultaneously with its presentation at the Scala Theatre, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," made its entry into the South last night at the Colonial Theatre here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion greeted the first presentation.

Mayor Wynham R. May, with members of the council and board of aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard; Colonel Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and others prominent in the official and social life of Eastern Virginia were in the audience.

Never in the history of a Southern playhouse was such a triumph achieved by a dramatic presentment of a historical and romantic narrative as this production won. In the short space of three hours the impelling drama of the final welding of this nation in bonds of unity was enacted in all its fascinating detail. Griffith, being a Southerner, born the son of Brigadier General John Griffith of Kentucky, has caught the psychology of this historic period of our national evolution.

He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement; threatening news of a presidential election in 1860 that was to disrupt the ties that held us together. Impelling pictures of the heroisms and sufferings of war as it actually is follow. Sherman's march to the sea is shown in its devastating totality, in a manner never reached by any other historian or dramatist.

The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes, when those half-starved and wornout heroes offered a desperate resistance behind the crater's rim which has challenged the admiration of the world. Griffith does not tell you about it. He employs an art that makes you see it; feel yourself a part of it; and while it is being enacted before your eyes the blood tingles with the heroism and the marvels of it. And all the time the master producer plants his great lesson that war is a futile thing by which to settle questions of dispute between civilized human beings.

So many details follow this startling beginning that it is difficult to cover all in the briefest comment. You see the final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox; the memorable night in Ford's Theatre, when a fanatic's bullet laid Abraham Lincoln low and robbed the sorely tried nation of its guiding force. The furies break loose after this in eight years of the reconstruction period. They are truthfully and forcefully told for the first time. A horde of scalawags and unscrupulous politicians come out of the North while the South is setting about its task of rehabilitation. The chivalrous men of that day organize an invisible empire to right these outrages. The ignorant freedmen who had been beguiled by the notorious carpetbaggers are put right by their true friends. The South masters its task with skill and bravery, the villains and the politicians are driven out and a new era dawns for a powerful part of the mightiest nation in the world's history in a way which brings this impelling, gripping narrative to a logical close.

LITTING FROM Telegraph
PITTSBURG (Pa.) CHRONICLE
SEPT. 29, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS IN ITS FIFTH WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation," now in the fifth week of its run at the Nixon Theater, is a picture of American history, which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. "The Birth of a Nation" is given with true fidelity to details. Running through the historical scenes are two romantic love episodes. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's world-famous stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots." At the close of the picture is shown the new era of the negro race giving scenes at Hampton, Va., which evidence the progress made by that people since the period of 50 years ago.

close p

9 ft. x 12 ft. Bruss

Dallas Morning News Sep 26/15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT OPERA HOUSE

WILL OPEN TWO WEEKS' ENGAGEMENT MONDAY NIGHT, OCTOBER 4.

The Opera House makes the following announcement:

"Both 'Ben-Hur' and 'The Blue Bird,' which heretofore have held the record for spectacular theatrical productions, are said to be surpassed as far as they surpassed their predecessors by the 'Birth of a Nation,' which opens a two weeks' engagement at the Dallas Opera House Monday night, Oct. 4.

"David W. Griffith is credited in his mighty spectacle with making the most thrilling period of American history live again. The audiences through the hypnotism of 5,000 rapidly moving scenes of battle, romance and chivalry, of a grand operatic musical score made up of themes of love and patriotism, and sound and electrical effects of a unique description are said to be transported for nearly three hours back into the days of the Civil War and Reconstruction. They get a fleeting glimpse of the period such as flashes vividly through the minds of veterans, sitting dreaming around their annual camp fires.

"Many circumstances have conspired to make 'The Birth of a Nation' the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than 'The Clansman' play. D. W. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of Reconstruction; Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theater, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South. These personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled 'the second struggle between the North and the South,' a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the Southerner. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

"Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny 'armies' of the theatric board. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux 'rides' right out in the open, which surpass in thrills the Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a 'short cast' drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theater performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina Legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of outdoor nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art form of drama-spectacle-with-music."

Sherman's March to the Sea

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

Dallas Daily Times Herald Sep 28

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

In the artillery actions in "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its two weeks' engagement at the Dallas Opera House next Monday night, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 period. Some of these shells, used in the night scenes in the battle of Petersburg and the storming of Atlanta, cost as much as $80 a piece. They were especially prepared for their high illuminating qualities. The field of Petersburg, in some moments of the action, is in total darkness. Then, one of these giant red bombs burst, illuminating five miles of territory and revealing 18,000 men engaged in a realistic grapple to the death. Never in the history of art, dramatic or pictoral, has anything been produced that approaches the startling grandeur of these effects.

When the infantry gets into action, they use the antique Springfield muskets and the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge it is to be seen that their uniforms are not spick and span, as in stage plays, but torn and tattered as in actual warfare. Many of the men are coatless and hatless. The flags, even, have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time in the history of the stage, the grime, dirt and sordidness of war are as accurately presented as the glory.

The battles are hard, gruelling contests of strength and skill, not falling one whit short of actual warfare, except that death is only mimicked. No football clashes in rival colleges nor tugs of war in rival regiments can be compared to the Griffith warfare. Actual military brigades are employed, not a few struggling "supers." Everything is depicted, from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the bayonet duels of individuals. Many hundred separate and distinct scenes are shown in the battle of Petersburg alone, which is only one of the few giant climaxes of a Titanic spectacle.

Ev. Journal Dallas Sep 28

Dallas Theaters

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

Climaxes roll crest upon crest like ocean waves in a storm in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen for the first time in Texas at the Dallas Opera House next Monday night. Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, and the mad dashes of the Ku-Klux Klansmen are only a few of the giant crests amid the waves of thrills.

As illustrative of the methods of D. W. Griffith, the producer of this mighty spectacle of the Civil War and reconstruction days, a few words may be said of the staging of the battle of Petersburg. Griffith drilled his regiments, numbering 18,000 men, as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a subdirector.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith took advantage of this fortunate fact to use the tower as his field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand he installed a modern telephone switchboard. From it ran ten wires to ten corners of the field. These wires were placed in conduits underground, so that the men and horses participating in the battle should not get their feet entangled in the steel threads.

When everything was ready for the camera, Griffith took his place in the tower. His eye sweeping the whole field, he telephoned instructions every minute to his ten subdirectors. They obeyed him as quickly and unquestionably as do the soldiers of Joffre or Von Kluck.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
SEPT. 23, 1915

dancers, singers, and fun-makers.

THE PHOTO-PLAYS

Majestic FF

THE BIRTH OF A NATION, filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion-pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure. Music accompanies the whole. The twenty-sixth week.

Dallas Morning News Sep 27

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Is Shown for First Time in South and Achieves Decided Success at Norfolk, Va.

Special to The News.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 28.—D. W. Griffith's spectacular show, "The Birth of a Nation," made its entry into the South last night at the Colonial Theater here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Mayo, with members of the Council and Board of Aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard; Colonel Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others prominent in the official and social life of Eastern Virginia were in the audience.

The play is a dramatic presentation of a historic and romantic narrative and achieved a triumph here. In the space of three hours the drama shows the welding of this Nation in bonds of unity. Old days when happiness reigned in the land of cotton are pictured and then the development of the abolition movement is presented. This is followed by the news of the presidential election in 1860 that was to result in war. Heroism and sufferings of war are shown and Sherman's march to the sea is given in its devastating totality. The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes.

The final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theater, and the furies of Reconstruction days are show in full detail. Then comes the organization of invisible empire, the Ku Klux Klan, which finally rights the outrages and the villains and politicians are driven out. The dawn of a new era brings the show to a close.

The show is great because it is truth linked to romance and pictures the best traditions of a noble people. A lesson taught is that war is a futile thing in which to settle questions of dispute between civilized human beings.

SHORT SESSION OF RATE HEARING.

Commission Adjourns Following Death of Governor's Mother.

Special to The News.

Austin, Texas, Sept. 28.—Only a short session of the Railroad Commission was held today to consider the petition of the railroads for advanced freight rates, the afternoon adjournment having been out of respect to the death of the Governor's mother.

J. A. McQuillan, mechanical superintendent of the Santa Fe, completed his testimony today. On redirect he gave values to shop tools, pile drivers, wreckers and steam shovels in excess of the valuations made by Expert Emerson of the commission. Figures put in at Dallas on Santa Fe equipment, higher than Emerson's, were supposed to have been made by McQuillan.

Mr. Gray of commission counsel conducted a lengthy cross-examination to test McQuillan's valuations. Witness said his figures were made from office records, he having inspected only two locomotives in person. He considered engine performance in connection with the records.

D. W. McLeod, auditor of the Santa Fe, testified that if Emerson's rule of depreciation had been followed the road would have had to spend from three-quarters to one million dollars additional, chargeable to operating expense, in order to buy new equipment and structures.

Portsmouth Press Sep 30

NIXON.

"The Birth of a Nation," now in the fifth week of its successful run at the Nixon theater, is a picture of American history which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. That period of our history known as the reconstruction period, is little known to the average person. The facts of the case are not given prominence, nor is the second uprising of the south, in which the Ku Klux Klan figures, made much of. But in Griffith's great photodrama, "The Birth of a Nation," this is given with true fidelity to details. At the close of the picture is shown the new era of the negro race, giving scenes at Hampton, Va., which evidence the progress made by that people since the period of 50 years ago.

BROOKLYN, (N. Y.) TIME

Date .....

while hunting these shops and studying ... of his role of Gustave Mueller.

Including to-night only five more performances of D. W. Griffith's $500,000 spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Since the presentation of the wonderful picture history of the Civil War period more than 320,000 persons have seen it at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The last performance will be given Saturday night.

PITTSBURG (Pa.) PRESS
SEPT. 28, 1915

beautiful ... many, many months ago. Rather did she resemble a cameo than a living representative of the graceful dance.

A. Robins in his eccentric specialty got the laughs and won them easily.

ELMER K. ZUPP.

NIXON.

To crowded houses "The Birth of a Nation," the great D. W. Griffith moving picture spectacle at the Nixon theater, opened its fourth week yesterday. With its tremendous battle scenes, its thrilling pictures of the rides of the Klu-Klux Clan, its pathetic incidents in the life of the beloved President, Abraham Lincoln, this play has reached the high water mark of theatrical productions. The musical accompaniment is a good half of its attractiveness, so well are the selections chosen and played.

Portsmouth Herald Sep 29

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Colonial, continues to draw capacity houses. The spectacle will be shown twice daily during the balance of the week and the engagement will positively conclude on Saturday night. Matinees ... at 2:15 and night performances at

Pittsburg Leader Sep 30

A STAR OF THE FILM

MAE MARSH
In "The Birth of a Nation," at Nixon.

PITTSBURG (Pa.) CHRONICLE
SEPT. 28, 1915

lovers of the photo-drama ate production. Besides the pictures selections are given on the organ, the orchestra plays a number of tuneful melodies assisted by a large chorus of well trained voices.

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

The big Griffith spectacle photoplay continues to draw large audiences to the Nixon Theater, where the line of ticket-buyers extends almost every day out to Smithfield street. This picture has, so far, outclassed the ordinary "movie" play that the success is not to be wondered at. In massiveness of scenes, perfection of detail, steadiness and clearness of photoplay and in harmony of musical accompaniment, it is far and away the best "show" of the kind so far seen in Pittsburgh. It may be added that, despite the somewhat vigorous protests made against its performance here, there has never been the slightest disorder in the theater—a tribute to the good sense of the people who felt in the beginning that they were aggrieved by the presentation. The engagement has several weeks to run before the regular dramatic season opens in the Nixon.

Pittsburg Leader Sep 30

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" HAS EMOTIONAL SUCCESS

That same meed of sweeping success which came to the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities has been the fortune of the production in this city.

At each presentation of the picture in the Forrest Theatre there has been a crowd sufficient to place standing room at a premium.

However, the management has made every effort to accommodate patrons with seats and persons who have been turned away from the box office for lack of accommodation have wisely purchased tickets for later performances.

This is made possible by the arrangement permitting the purchase of seats two weeks in advance.

So widespread has been the discussion of the theme of "The Birth of a Nation" that it is hardly necessary again to outline the story.

Suffice it to say that the spectacle deals in a big way with a big theme.

No such wonderful photographic conceptions have ever before been made for the screen and the Griffith achievement is unquestionably the greatest yet made known to the theatre patron.

A more complete idea of the conflict of armies on the field of battle could not be given even were actual hostilities to be photographed.

The onlooker sees a battle as only those in the very front line of fighting would see a conflict.

Then there is a wonderful realization of the South of ante-bellum days when slaves worked in the cotton fields and were sold on the block.

The great Liberator who gave to the helpless the boon of fredom is seen in his very human aspect as the comforter of the oppressed and the tragedy that snuffs out the light of such a life is in contrast the more impressive.

Indeed it would be difficult to imagine a more effective and affecting scene than that showing the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's Theatre at Washington.

Yet these are but a few of the many tremendous incidents brought upon the screen and the skill of the master hand that intermingled the tragic with elements of romance and of comedy is sure to command the highest respect and admiration.

Incidental to the showing of the picture is a musical score which is a marvel of synchronization, for each melody is illustrative of the shifting scene and the whole field of musical composition seems to have been searched with the skill of the true artist.

No better cast has ever been assembled for a motion picture presentation. There is no wonder, therefore, that "The Birth of a Nation" is epoch-making in theatricals.

Dallas Journal Sep 25

18,000 PEOPLE, 3,000 STEEDS, 5,000 SCENES IN PRODUCING FILM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," To Be Shown at Dallas Opera House

THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG.

Art is long says the poet, and outlasts throne or emperor. Occasionally, however, old art ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seises the scepter and remakes the world. This is what David Mark Griffith, foremost of directors, is said by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Dallas Opera House for two days, at the Monday night, Oct. 4. Griffith runs a great drama he could be eliminated in great degree by supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: A new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to pass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation" as no other filmed play—not even "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis"—has been put on. He used half a street in his locale, the largest set ever built in American history as his subject. 18,000 people as his actors, 3,000 riders and steeds as his cavalry, 5,000 scenes instead of a few score or a few hundred. His work dwarfed the old-fashioned stage art to such petitions that many are wondering whether the so-called "indoor" drama is not doomed to long and possibly total eclipse.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls." The times of Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill.

For the first time in theatrical history a motion spectacle is being presented as a regular attraction at regular prices at a first-class playhouse. The success has been so great that the Griffith drama comes here with a baggage equipment of two sixty-foot baggage cars, a company of fifty people altogether.

The story embraces beautiful romances of the Blue and the Gray. Ben Cameron, the Elsie Cameron, and his Northern sweetheart, Elsie Cameron, the Confederate girl, and sweet Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie. Among the principals of the largest cast ever assembled for a dramatic entertainment are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lew, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reid, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Howard, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, John Reddyn, Ernest Campbell, John French, J. A. Berlinger.

Dallas Dispatch Sep 25

"The Birth of Nation" Greatest Production Ever, Is Claim

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Dallas Opera House next Monday night, is billed as the largest and most important theatrical production in the history of the American stage, yet not a word is spoken thruout the performance of nearly three hours. Music supplies the absence of speech, whilst the wizard of the screen unfolds in 12,000 feet of film the thrilling romance of the war between the states, and the reconstruction of the Southland.

Before the startled gaze of the spectator is fought the battle of Petersburg, with all the realism of bursting bombs and the roar of the cannon. Sherman marches to the sea and storms Atlanta. Lee and Grant meet and shake hands at Appomattox. The South goes to work to rebuild itself under the fostering hand of Abraham Lincoln, and then the spectator is transferred to Ford's theatre and witnesses the tragedy that gave the South over to the rule of the carpetbaggers. To offset this rule, the Ku Klux Klan is organized, and 3000 knights of the invisible empire ride off on their deeds of vengeance and mercy. Thruout runs a story of romance based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman."

Bluefield Daily Tele. Sept 27

BIRTH OF A NATION MIGHTY SPECTACLE

Bluefield Will be Smallest City in World to Witness Greatest Theatrical Sensation of Half a Century.

To be the smallest city in the world to witness the greatest theatrical sensation of the past fifty years will be Bluefield's distinction when D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle of the reconstruction, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Elks' opera house for an engagement of three days beginning Thursday night, October 7. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday.

In Norfolk, where the spectacle made its debut in the south last Monday night before one of the most brilliant audiences ever assembled in a theatre in that city, capacity business prevailed throughout the week's engagement at the Colonial theatre, and hundreds were turned away. Following its engagement in Bluefield the spectacle will be presented for a week at the Academy of Music, Richmond, and then will come engagements in the principal cities of the south. There are no other places of Bluefield's size on the company's route.

Although it has been seen only in the large cities during the seven months of its life, "The Birth of a Nation" is known to many local people as the one offering of the theatre in this somewhat lean theatrical year that is worth seeing. It has been praised in letters and by word of mouth by hundreds who witnessed it in New York, Boston, Alantic City, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large centers during its phenomenal summer runs and the announcement that it will be presented at the Elks opera house in exactly the same manner that it has been shown in the larger cities is a strong commentary upon the enterprise of Manager S. H Jolliffe. The company to be seen here consists of twenty-five people eighteen of them musicians, who make up the nucleus of the symphony orchestra of thirty who will play the lengthy and unusually beautiful score of the spectacle.

The first half of the spectacle which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theatre April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the south's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of fifty. 1t

TRIUMPH ACHIEVED BY BIRTH OF A NATION

An Audience Typical of the Old Dominion Greets First Presentation at Norfolk.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 27. (Special.)—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala Theater, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," made its flurry into the south tonight at the Colonial Theatre here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Maye, with members of the council and board of aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard; Colonel Haynes, in command of Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and others prominent in the official and social life of eastern Virginia were in the audience.

Never in the history of a southern playhouse was such a triumph achieved by a dramatic presentment of a historic and romantic narrative as this production won. In the short space of three hours the impelling drama of the final welding of this nation in the bonds of unity was enacted in all its fascinating detail. Griffith being a southerner born, the son of Brigadier General John Griffith, of Kentucky, has caught the psychology of this historical period of our national evolution. He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement, the threatening news of a presidential election in 1860 that was to disrupt the ties that held us together. Impelling pictures of the heroism and sufferings of war as it actually is follow. Sherman's march to the sea is shown in its devastating totality, in a manner never reached by any other historian or dramatist. The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes, when those half-starved and worn-out heroes offered a desperate resistance behind the Crater's rim which has challenged the admiration of the world. Griffith does not tell you about it—he employs an art that makes you see it; and all the time the master producer plants his great lesson that war is a futile thing in which to settle questions of dispute between civilized human beings. So many details follow this startling beginning that it is beneficial to cover all in the briefest comment. You see the final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomotox; the memorable night in Ford's theatre when a fanatic's bullet laid Abraham Lincoln low and robbed the sorely-tried nation of its guiding force.

The furies break loose after this in height of the reconstruction period. They are truthfully and forcefully told for the first time. A horde of scalawags and unscrupulous politicians come out of the north while the south is setting about its task of rehabilitation. The chivalrous men of that day organize an invisible empire to right those outrages. The ignorant freedmen who had been cousined and beguiled by the notorious carpetbaggers are put right by their true friends. The south masters its task with skill and bravery. The villians and the politicians are driven out and a new era dawns for a part of the mightiest nation in the world's history in a way which brings this impelling, gripping narrative to a logical close. Words are not strong enough to convey the work behind this production, or to hint at the marvelous detail which Griffith infuses into his art. It is great because it is truth, linked to romance, and pictures the best traditions of as noble a people as ever held a place in the world's history.—(Adv.)

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) PRESS

ate .....

Dallas Dispatch Sept 28

"Birth of Nation" Greatest Film Ever Will Show at Opera House, Starting Oct. 4

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation." Lee and Grant at the surrender.

Dallas is going to see the biggest moving picture in the world when D. W. Griffiths' "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Opera House Oct. 4 for a two weeks' engagement.

The picture carries its own orchestra and "properties" for rendering complete scenic effects.

American history, the story of the nation, is reeled off on a white screen while the spectator sits and sees what he has read about and studied—or what he should have read and studied.

Intensely educational is this production, as well as thrilling and stirring. With the arrival of the first African slaves in this land, the problem they bring into the life of the nation is outlined, and followed thru to its culmination on the battle fields of 50 years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation" was acted on a stage five miles in width when the battle of Petersburg, Gen. Lee's last stand, is depicted. The assassination of Lincoln is another scene that brings tears, and Appomattox Court House, when Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee shake hands after signing articles of peace Eastern audiences are reported to have risen to their feet and yelled.

Tho the war is over, the picture is only begun. When Lincoln, "the South's best friend," is assassinated, the enemies of the South in congress, undeterred by the hand of the leader, make possible the reign of the carpetbagger and the black legislator.

Then comes the love story, which has been developing all along. This part of the drama is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." There are four lovers, and their loves soften the harshness of the actual facts of the history that is being made, and furnish the vein of deeply human interest that gives the production its wonderful personal appeal.

There are more than 5000 scenes in "The Birth of a Nation." It cost $350,000. Thousands of persons have paid $2 a seat to see it in New York and Chicago, and have risen to their feet and shouted and wept as they never would have done at a dramatic performance.

The theme of the play is the soul of America in the making. No American can read the history of the nation without a thrill; then how many more thrills are generated when the material of a week's study of history is condensed into a few hours and more vividly portrayed than by the work of the most gifted writer?

CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) RECOR

Date .....

SEP 28.

Laughlin, and Philip Lord, well cast as John Boland.

An innovation [illegible] the introduction of dancing cabaret girls and [illegible] in the third act. The play was exceptionally well staged.

"Birth of a Nation"—Forrest.

It is a new art that D. W. Griffith has developed in motion-picture presentation, and the height of his achievement is represenetd in the historic and romantic spectacular creation, "The Birth of a Nation," still crowding the Forrest Theatre at each performance. Important in the projection of the picture is the incidental music, which, synchronized to each incident, is wonderfully illustrative and at times positively thrilling. Battle scenes are in contrast with moments of tender passion, and the photographic effects are always of the kind to excite the warmest admiration. Night riders going at terrific speed, the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theatre and the surrender of Lee to Grant are among the historic events brought vividly before the beholder. The cast for the leading roles and for the minor parts as well is as perfect as it is possible to assemble.

Brooklyn, (N. Y.) Standard-Union

.....

NEW YORK (N.) TELEGRAPH

SEP 28 1915

AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE.

"The Birth of a Nation" Pursues Its Successful Way.

D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," began the eighth month of its run at the Liberty Theatre this week.

It is the only attraction in the Broadway district that has continued through from last season without a break in the run, and is one of the two attractions that held the boards last season throughout the Summer.

dramatic feature is James O'Grady and his competent company who present "The Old Toll Bridge," in which the star impersonates an old toll gate keeper with realistic elaboration. It is a fine bit of character study. Others on the bill are: Duff and Templeton, the De Michelle Brothers, the Felst Trio and De Lisle, the juggler.

Forrest—"Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith's unparalleled photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to crowd the Forrest, where it is projected twice daily. Nothing so stupendous as "The Birth of a Nation" has ever before been attempted on the screen. The great battle scenes employ eighteen thousand men to represent the contending armies, while there are three thousand horses used for the cavalry and artillery. From the Civil War the story proceeds through Reconstruction Days, and the assassination of Lincoln is another highly realistic episode. The scenes of war and political strife and the activities of the Ku Klux Klan are diversified by lighter scenes [illegible] the spectator.

Pittsburg Chronicle 4p 28

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

The historical drama "The Birth of a Nation" presented in motion pictures continues to draw crowds to the Nixon Theater. The popularity of this Griffith spectacle photoplay is not surprising because this picture so far surpasses the ordinary "movie" play that there can be no comparison. It seems strange to hear outbursts of applause during a "silent" drama but the scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are so stirring that one finds himself applauding almost unconsciously. As history the photoplay sets the north right concerning some phases of the activities in the south in carpet-bagging days after the war. Historically, also, the play reconstructs for the visual eye some of the scenes of 50 years ago. The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of Atlanta are a few of the historical scenes reproduced on the screen.

when the text did not [illegible] on the screen.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT BRIGHTON BEACH

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's $500,000 historical spectacle, began its last week's run at the Brighton Beach Music Hall last night. The final performance will be given Saturday night. Until the end of the week extra cars will be run on the Brighton Beach and Smith street lines to accommodate the patrons of the Music Hall. The picture, which presents all the stirring incidents of the Civil War and the Reconstruction Period in the South, has had a remakably successful run, more than 300,000 persons having seen it. Both performances yesterday were well attended.

SEPT. 28, 1915
PITTSBURGH (Pa.) DISPATCH

"The Birth of A Nation"

The last two weeks of the Pittsburg engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Nixon yesterday, and the theater was packed at each performance. Many people scouted the idea of "movies at $2 a seat" when this film was first announced, but anyone who runs may read the sign today. Doubtless the photoplay could run at financial profit all the season at Pittsburg's finest theater. But Nixon management has no notion of receding from the high-class theatrical game, and will close this film production in a fortnight, that regular dramatic attractions may be presented. As the Nixon owns the Pittsburg territory for the film, it will not be shown at any other theater within 100 miles. The cast which interprets the great play includes:

Col Ben Cameron.....Henry Walthall
Margaret Cameron, the elder sister.....Miriam Cooper
.....Mae Marsh
Flora, the pet sister.....Josephine Crowell
Mrs Cameron.....Spottiswoode Aiken
Dr Cameron.....
Hon Austin Stoneman, leader of the House.....Ralph Lewis
Elsie, his daughter.....Lillian Gish
Silas Lynch, mulatto Lieutenant Governor.....George Seigmann
.....Walter Long
Gus, a renegade Negro.....Joseph Henabery
Abraham Lincoln.....

As history the picture sets the North right concerning some phases of the activities in the South in carpet-bagging days after the war. Historically, also, the play reconstructs for the visual eye some of the scenes of 50 years ago. The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta move upon the screen as they never moved in print. And in so far as they surpass the written word, they justify the producer who declared after it had been assembled that he had tried to do a little something different.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
SEPT. 23, 1915.

FF

BOWLES
DAY IN 1878

BIRTH OF A NATION

IN WEST SPRINGFIELD

SELECTMEN GRANT PERMIT

Motion Picture Play That Springfield Would Not Allow Will Be Shown in Spite of Protests

"The Birth of a Nation," the sensational moving picture [illegible] of reconstruction days, will be seen for a month's run over in the West Springfield town hall some time in the near future. The selectmen of the town voted last night to lease the town hall for this purpose to George H. Miller of this city. The selectmen reserved the right, however, to have the film censored by a committee of their selection before any public performances are given.

Selectman A. F. Royce, in commenting on the difference in West Springfield's point of view in this matter as compared with the official action of Mayor Stacy of Springfield, who banned the production, censored or uncensored, said last night, "You see we don't have to worry about a big Negro vote on this side of the river."

William N. DeBerry, pastor of St John's church, who was a leader in the fight against the film in Springfield, gave out a carefully-considered statement late last night. "It seems, too bad," said he, "and unfair not only to the 2000 colored people here, but to Mayor Stacy as well, that the selectmen of West Springfield have decided to allow this picture to be shown, if they will give us a hearing we will make a strong protest against it. The film was banned in Springfield because it falsifies history, stirs up race prejudice and tends to create a bad feeling between the two races. Not only does it show the criminally-disposed Negro in the worst possible light, but it portrays the educated Negro with but one ambition, that of social equality and intermarriage. In Illinois the Grand Army made a strong protest against reproducing "The Birth of a Nation" there on the ground that it puts the Union soldiers in a bad light. Prominent men and women all over the country are opposed to the picture, among whom I might mention ex-President Charles Eliot of Harvard, Jane Addams of Hull house, Oswald Villard of the New York Evening Post, and Rabbi Stephen Wise of New York. Personally I did not come to a conclusion in regard to the matter until I had seen the photoplay twice in Boston, once in its original form and the other time after it had been amended. I thought the amended version was worse than the unabridged film. I am very sorry that the selectmen of the town across the river, which is really a part of Springfield, have taken this action. I don't believe they quite understand the merits of the whole issue."

The fight in Springfield against the "$500,000 spectacle" was led by the Negro civic league, and by the local branch of the national association for the advancement of the colored people. Besides Rev Dr DeBerry, other men prominent in the opposition to the film when the local fight was on were Alexander Hughes, Walter W. Samples, Dr W. J. Jones, Rev Dr G. R. Waller and Dr Bruce T. Bowens.

The arrangement the West Springfield officials have entered into with Mr Miller calls for a run of one month, with matinee and evening performances for the first week and evening performances for the remaining three. The West Springfield town hall seats several hundred persons and is provided with a fairly spacious gallery in addition. It is expected that spectators will go to view the film from this side of the river, Westfield, Chicopee and Holyoke.

Philadelphia, (Pa.) North American

ate .....

81915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION IS STILL SEEN AT THE FORREST

Historic Spectacle in Film Form Thrills and Delights Audience

Entering upon its fourth week at the Forrest Theater, D. W. Griffith's epoch-making photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," still is thrilling audiences with its love tale and historic spectacles.

From the first scene to the last the film maintains interest, but it reaches its strongest point in the second part, when the hordes of the Ku Klux Klan are gathering for the assault upon Piedmont. The audience knows that two rescues must be effected. But by clever manipulation the producer postpones both until the final moment.

Henry Walthall does an excellent bit of work as "The Little Colonel," but histrionic honors probably go to Mae Marsh, the "little sister." Certainly she has the most interesting role, and it is interesting mainly because Miss Marsh makes it so.

FFING FROM
Journal
Providence, R.I.
9-28-15

[illegible] and [illegible] complete the programme.

Providence Opera House

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's sensational photo play, opened the fifth week of its engagement at the Providence Opera House to capacity audiences yesterday afternoon and last evening. It was announced that this would positively be the final week of the engagement in this city, and every seat was taken and standing room was at a premium at both performances yesterday.

All of the features which were employed in previous weeks were in use yesterday's performances and will be during the week. The same great enthusiasm that has been shown by the audiences during previous performances was again very much in evidence, especially in scenes where the Ku Klux Klan riders appeared.

In the preparation of the pictures 5000 scenes, 18,000 characters and 2000 horses were called into service, and the cost of the photo play is said to be $500,000. Among the features are the burning of cities, battles reproduced, Ford's Theatre in Washington and the Lincoln assassination, rides of the Ku Klux Klan, and the night photography of battle scenes, with artillery duels in which real shells are used. An orchestra of 25 pieces and a corps of men to add realistic sound touches to the pictures are added features in the presentation of the play.

BOSTON HERALD
SEPT. 28, 1915.

FF

could not be continued here [illegible]

MAJESTIC THEATRE

"The Birth of A Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacle, which has already passed any record made in Boston for a long run, will be played on its 26 consecutive week with the performance of yesterday afternoon and last evening at the Majestic Theatre. It is an exciting and realistic review of important historical incidents in the growth of the United States. This is the completion of the first half year of the prolonged engagement; 312 performances will have been given at the end of this week.

Pittsburg Post Oct 1

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a record run at the Nixon, is the work of the film cast under the direction of David W. Griffith. Henry Walthall's "Little Confederate Colonel" is a sincere characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and the Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are pleasing [illegible]

Pittsburg Post Sept 28

NIXON.

To crowded houses "The Birth of a Nation," the great D. W. Griffith moving picture spectacle at the Nixon theater, opened its fourth week yesterday. With its tremendous battle scenes, its thrilling pictures of the rides of the Klu-Klux Clan, its pathetic incidents in the life of the beloved President, Abraham Lincoln, this play has reached the high water mark of theatrical productions. The musical accompaniment is a good half of its attractiveness, so well are the selections chosen and played.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MORN. UNION 856
SEPT. 29, 1915

FF

WEST SPRINGFIELD

WILL CALL FORMAL PROTEST MEETING

Ministers Stirred Over Selectmen's Sanction of "Birth of Nation."

STAND DISREGARDED

Attitude of Clergymen Declared Well Known to Town Officials.

Disregarding an informal vote of protest by the clergy of the town the Selectmen Monday evening granted permission for the production of the motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," in the Town Hall through the [illegible] month of October, with matinees the first week. The picture was denied exhibition privileges in Springfield and Chicopee and many other cities on account of its alleged tendencies to cause racial trouble. The manager of the local production of the picture is G. B. Miller, a former owner of the Bijou Theater in Springfield. The proposition was laid before the Selectmen in their meeting last Saturday but they deferred action until Monday night. It is said on good authority that the rental of the hall for this purpose for the month will net the town more than $1000.

There were three conflicting evening dates and the high school pupils use the hall in the afternoons for assemblies and for music classes. Mr. Miller was desirous to run matinees through the entire month, but the School Committee objected to this. It did, however, agree to give up the use of the hall for the first week, when it had planned its use for three afternoons from 2.15 to 4.15 o'clock. The proposition was brought before the committee at its meeting last evening for the first time and it had no opportunity to discuss the moral side or the benefits or objections to the picture. Members of the committee claim that the Selectmen are wholly responsible for the granting of the permit and they had nothing to do with it beyond giving up the hall for three afternoons to Mr. Miller.

All the ministers in town have informally protested against the action of the Selectmen and all have voiced their disapproval of having the picture shown here. A formal meeting will be held and a petition of protest will probably be signed and sent to the Selectmen. Rev. D. D. Gorton stated yesterday that the Selectmen knew the attitude of the ministers when they granted Mr. Miller's permit Monday evening. His chief objection is that, while West Springfield is entirely independent of Springfield, it ought not to allow any production or show put on here that is refused by the city, and certainly not when it is so unanimously refused by other cities. He will oppose the showing of the picture in every way possible.

Rev. W. L. Atherton objected also and said that while he had never seen the picture, West Springfield should not allow it to be shown in the face of the criticism of great men throughout the entire country. He will do all in his power to suppress the picture here. Rev. H. E. Leech adopted the same attitude, saying that any production that received so much criticism elsewhere and caused the feeling and trouble that "The Birth of a Nation" has raised, should be kept out of West Springfield. "It may bring in money to the town treasury," he said, "but it may bring in other things and questions that will be undesirable and will more than outweigh the money consideration." All the pastors have talked the matter over informally and are of the opinion that some definite action of protest will be forthcoming soon.

The hall is not licensed for theatrical productions or "movies" but Mr. Miller stated that he could procure a permit from the State police for the show. He will erect a fireproof booth for the housing of the projecting machine and for the films, which will eliminate practically all danger of fire from this source. The hall is not fireproof and is licensed for an audience of 500 on the main floor and 150 in the gallery.

Pittsburg Gazette Times Oct 3

"The Birth of a Nation," now in the fifth week of its successful run at the Nixon Theater, is a picture of American history, which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. That period of our history known as the reconstruction period is little written or known about to the average person. The true facts of the case are not given prominence, nor is the second uprising of the South in which the Ku Klux Klan restored peace made much note of. But in Griffith's great photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," this is given with true fidelity to details.

TTSBURG (Pa.) SUN
SEPT. 28, 1915

[illegible] and the slap-dash comedy.

THE NIXON.

With no signs of waning in its power to attract, "The Birth of a Nation" opened its fifth week in the Nixon Theater yesterday afternoon and last night before crowded houses. This vivid "movie" drama, depicting on a lavish scale the history of the Nation's great crisis, and the new Nation, as it emerged from that crisis, seemingly possesses all the elements needed in a gripping photoplay. If some of the scenes meant to portray the reconstruction period of the South seem somewhat overdrawn, there is no escaping the impressiveness of the spectacle or the thrill of the action.

The massiveness of the production, the uniform excellence of portrayal in scene and character, the clearness of the picture on the screen and the fitting musical accompaniment by orchestra combine to make "The Birth of a Nation" a moving picture classic. The battle scenes probably are as realistic as anything seen outside of an actual armed conflict, and in these days of battles give an idea of the carnage of warfare. The reproduction of historic scenes evidences painstaking care and thoroughness in every detail. The ride of the Ku-Klux Klan is a surpassing achievement in motion picture production. The photoplay by D. W. Griffith is scheduled for one more week after this.

TLAND (Vt.) NEWS
SEPT. 30, 1915

137

Mrs. F. C. Andrus, Mrs. Louis Sherwood, Miss Nina Briggs, Mrs. F. W. Estes, Mrs. W. H. Fillmore, Miss Mattie Adams and Miss Frances Atwill.

—The famous picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which is at The Playhouse for the entire week, grows in popularity and the attendance is on the increase. According to the management the scenes depicted are so interesting that many people have gone two or more times to see the rehearsal of civil war doings in which is woven a story of romance.

SEPT. 29. 1915
PITTSBURG (Pa.) LEADER

carrying a huge candle.

NIXON—"The Birth of a Nation," now in the fifth week of its successful run at the Nixon theater, is a picture of American history which will make an indelible impression on both children and adults. That period of our history known as the reconstruction period, is little known about to the average person. The facts of the case are not given prominence, nor is the second uprising of the south, in which the Ku Klux Klan figure, made much not of. But in Griffith's great photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," this is given with true fidelity to details. Running through the historical scenes are two romantic love episodes. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's world-famous stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots." At the close of the picture is shown the new era of the negro race, giving scenes at Hampton, Virginia, which evidence the progress made by that people since the period of 50 years ago. Patrons are urged to buy their tickets well in advance to avoid the crush in the lobby preceding each performance.

P. Ledger Sep 30

WHERE CENSORSHIP TENDS

The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.—Article I, section 7, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

THE lower courts have held that this does not apply to the right to exhibit pictures and that the "movie" censorship has been established without violation of any of the fundamental liberties of the people guaranteed to them by the constitution.

Their attempt to override the principles of freedom has produced the kind of complications which prudent persons foresaw from the beginning, and the State censorship has deprived the police authorities of the cities of their power to hold the proprietors of moving picture places responsible for the consequences of the exhibition of objectionable films. The late Mayor Gaynor, of New York, who vetoed an ordinance empowering the Board of Education to censor the "movies," was better advised than the General Assembly of this State. He had the wisdom to see that if it were constitutional to decide in advance what pictures might be shown it would also be constitutional to put into every newspaper office a censor to decide what might be printed and thereby to destroy that great bulwark of popular government, a free press.

The fear of the libel laws keeps the press within bounds and the fear of the laws against exhibiting indecent, libelous or immoral pictures will prevent the "movie" managers from offending public taste, especially if those who transgress are rigorously punished under the general laws covering such offenses. Moving pictures that are not indecent but simply untrue to the facts of history, carry their own correction whenever they are shown.

P. Ledger Sep 30

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The Spectacle Is Historically Untrue and Socially Deplorable

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—When the "Birth of a Nation" was first produced here I went to see it in order to judge of its character. I came away with regret and indignation. The play should have been prohibited. Historically it is untrue (especially as was shown in your columns recently by Girard in relation to the Ku Klux Klan), and politically and socially its influence is deplorable. The impression made on the thoughtless is that the Ku Klux were organized to defend the honor of the white women of the South. If they had required protection from the negroes it would have been during the war when the white men were away. There were fears of a "Servile War" repeatedly expressed at that time, but no such insurrection ever occurred, greatly to the credit of the slaves when they had the wrongs of a century to impel them to revenge.

The attempt in the play by a negro to compel a white girl to marry him is revolting and necessarily stirs up evil passions. Such isolated instances very possibly occurred, but if so they were one of the baneful results of the teachings of the wretched white "carpet-baggers" who invaded the South, so lamentably to its detriment.

For good or for evil, the negroes are here. We must live with them in amity or enmity. To stir up evil passions by resurrecting a period which should be buried in oblivion—a period of more shame for the whites than for the blacks who were their ignorant tools—is treachery to the best interests of the nation.

A heavy responsibility rests upon author and exhibitor for the recrudescence of antagonism between the two races for whose presence in this land the whites alone are responsible. It is our clear duty to render our negro fellow citizens intelligent, prosperous and contented. Their progress in education, intelligence and prosperity as business men, bankers, doctors, lawyers and in many other pursuits has been phenomenal. If God had given you, my white reader, a black skin, what would you think of such an effort to arouse contempt and aversion against you? W. W. KEEN.

Philadelphia, September 29, 1915.

Bulletin Sep 30

MAYOR SAYS HE CAN'T ACT

Holds Out No Relief to Colored Citizens Protesting Against "Movie"

Mayor Blankenburg heard the protests of colored citizens against the further production of the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," to-day. Colored men and women repesnting churches and organizations, headed by former Congressman George H. White, were present. Mayor Blankenburg said at the conclusion of the speeches that the injunction of the courts prevented the Department of Public Safety from taking any steps to stop the film production. Former Director Porter said that he had seen the production and subsequently written to the Board of Censors suggesting the elimination of certain scenes. This had not been done.

It was stated by some of the speakers that a fund of $300 had been raised to oppose the production of the film. Included in the speakers were R. R. Wright, editor of "Christian Recorder;" Dr. John P. Turner, a medical inspector for the Board of Education, and Dr. Algernon B. Jackson. Elwood Heacock, representing the Society for the Elevation of the Negro Race, produced a number of letters protesting against the film. The fact that Mayor Blankenburg said that his hands are tied greatly discouraged his callers.

continued on page 4, column 4

Dallas Daily Times Herald Sep 29

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The first $2 seat ever sold in Dallas for a photodrama will pass through the box-office window of the Dallas Opera House tomorrow morning, when the sale for D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction days opens. A peculiarity in this sale for "The Birth of a Nation," will be noted in the fact that the first $2 seat must necessarily be sold back of the seventh row. For an arrangement exactly opposite to that of the usual first-class theatrical attraction will prevail. The cheaper seats on the lower floor will be the first seven rows, while higher prices will prevail for those to the rear. This is due to the double fact that a better view of the spectacle can be had at some little distance from the stage and that the effect of a large orchestra, such as "The Birth of a Nation" carries, is better, as all music lovers know, at a distance than close up.

But even the very front row of seats will not be undesirable. For the screen upon which the 5,000 rapidly changing scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are to be flashed will be set some eighteen or twenty feet back from the curtain line, giving images absolutely without distortion to spectators who are close up to the screen as it is possible to get. The projections are made from two powerful machines, especially devised for the Griffith spectacle, set in a booth as elaborately equipped as an electrical power house, and operated by men who are not only electricians but optical experts as well. Mr. Griffith did not stop with inventing new methods of photography, which will be seen to startling advantage in the night battle scenes, but he carried his invention into the realm of projecting machine, and the method of flashing his pictures onto the screen is a vital part of the "new art," so highly lauded by his critics.

Ev Journal Dallas Sep 29

Dallas Theaters

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

When patrons of the Dallas Opera House go to the box office window tomorrow morning to buy seats for "The Birth of a Nation" they will note the fact, never before observed in the case of a first-class production, that the dollar seats on the first floor are the front seats, whereas the $2 prices begin to prevail with the eighth row. This is due to the double fact that the best view of the screen drama of Civil War and Reconstruction days is to be had at a greater distance than the first few rows of seats permit, and that the full effect of the remarkable orchestration of the Griffith spectacle can be had from a little distance rather than from close proximity with the big symphony orchestra.

After all, the arrangement is not so "topsy-turvy" as it may seem at first glance. Every experienced theatergoer knows that the first few rows of seats for any production of the spoken drama are not the choicest, and the habitual attendants of the playhouses who reserve their seats week after week usually choose the neighborhood of the seventh row. Closer than that the "make-up" of the players is too much in evidence and much of the illusion is destroyed. The concertgoers, too, usually try to get seats even farther back, since the best effect of the orchestra in its unification is there best noted, and the peculiarities of the individual instruments lost.

In the case of "The Birth of a Nation" the front rows are scarcely less desirable than they are at the ordinary theatrical entertainment. The screen upon which the 5,000 scenes of the photo-drama are flashed is set some eighteen or twenty feet back of the curtain line, giving even spectators in the front row a view without the least distortion.

Sixth Week "Birth of a Nation."

Five professors of American history in as many Western universities were employed steadily for several months by D. W. Griffith in gathering data, odd and accurate, for "The Birth of a Nation," now in its fifth week at the Olympic Theater. In addition to these five men, Griffith commissioned a large number of other history students in various parts of America, and especially in Washington, to look up everything they could find on some particular point, in official documents and old pamphlets. It is due to the work that this little army of painstaking searchers accomplished, that "The Birth of a Nation" is so accurate historically. But Griffith used history as the background of romance, and his historical accuracy never becomes dull and tedious. He has made his story, based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," so consistent that it fits the facts of history exactly.

Oct

FINE ACTING FEATURES "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a record-breaking run at the Nixon, is the unusual quality of the actors under the direction of David W. Griffith. Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman, of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all pleasing feminine portrayals. In addition there is a large cast of principals who assume the various historical roles of Civil War times and the Reconstruction period.

Dallas Times Herald Sep 30

"Birth of Nation" Shows Klu Klux At Its Height

"The Birth of a Nation," masterwork of D. W. Griffith, comes to the Dallas Opera House next Monday night.

Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of new world history appear upon the program. President Lincoln, General Lee and General Grant live again. The entire action of "The Birth of a Nation" ranges over three centuries. Thousands of horsemen, clad in the ghostly costume of the Ku Klux Klan, dash away into the night on the secret work of the mighty "invisible empire."

Ev Journal Sep 30

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel" Ben Cameron, with the Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Dallas Opera House next Monday night. Never, in the most terrific scenes of the spectacle, is the romance, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," quite forgotten. In the battle of Petersburg, for example, the "little Colonel" leads a thrilling charge against the command of his old school friend, Captain Stoneman. One of the brothers of Margaret Cameron falls a victim of war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. Elsie Stoneman and her brother, Phil, are present in Ford's Theater the night of the assassination of Lincoln. It is to save the honor of his sweetheart, Elsie Stoneman, that the "little Colonel" leads the Ku-Klux Klansmen in the most sensational ride ever staged.

The spectacle is in two parts. The first half exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy in Ford's Theater live before the eyes of the spectator as vividly as did the actual events in the era depicted. In the second half is shown the second uprising of the South, this time against the carpetbag regime. Horrors worse than those of war are enacted, and there springs up the "invisible empire" with its vast hordes of 400,000 men. The Aryan race is restored to its rights after a secret and terrible combat. It is in this half of the spectacle that Griffith tells for the first time accurately and vividly the true story of the Ku-Klux Klan.

Pittsburg Press Oct

UNUSUALLY FINE ACTING IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation" now in the midst of a record breaking run at the Nixon, is the unusual quality of the acting under the direction of David W. Griffith.

MIRIAM COOPER,
At the Nixon, Oct. 4.

Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, "the little Confederate colonel," is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and the Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all delightful feminine portrayals.

Portsmouth Star Oct

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

The final performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Colonial tonight.

There has been not the slightest cessation of interest displayed in this marvelous spectacle since Monday night, when it began a week's run.

Pittsburg Chronicle Tele. Oct 7,

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon the sixth and last week of its successful run at the Nixon Theater next Monday. In preparing the musical setting of this great production, Mr. Griffith, as he worked, a different southern air suggested itself for each character in the pictorial story. Joseph Carl Breil, a Pittsburgher, jotted down the hummed tunes. Mr. Briel next essayed the immense labor of scoring the 5,000 scenes of the play, each with its appropriate music. The synchronization of the score to the scenes was indeed a task of magnitude. There is an orchestra of 30 and a large force of expert technicians.

St Louis Star Oct 7

LAST WEEK OF PHOTO-PLAY AT THE OLYMPIC.

D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon the last week of its phenomenal run at the Olympic Theater tomorrow evening. During the past five weeks 81,000 thousand people have seen the play, and it is estimated by the management that by next Saturday the attendance will have passed the 100,000-mark—by far eclipsing all records for any attraction that has ever played in St. Louis. The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted in "The Birth of a Nation" are of surpassing power and realism. There are also pictures of impressive dignity and beauty, done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the President of the proclamation for volunteers, which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant, and the assassination of the President in Ford's Theater. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters.

Daily Times Herald Oct

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

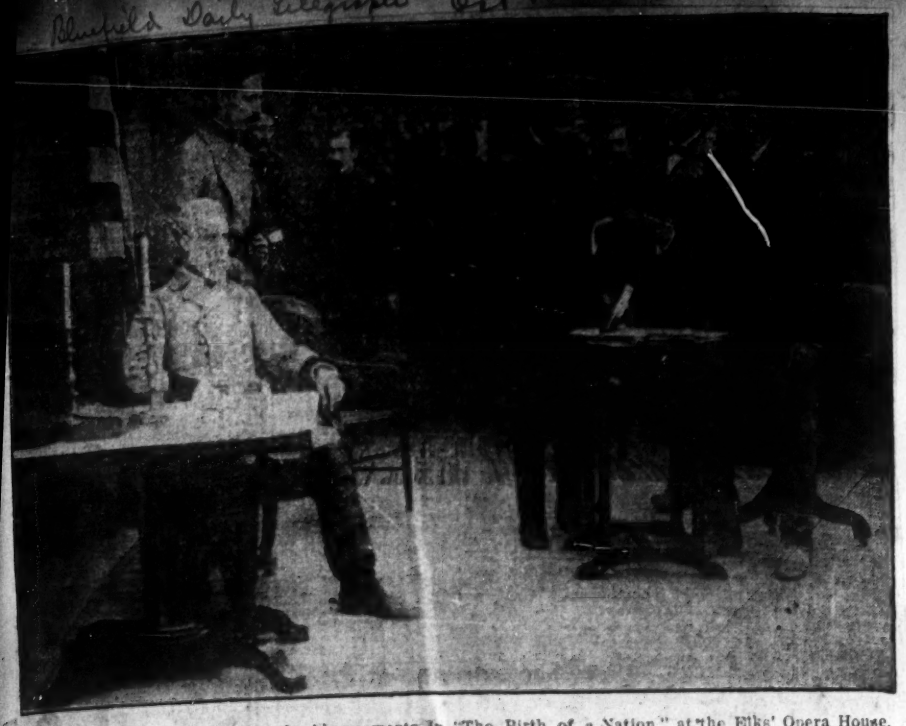
D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its first Texas engagement at the Dallas Opera House next Monday night, believes he has solved the problem of making history attractive to theatergoers. The drama actually depicting history has been almost invariably a failure from the days of Shakespeare to the present, with now and then a notable exception, like Shakespeare's own "Julius Caesar" and the "Richelieu" of Bulwer. But even Shakespeare and Bulwer did not score the notable triumphs in drama that Sir Walter Scott and Alexander Dumas scored in fiction.

Mr. Griffith believes that dramatists have failed through lack of vividness. They have either been conscientious to the point of dullness in depicting historical incidents, or have been brilliant to the point of sacrificing accuracy.

Now, Mr. Griffith does not class himself with Shakespeare or Bulwer, but he believes himself more fortunate than the early dramatists in having at his disposal an art of which they knew nothing. He can take a historical incident, stage it in a vast manner and add to it a touch of pictorial art, idealizing it without destroying its realism. This he is credited with having done in "The Birth of a Nation." The battle of Petersburg, for example, is staged so realistically, it is declared, that veterans of that famous fight have no difficulty in recognizing their old comrades in familiar attitudes — not their faces, of course, but their general formations and actions. Yet Mr. Griffith has thrown a glamor over the battlefield, the critics say, that lifts it out of the plane of realism into that of art.

The striking success of the Griffith spectacle is taken as an argument in favor of his belief that history can be wedded successfully to the theater.

Bluefield Daily Telegraph Oct



Lee and Grant at Appomattox—one of the big moments in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Elks' Opera House, October 7, 8 and 9.

Evening Oct 7

139

Lillian Gish, in "The Birth of a Nation."

LIBERTY—D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon its eighth month this week. On Saturday night the 600th performance in greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances. That record will be passed on Wednesday of next week. The big Griffith production has passed through the latter part of one season and into the beginning of the second season in town.

Dallas Dispatch Oct 1

As They Marched Away to War

Confederate volunteers elaving for the front.

When people rise in their seats and applaud at the shadow of an event 50 years old, thrown on a screen, that is a remarkable occurrence.

And when that historic event is a chapter from the most thrilling story of the American nation, the vision on the screen is educational, as well as exciting.

Such a vision, and many of them, are blended in that greatest of all films, "The Birth of a Nation," which has enjoyed as long runs at playhouses in New York and Chicago as most dramatic performances.

"The Birth of a Nation" combines the great periods of civil war and reconstruction in the South. It shows the armies of the nation marching away to the blare of music, and the tossing of flowers and the waving of banners. It pictures the smoke and shock of battle and the gloom of defeat and surrender. Then comes the rallying of the spirit of the vanquished and their march toward a greater victory—the retaking of their land for their own again.

The story was told by D. W. Griffiths and his actors in eight months and it takes three hours for the pictures to flash the history of 10 years on the screen. It cost $500,000 to produce and is celebrated all over the United States as the ne plus ultra of all movie art.

Womens Wear Oct

Liberty.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" begins the eighth month of its run next week. It is the only attraction in the Broadway district that has continued through from last season without a break in the run. It will remain indefinitely at the Liberty and will not be seen at any theatre in the metropolitan district, except the Liberty.

Evening Mail Oct

Birth of a Nation.

"The Birth of a Nation" enters upon its eighth month at the Liberty Theatre this week. On Saturday night the 600th performance in Greater New York took place, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances.

Mr. Griffith and his associates state positively that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be seen at any other theatre in New York until the termination of the run at the Liberty.

Globe Com. Oct

LIBERTY. — D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon its eighth month at the Liberty Theatre next week. On Saturday night the 600th performance in Greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart."

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWING IN ST. LOUIS.

The "Birth of a Nation," which is in its third week at the Oympic, seems to be repeating the success thaf this remarkable fine feature has met with everywhere it has been exhibited. There was strong opposition to the film presentation, and the management secured a temporary injunction to keep the police from interfering with the exhibtion. The return made by the City Counselor's office filed September 11th, claims that part of the pic-heaters Turning to Films—Houses That Coming.

ndent of Moving Picture World.

tures ridicules the negro race, thereby causing prejudice. The case will be heard before Judge Hennings soon.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

OCT 2 1915

This is an opening which really means more to the trade all over the country than has any other metropolitan presentation up to this time.

When "Cabiria" was presented, when Birth of a Nation" was presented, when highly exploited pictures have been presented in New York they have always been pictures which the exhibitor in the smaller cities and towns would not have a chance to show because the exploiters wanted, and with perfect good right, to exhaust the possibilities of the big cities before sending them out in the woods.

But the Triangle plans, as announced, make it possible for the one or two exhibitors in each city or town who are real showmen to get Triangle pictures and get them exclusively for release at the same time as the largest cities. So it much behooves the bold exhi[illegible]r to keep an eye on how Triangle films go at their first presentation.

Reme[illegible]nce, Griffith and Sennett are the pro[illegible]ers.

York
In the Lib

CLIPPING FROM 1915
OCT 2
MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty and "The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Vitagraph theater, are both playing to capacity at every performance.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)

W. H. Clune, of Los Angeles, one of the most prominent exhibitors on the Coast, stopped over in the city on his way to New York City. Mr. Clune was the first exhibitor on the Pacific Coast to present "The Birth of a Nation," and he took advantage of his brief stay in Chicago to see the big Griffith spectacle at the Colonial.

St. Louis Star & Ex

Last Week of the "Birth of a Nation."

After six weeks of business of such magnitude as St. Louis has never before known, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will terminate its engagement at the Olympic Theater next Saturday night. This epoch-making production has been seen by over 80,000 people during the past five weeks—a record that no attraction has ever before even approximated in this city. The magnitude of Mr. Griffith's achievement in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling. By comparison with the older forms of theatrical entertainment, the new art measures to the mountain like a molehill.

CLIPPING FROM 10-2-15
Date
My Review

"Birth of Nation" Stays at Liberty

"The Birth of a Nation" remains at the Liberty Theater for an indefinite period, arrangements having been completed to utilize that theater for D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle for the remainder of the theatrical season. The big production is approaching the eighth month of its phenomenal run in New York City and is also nearing the record of 600 performances in New York. With its great battle scenes, its mixture of history with drama and romance and the thrilling effects of the Reconstruction period in the South, there is a timeliness about the work which is additionally potent in these days of suspense and martial intensity.

SEPT. 29. 1915
DALLAS (Tex.) NEWS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Is Shown for First Time in South and Achieves Decided Success at Norfolk, Va.

Special to The News.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 28.—D. W. Griffith's spectacular show, "The Birth of a Nation," made its entry into the South last night at the Colonial Theater here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Mayo, with members of the Council and Board of Aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard; Colonel Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others prominent in the official and social life of Eastern Virginia were in the audience.

The play is a dramatic presentation of a historic and romantic narrative and achieved a triumph here. In the space of three hours the drama shows the welding of this Nation in bonds of unity. Old days when happiness reigned in the land of cotton are pictured and then the development of the abolition movement is presented. This is followed by the news of the presidential election in 1860 that was to result in war. Heroism and sufferings of war are shown and Sherman's march to the sea is given in its devastating totality. The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes.

The final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theater, and the furies of Reconstruction days are show in full detail. Then comes the organization of invisible empire, the Ku Klux Klan, which finally rights the outrages and the villains and politicians are driven out. The dawn of a new era brings the show to a close.

The show is great because it is truth linked to romance and pictures the best traditions of a noble people. A lesson taught is that war is a futile thing in which to settle questions of dispute between civilized human beings.

Abraham Lincoln signing the call for volunteers, one of the 5,000 scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Elks' Opera House, three days, beginning Thursday night, October 7.

Dallas M. News Oct 8

Queen.

Henry B. Walthall, star of "The Birth of a Nation," is to be seen at the Queen today in "The Circular Path," a new Essanay drama in three acts.

The Rev. Darwin Kirby falls deeply in love with Evelyn Ross, who in order to support her invalid mother, has become the mistress of her employer. Evelyn returns Kirby's love, but refuses to marry him unless he gives up the pulpit. Finally Kirby's love for Evelyn conquers his devotion to his work, and they are married. Unsuccessful as a business man, he is unable to provide the luxuries to which his wife has been accustomed. She becomes discontented with her monotonous existence as the wife of a poor man and is not able to resist the temptation with which Henry Lorimer, her former employer, besets her path. Returning from a long Western trip, Kirby finds that she has gone back to Lorrimer. In a fit of jealous rage he shoots the man, fatally, he thinks, and hides in the slums, where he soon drops to the lowest depths of degradation. One day he hears that Lorrimer has recovered from the wound. Summoning all his will power he determines to make a man of hims water effects with irridescent fountains, etc., right in front of the curtain.

ADELPHIA (PA.) PUB. LEDGER
OCT 8 1915

The Chestnut Street's opening comes Tuesday evening. It is no press agent "guff" to say that this is the most important event in the history of American photoplays. The new Triangle Corporation has enlisted the services of the three most distinguished American producers for the screen: D. W. Griffith, whose spectacular "Birth of a Nation" speaks loudly for itself; Thomas H. Ince, long the standby of the New York Motion Picture Company, and producer of "The Battle of Gettysburg," and Mack Sennett, who made the Keystone Comedies and Charlie Chaplin famous.

The entertainment which we shall see Tuesday night and which is also on view in the Triangle theatres of Chicago and New York, will use the talents of these three distinguished producers in a single bill of feature films. No photoplay theatre has hitherto consistently shown so many reels on a regular program, and needless to say, no photoplay theatre has charged $2 for admission.

For the opening bill, the Chestnut Street Opera House will show a four-reel comedy by Sennett, featuring Raymond Hitchcock. It is called "My Valet," and explains the difficulties of a young man in society who attempts to change places with his valet in order to avoid the attentions of a young lady. When he discovers how charming she can be in the person of Mabel Normand, needless to say he changes back. Mr. Sennett plays the valet himself. The second feature of the bill will be a five-reel drama, "The Iron Strain," in which Thomas H. Ince will place Dustin Farnum in an Alaskan environment. The story is more or less a serious version of the old motif of the "Taming of the Shrew." The program will close with a photoplay by D. W. Griffith, "The Lamb." In this—which was the sensation of the opening bill in New York—Douglas Fairbanks plays an adventurous youth who embroils himself in some Mexican difficulties.

PHILADELPHIA (PA.) PUB. LEDGER
OCT 2

Interviewing the Uninterviewable

One advantage that the motion-picture actress has is that she is not pestered for interviews in every city in which her picture is seen.

The movie actress can give out what she pleases—or what her press agent pleases—at the studio once and for all, and is not bothered on the road, because she does not go on the road. Instead she can luxuriate in the "glorious climate of California" with an entourage that a princess might envy. At least that is the popular impression.

The scribe was thinking of all this the other afternoon at the Forrest Theatre, while witnessing for the 20th time that wonder of the photoplay stage, or screen "The Birth of a Nation." It was a warm afternoon, although not uncomfortably so in the theatre, and the semi-darkness and low murmur of music had a soporific effect. The head of Miriam Cooper, that is the picture of her face, was thrown upon the screen, and as she rolled her soulful eyes in the direction of the scribe it appeared to him that she was about to say something and wanted a little encouragement.

"What is it?" he asked—or thought he asked—"are you tired of Philadelphia?"

"I have never been in Philadelphia in my life," was the remarkable statement of the film star.

"What—oh, of course, not; but what do you think would be your opinion of our beautiful city if you had been here?"

"Silly!"

"What, Philadelphia silly?"

"No, you."

What further might have been said will never be known, for at this point a vision in furbelows and in crinoline gently shook the sleeper and whispered: "You are disturbing those about you, sir."

The scribe had been sleeping out loud. But he had made a record. He is the only person, as far as is known, who has been able to sleep during any part of "The Birth of a Nation."

CLIPPING FROM Herald
Date Spartanburg S.C.
9-28-15

"BIRTH OF NATION" STARTS TOUR SOUTH

(Special to The Herald.)

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 27.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala theater, London, England, before King George and members of the Royal household, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," made its entry into the south tonight at the Colonial theater here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Mayo, with members of the council and board of aldermen, Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard, Colonel Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe, representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and others prominent in the official and social life of Eastern Virginia were in the audience.

Never in the history of a southern playhouse was such a triumph achieved by a dramatic presentment of a historic and romantic narrative as his production won. In the short space of three hours, the impelling drama of the final welding of this nation in bonds of unity wa senacted in all its fascinating details.

Griffith being a southerner born, the son of Brigadier General John Griffith, of Kentucky, has caught the psycychology of this historic period of our national evolution. He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement, the threatening news of a presidential election in 1860 that was to disrupt the ties that held us together.

So many details follow this startling beginning that it is difficult to cover all in the briefest comment. You see the final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomatox, the memorable night in Ford's theater when a fanatic's bullet laid Abraham Lincoln low and robbed he sorely tried nation of its guiding force. The furies break loose after this in eight years of the reconstruction period. They are truthfully and forcefully told for the first time. A horde of scalawags and unscrupulours politicians come out of the north while the south is setting about its task of rehabilitation. The chivalrous men of that day organize an invisible empire to right the outrages. The ignorant freedmen who had been cousined and beguiled by the notorious carpet baggers are put right by their true griends. The south masters its task with skill and bravery, the villains and the politicians are driven out and a new era dawns for a powerful part of the mightiest nation in the world's history in a way which brings this impelling, gripping narrative to a logical close.

this Monday
's run.

Pittsburgh Telegraph Oct 3

141

...assassination of Abraham Lincoln, showing the interior of Ford's Theatre, Washington, and John Wilkes Booth leaping from the box—one of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at Elks' Opera House, three days, beginning next Thursday night.

Pittsburg Gazette Times Oct 3

If anyone had said two years ago that a motion picture could come to Pittsburgh and stay seven weeks in one theater, and clean up an average of $12,000 a week at $2 top prices, he would have been put in a strait-jacket and sent to a madhouse.

We talk about the theater being no longer an item in public consideration, when there is always proof forthcoming that when the theater does a big thing and gives the people something unusual, artistic and worth the money, there is sure to be found a liberal support.

It is pretty certain that "A Birth of a Nation" is not drawing much of its large business from regular patrons of the Nixon Theater. The question is: Where do they come from, and if they can be drawn to see this spectacle, why can they not be induced to attend other kinds of amusement, not intermittently, but regularly?

Isn't it true that in a vast majority of instances the theater in its ordinary legitimate operations caters only to its established trade, people who go to theaters from habit, while the vast crowds of casual theatergoers are left unprovided for and even discouraged in their possible desire to be amused?

✦ ✦ ✦

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth week of its successful run at the Nixon Theater tomorrow afternoon, is the most impressive spectacle ever staged. At the Nixon its run promises to eclipse all records of either dramatic or photo-play productions.

The stirring events of the Civil War and the period of Reconstruction are shown in striking detail. The fighting in the trenches at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the saving of the South by the clans are faithfully reproduced. Months of research by historians preceded the actual work of production. Engineers from West Point and veterans of the North and South assisted in laying out the great battlegrounds. The artillery and other ordnance were those of the exact period. The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies took over two months. Director Griffith used 20 batteries of cameras which he directed from a central tower by means of a system of underground telephone connections.

As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close it is well to see this great production at the earliest possible time, as there will be no other engagement played either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburgh. The performances start at 2:15 and 8:15.

✦ ✦ ✦

Pittsburg Post Oct 3

Pennsylvania 'Stoneman' In 'Birth of a Nation'

Story of the Heroic Figure Woven in the Romance of the Wondrous Historic Photo Spectacle Entering Sixth Week of the Run at the Nixon.

THE story of "The Birth of a Nation," the massive D. W. Griffith photo spectacle at the Nixon, is based on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," but it has been much amplified.

The Stoneman boys of Pennsylvania had been guests at Piedmont, S. C., of their boarding-school chums, the Cameron boys. Phil Cameron had fallen deeply in love with Margaret Cameron. Ben Cameron had never seen Elsie Stoneman, yet the daguerreotype of her that he had pilfered from Phil seemed to him the only girl in the world.

When war cast its shadow over the land Phil and Tod Stoneman went to fight for the Stars and Stripes; Ben Cameron and his younger brothers, for the Stars and Bars. Piedmont gayly entered the conflict, but soon was raided by a body of white and negro guerrillas. Sherman marched to the sea and two of the Cameron boys were killed in battle, one of them fact to face with his dying chum, Ted.

Ben Cameron, the "little colonel" as he was affectionately called by his men, was in the thick of the fighting about Petersburg. Finally came the orders for the last charge.

They charged the enemy's trenches. His men were mowed down on every side. The "little colonel" reached the enemy's trenches and rammed his flag in the mouth of a smoking cannon. As he fell wounded he was rescued by his old friend, Phil, who was then a captain in the Union army. In a Washington hospital he was nursed back to life by Elsie Stoneman.

It was love at first sight. She and Ben's mother went to Lincoln, "the great heart," and procured his pardon when he was condemned.

Austin Stoneman, leader of Congress and father of Elsie, thought that Lincoln's policy was too pacific towards the South, but Lincoln was firm. The war was over and then followed a terrible tragedy, the assassination of the President. Austin Stoneman, who was then supreme in congressional councils, went South to carry out his plans to establish the complete political and social equality of the negroes with the whites. His chief aid was Silas Lynch, a mulatto.

Elsie and Phil accompanied their father to Piedmont. Elsie accepted the gallant little Confederate colonel, but Margaret would not yet look kindly on Phil, who had fought on the other side.

The reign of the carpet-baggers and scalawags began. The "Union League" won the state election and Silas Lynch became lieutenant governor.

The Legislature, controlled by negroes, looted the state. Whites were elbowed off the streets, kept from the polls and despoiled of their property.

Ben Cameron then organized the "invisible empire" of the Ku Klux Klan. Stoneman was mad with rage. Lynch's spies found that Cameron was a Ku Klux, and Stoneman made Elsie disavow her lover.

Little Flora Cameron, the joy and pride of the Cameron household, was followed by a renegade negro, and in her terror she jumped over a cliff to her death. The pursuer was caught and condemned to death. Dr. Cameron was arrested on the charge of harboring the clansmen. He was rescued by Phil Stoneman and the faithful blacks, and the doctor, his wife, Margaret, Phil and the devoted negro servants fled to the country, where they found refuge in a log cabin with two Union veterans.

Meanwhile Elsie Stoneman had gone to Lynch's house to appeal to him to save her brother and the Camerons. Instead of doing this Lynch seized the opportunity to declare his "love" for his patron's daughter, told her he would make her the queen of his empire, and sent for a negro chaplain to perform a forced marriage. Her father arrived at this crisis, but was helpless.

Word had reached Ben Cameron and he rushed to her rescue with the Ku Klux Klan. Elsie was saved and then word came of the besieged ones in the cabin. Quickly the Klan rode to the rescue.

The little party within the besieged walls was almost at the last gasp. Quick was the rush of the Ku Klux Klan and the raiders were routed.

To Ben and Elsie, to Phil and Margaret, the sequel was a beautiful double honeymoon by the sea. To the American people, the outcome of four years of fratricidal strife, the nightmare of reconstruction and the establishment of the South in its rightful place, was the birth of a nation.

N.Y. Press Oct 3

Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" enters upon its eighth month in the Liberty Theatre this week. Last night the 600th showing in Greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances. The production has passed through the latter part of one season and into the beginning of the second season, and arrangements have been completed for its continuance in the Liberty Theatre indefinitely, which is the proven test of its sustained popularity. It is positively stated that it will not be seen in any other theatre in New York until the termination of the run in the Liberty.

Pittsburg Press Oct 3

NIXON.

"The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth and last week of its successful run at the Nixon theater tomorrow afternoon, is a bright beacon-light which illumines the most important period of American history. It is a brilliant faithful and vivid historical romance which tells the story of the war between the states and of the reconstruction era of the south. This mighty masterpiece is now filling the following theaters to their utmost capacity: the Liberty and the Brighton in New York; the Tremont in Boston; the Illinois in Chicago and the Davidson in Milwaukee, besides theaters in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other large cities of the west. It has pulled high-class amusements out of the slough of despond. The two-dollar picture has come to stay and "The Birth of a Nation" will always be remembered as the first to merit and win success in the best theaters at a scale of prices the same as had been obtained by the most costly dramatic productions. As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close it is well to see this great production at the earliest possible time as there will be no other engagement played either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburg.

Pittsburg Leader Oct 3

NIXON—"The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth and last week of its successful run at the Nixon theater tomorrow afternoon, is a bright beacon light which illuminates the most important period of American history. It is as fascinating as a Dumas romance; as impressive as Dante's Divine comedy; as comprehensive as Balzac's human comedy, and as soul-searching as the tragedies of Shakespeare. It is a brilliant, faithful and vivid historical romance which tells the story of the war between the states and of the reconstruction era of the south.

This amazing spectacle shown in 12,000 feet of superb motion pictures was made under the direction of David W. Griffith. Eight months were consumed in the making; 18,000 people and 3,000 horses were used in the 5,000 scenes and $500,000 were expended. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," the historical episodes are interspersed with a dual love story of absorbing interest.

This mighty masterpiece is now filling the following theaters to their utmost capacity: The Liberty and the Brighton in New York; the Tremont in Boston; the Illinois in Chicago and the Davidson in Milwaukee, besides theaters in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other large cities of the west. It has pulled high-class amusements out of the "Slough of Despond." The two-dollar picture has come to stay, and "The Birth of a Nation" will always be remembered as the first to merit and win success in the best theaters at a scale of prices the same as had been obtained by the most costly dramatic productions.

As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close, it is well to see this great production at the earliest possible time, as there will be no other engagement of it played either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburg. The performances start at 2:15 and 8:15 P. M.

VISALIA (Cal.) DELTA 1307
SEPT. 24, 1915

FF

"THE CLANSMAN" SAID TO BE THE GREATEST MOTION PICTURE EVER MADE BY ANY COMPANY; COMING SOON

"THE KU KLUX KLAN," ONE OF THE STRONG FEATURES IN "THE CLANSMAN"

"The Clansman" is the greatest motion picture ever produced. Adapted from the novel of Thos. Dixon, Jr., and directed by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer, it presents the very acme of art and realism in motion pictures. Twelve reels are required to show this wonderful production.

"The Clansman" deals with the Civil War period. It shows the causes that led up to this conflict and carries the spectator through the war. It treats impartially the causes for which each side was struggling and depicts the political conditions in both the north and the south during this struggle.

"The Clansman' are shown the most spectacular battle scenes ever staged. Field telephones, couriers, flag signals, signals by mirrors, and even a captive balloon were all utilized in staging "The Clansman." No general on the European battlefield has made better use of the modern appurtenances of war than did Mr. D. W. Griffith, the leading figure in the motion picture world in staging the battle scenes for "The Clansman." There were not used in the picture as part of the army equipment, but were simply utilized by Mr. Griffith in staging the scenes. He used 1915 methods to better execute the methods of 1861-65. The battlefields stretched for a length of two miles. At one end of the field, a tower 100 feet in height was erected. Mr. Griffith directed the movements of the army from this place of vantage. At the rear of both armies telephone wires were strung. The opposing forces represented the northern and southern troops during the civil war.

At a distance of every fifty yards a telephone operator was stationed with a receiver strapped to her ear. The telephone wires were connected with the tower. At Mr. Griffith's elbow was an ex-army officer. When the director desired a certain part of the infantry to advance or fall back, the cavalry to charge, or the artillery to shell a certain position, he "gave his order' to the officer at his side. This officer transmitted it by telephone to the operator located at the point where Mr. Griffith desired the movement to take place. The operator then gave the command to the officer in charge of the troops at that point, with the result that the military manoeuvers were executed with only an instant's delay after leaving the mouth of Mr. Griffith. In staging the battle scenes Mr. Griffith had three West Point army officers, a regiment of the national guard and a dozen or more G. A. R. veterans to assist him.

One of the battle scenes shows the siege before Petersburg. These G. A. R. veterans took part in the original battle and they assisted Mr. Griffith in laying out the trenches. The soldiers in the battle scenes were thoroughly instructed in military tactics before taking part in the battles. The battle scenes, which take but a few moments to run through the camera, cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, and are the costliest pieces of film ever taken in the history of motion pictures.

The history of the south during the reconstruction period, immediately following the war, showing the organization of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and its motives, presents one of the most interesting periods in the history of the United States. This is realistically shown in "The Clansman." Three thousand of these famous white hooded riders are shown in their raids on the negroes.

The cost of producing "The Clansman" was $500,000 and seven months were required in staging it. Twenty-five thousand soldiers are shown in action. Hand to hand infantry conflicts, cavalry charges and artillery duels are graphically depicted. Artillery duels in which explosive shells are used for the first time in motion pictures are shown in "The Clansman." These shells are hurled from the same huge mortars that were used by the Federal army during the Civil War. These cannons were borrowed from the U. S. government for the occasion.

The question of securing artillery became quite a problem. It would have been a comparatively easy matter to secure modern cannon, but to get the artillery used during the Civil War, was quite a task. Modern cannon in a Civil War battle would have been a farce. Mr. Griffith insisted that Civil War cannon be obtained and after considerable red tape these were finally borrowed from the U. S. government. The explosive blank shells used in the mortars were constructed especially for these big guns by an expert fire works' manufacturer. Each of these shells cost $50 and more than 500 of them are used in the battle scenes.

A well known college professor worked six months digging up historical data for "The Clansman." Historically and technically "The Clansman" is perfect.

The assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth, is one of the principal features of this attraction. R. A. Walsh, who plays the part of Booth, was compelled to rehearse the assassination scene 26 times before it was done to the satisfaction of Mr. Griffith. Walsh made the jump from the President's box in the theatre to the stage below a distance of 13 feet, alighting on his hands and knees, each time that he rehearsed the scene.

The interior of the historical Ford's Theatre of Washington, where the assassination took place, is the most gorgeous theatre scene ever staged. This scene is an exact replica of Ford's Theatre, with the same characters on the theatre stage as were there the night that the assassination took place. The old fashioned gas footlights used during this period are in evidence. Seat sale opens Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

It is shown in Visalia one week, beginning October 4.

CLIPPING FROM San Francisco Call
9 25 15

The Savoy's presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's magnificent spectacle, continues as though this were the first instead of the twenty-second week of its appearance in this city. Nothing in the history of dramatic or photo-dramatic productions even approaches the success achieved by "The Birth of a Nation," the appeal of which is many sided and universal—there being romance threading its mammoth scenes, battle views of the struggle of the blue and the gray; night rides of mysteriously shrouded members of the Ku Klux Klan, the scene in Ford's theater showing the assassination of President Lincoln and a host of other episodes of epochal importance all woven together and knitted in a plot of thrills and cohesive, sustained interest.

CLIPPING FROM Leader
Milwaukee Wis
9 25 15

DAVIDSON.

Opening Sunday afternoon, the Davidson announces a return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," the motion [illegible] which during its [illegible] summer run set a [illegible] mark in Milwaukee's theatrical annals.

The film will be presented just as before, with the [illegible] setting greeting the visitor at the entrance; the orchestra of 40 pieces rendering the musical accompaniment and all the other features.

Much has been said and written of this gigantic spectacle. But the facts that it required a year in preparation; that it enlisted the services of 18,000 men and women, 3,000 horses, military paraphernalia and other equipment by the ton; that new photographic plans and devices were invented to make possible some of the almost miraculous achievements of the producer and that $500,000 were expended in preparing it, do not convey an adequate idea of its magnitude and its enthralling interest.

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
SEPT. 27, 1915

[illegible] Murray furnished some real comedy. The chorus is showing the benefit of [illegible] training [illegible] show in a creditable manner.

* * *

"The Birth of a Nation" opened a return engagement at the Davidson theatre Sunday afternoon, and will continue for the week, with afternoon and night performances each day. Although this is the second return of this remarkable film drama, and marks the ninth week of its presentation in Milwaukee, the Sunday audiences were of generous proportions. The big battle scenes and the dashing rides of the clansmen aroused the most interest and the historical scenes, depicted with realism, proved strongly attractive. The musical setting was well rendered, the orchestra being considerably larger than during the summer run of the piece. This musical setting is well worth hearing alone.

VISALIA (Cal.) DELTA 1307
SEPT. 25, 1915

300,000 WITNESSED "THE CLANSMAN" AT CLUNE'S THEATRE IN LOS ANGELES CITY

Portraying the darkest chapter in American history, "The Clansman," the greatest picture ever produced, comes to Theatre Visalia on Monday evening, October 4, for six nights and Saturday matinee.

"The Clansman" has greater popular appeal than any picture ever made. This is proven by the fact that over 300,000 people witnessed this masterpiece at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles during the twelve weeks of its run. From the finest detail shown in the little scenes to the utter magnitude of the big scenes, "The Clansman" stands unequalled. The direction is masterly. D. W. Griffith is a past master of depth and detail. The effect of light and shade, the use of the "close-up," the trick of double exposure, are handled as only he can handle them.

There are big battle scenes that thrill one through and through and the portrayal of Lincoln's assassination in Ford's Theatre is most graphic. One fairly holds his breath while witnessing the Ku-Klux riders charge through the barricaded streets of the little Southern town. From every standpoint, "The Clansman" stands alone in sustained interest.

Historically "The Clansman' is perfect. A student of history can gain more from the few hours necessary to witness this wonderful production than from months of careful study of books. To miss seeing "The Clansman" would be to miss part of ones education. Box office opens Tuesday, September 28, at 10 a. m. Mail orders now received. Night prices 25, 50 and 75 cents. Matinee, 25 and [illegible] cents.

SAN FRANCISCO (Cal.) CALL & POST
SEPT. 25, 1915

[illegible] von Weitholf will be in the [illegible]
The next attraction will be "Bought and Paid For."

Savoy

"The Birth of a Nation," the [illegible] Griffith film story, continues to crowd the Savoy theatre through the power of its wonderful historic spectacular and emotional qualities. The matinee and evening performances tomorrow will launch the twenty-second week of the picture's San Francisco career on its way.

Rupert Hughes, the noted author, recently wrote of "The Birth of a Nation": "I saw the play first in a small projecting room, with only a half dozen spectators present. We sat mute and spellbound for three hours. The next time I saw it was in a crowded theatre, and it was accompanied by an almost incessant murmur of applause, gasps of amazement, roars of laughter, gasps of excitement and outbursts of [illegible] so far as the audience was concerned.

"The scene changed with the velocity of lightning, of thought, that is not to imagine a human emotion that is not included somewhere in this story, from the biggest national psychology to the smallest whim of a petulant willainy to the lowest depths of ruthlessness to the utmost grandeur of patriotic ideal.

"The Birth of a Nation' is a work of epochal importance in a large and fruitful field of human endeavor. In paying that I am only doing my duty by American art—merely rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) SENTINEL
SEPT. 26, 1915

Noted War Film Returns to the Davidson Theater

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation."

HISTORICAL DRAMA RETURNS FOR WEEK

The "Birth of a Nation," Which Established Record at Davidson, to Be Shown There Again.

FORTY MEN IN ORCHESTRA

Photoplay Depicting Civil War Battles Carries Heart Interest Plot Throughout.

For the week beginning Sunday afternoon, the Davidson theater announces a return engagement of the wonderful film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which during a long summer run at that theater established a record in Milwaukee's theatrical annals. The film will be shown twice daily as before, at 2:15 o'clock in the afternoons and 8:10 in the evenings. The big orchestra of forty pieces will again render the musical setting which contributes so largely to the impressiveness of the pictured drama.

Much has been said and written of this masterpiece of motion photography but it is impossible to convey, by words an adequate idea of the magnitude and impressiveness of the pictures. The fact that a year was required in the preparation of the film; that 18,000 men and women were enlisted in the big scenes, that 3,000 horses were used and that the production entailed an expenditure of $500,000 before it was ready to be presented to the public are all startling, but they do not begin to indicate the wonders of the pictures themselves. For the entire three hours during which the film runs the audience is held spellbound by a succession of wonderful battle scenes, historical events that thrill the heart of every American, dashing and exciting pictures of the southern clansmen, representations of the turbulent reconstruction days and other scenes of enthralling interest, all held together by an intensely moving, heart interest story dealing with the life of a southern family during and after the great struggle from which a united nation was born.

Some of the historical events depicted are the signing of the call for troops by President Lincoln, the surrender of Lee, Sherman's march to the sea, Lincoln's assassination and several White house scenes, showing the martyred president surrounded by his advisers. The night scenes of battle are not only thrilling but viewed technically are marvels of photographic inventiveness. The principal parts are taken by film players of international reputation who carry the story through with most convincing authority.

An interesting feature of the entertainment is the war time atmosphere which pervades the theater.

OMAHA (Neb.) NEWS
SEPT. 26, 1915

PROMINENT FIGURE IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Mae Marsh

MAE MARSH, who figures prominently in "The Birth of a Nation," film classic, is a keen admirer of the works of Edgar Allan Poe. Next to Poe, in her estimation, comes O. Henry, for short stories. Miss Marsh is never seen without a book in hand, when not actively engaged in picture acting.

MONTREAL (Canada) HERALD
SEPT. 27, 1915

AT THE ARENA

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Be Shown There To-Night

"The Birth of a Nation," the big film drama is to be presented at the Arena commencing this evening. Not until late on Saturday night did Mr. A. E. Wright, of the Princess Theatre make arrangements for the presentation of the film. Several amusement places were considered but it was decided that the Arena was the best to show this wonderful film. Matinees will be given every day and on Wednesday the showing of the film will be called off owing to the Massed Bands concert.

A small army of workmen has been engaged to make the many changes necessary for the showing of this much talked-of picture in the Arena, for special arrangements have to be made regarding the setting of the projecting machine, and for the work of the men engaged in producing the spectacular effects that go with the picture. An orchestra of thirty has been engaged, and has been busily engaged in rehearsing the special music written for the production. By to-night, it is promised that everything will be in as good a shape for the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" as if it were being presented at the Princess.

Great interest has been manifest in the production, and, despite the fire at the Princess Theatre, there has been a heavy advance sale. It is practically assured that the Arena will be crowded every night during the week.

For the convenience of patrons, the box office at the Princess will be open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, as well as the box office at the Arena.

FRESNO (Cal.) REPUBLICAN
SEPT. 26, 1915

143

"THE CLANSMAN" HAS MATINEE TODAY AT WHITE

Lillian Gish, In "The Clansman"—Now At White

There will be a matinee at the White Theater at 2:30 today when D. W. Griffith's greatest achievement, "The Clansman," in twelve reels, will be presented for the seventh time this week, and from all appearances of things in the White box office, there will be another crowded house.

Every child should be taken to see this wonderful photo-drama and for this reason there will be special matinees given on Sunday and also on Wednesday at 2:30.

The film is based on the famous novel by Thomas Dixon, Jr., but it deals more broadly on its historical side with the life of the American nation than does the play or the book. "The Clansman" is the greatest and most spectacular motion picture ever produced. It is said to have cost half a million dollars and required seven months to make. Historically and technically "The Clansman" is perfect.

Included in the all-star cast presenting "The Clansman" are the following principals: Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Mary Alden, Joseph Henneberry, Samuel de Grasse, Howard Gaye, Donald Crisp, [illegible] Paull and Sedanie Lee.

"The Clansman" is presented at the White with chorus and augmented orchestra.

FRESNO (Cal.) REPUBLICAN
SEPT. 26, 1915

MIRIAM COOPER
IN "THE CLANSMAN"
WHITE THEATER
(MOVING PICTURES)

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) JOURNAL
SEPT. 27, 1915

hardt and Leo Ball.

DAVIDSON—BIRTH OF A NATION.

After having been shown at the Davidson for eight weeks during the summer, and one week at the Pabst during the State fair, the Birth of a Nation, depicting times in this country before the Civil war, opened at the Davidson for a week's engagement, Sunday afternoon. The big battle scenes, and the dashing rides of the clansmen, aroused the most interest, and the historical scenes, depicted with realism, proved strongly attractive. The orchestra has been considerably augmented since the first production of these pictures in this city, ten musician having been added to the already large number. The music alone is worth the hear-

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) HERALD
SEPT. 26, 1915

FREE ADVS. PLEASE FILM PROMOTERS

"Birth of a Nation," When Privately Shown, Will Probably Prove Tame and Mayor Can't Object.

A GREAT GAME.

Poor old Puritanical Hartford, with its wayback notions and its sixteenth century ideas is always before the public of other cities. This time it is brought to the attention of the country through remonstrances made against the appearance in a local playhouse of the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation."

It looks to the Herald as if the managers of the movie film courted the publicity given the film for advertising reasons. If that is a fact, the film has received more than the ordinary amount of free publicity, and it should be a paying proposition after it is finally shown to a board of censors at the Capital Town.

It is likely that the owners of the big film will come to Hartford and invite to the theater in the early morning hours, the mayor, the board of aldermen and both white and colored ministers of the gospel. The film will probably be run off and the good gentlemen present who are looking out for the moral welfare of Hartford will be obliged to say that there isn't one thing objectionable in the entire thousands of feet of celluloid.

It is a decidedly easy matter for the owners of the film to cut out anything that could be called the least bit objectionable, and then the authorities and ministers and colored people will be obliged to let it appear for a week at a local theater.

This game of howling about a moving picture in advance has been played in this city probably more times than it has been played in other New England towns. Whenever an objection has been made, the mayor has agreed to censor the film, and after the show has publicly declared that he and his followers could not find one objectionable inch on the much advertised roll of celluloid.

Mayor Lawler is still considering the advisability of allowing the film to be presented. If the owners do cut out everything that would be objectionable to even the most fastidious colored gentleman, the Herald does not understand how his honor could very well demand that it not be shown in Hartford town.

Judging from appearances the film promoters are now laughing in their sleeves over the present situation at the Capital Town. They will surely give a private view of the big production, and then be in a position where they can well afford to laugh heartily at the expense of the bright Hartfordites who were pulled into the free advertising game with their eyes wide open.

Hartford people who say the movie, "The Birth of a Nation," in New York city, where it has been running a whole year at prices ranging from fifty cents to $2, say that they cannot understand what sensible objections any person could possibly make to the production as given in the metropolitan playhouse.

The Herald predicts that the kickers will kick and the film will go on the white screen just the same, and those who pay their money to see the attraction will declare afterwards that they failed to see any reason whatever for making so much noise over an ordinary movie show.

FRESNO (Cal.) REPUBLICAN
SEPT. 26, 1915

WHITE

"The Clansman" has broken all records for long-run business at the White Theater this past week, the attendance so far having exceeded 10,000 admissions. There is yet one whole week to run as the engagement will not be concluded until Sunday night, October 3. There will be matinees this afternoon, Wednesday and next Saturday and Sunday at 2:30 p. m. The evening shows begin at 8 o'clock sharp as the film runs for nearly three hours.

This production in 12 reels was directed by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer. It is an adaptation from Thomas Dixon Jr.'s popular novel of the same name, and is the costliest motion picture ever produced.

"The Clansman" deals with the Civil war period. It shows the causes that led up to this conflict, and carries the spectator through the war. In "The Clansman" are shown the most marvelous battle scenes that have ever been staged. The siege before Petersburg with thousands of soldiers in action, is realistically shown in the picture. The battle fields were laid out and trenches dug under the direct supervision of seven G. A. R. veterans, who took part in the original conflict. These veterans, two of whom were commissioned officers, remained with Mr. Griffith during the entire period that the scenes were being staged.

Artillery duels, in which explosive shells are hurled by both the northern and southern troops, from huge mortars, are shown in motion pictures for the first time in "The Clansman." The artilery used is the same that was used during the Civil war and borrowed from the United States government for the occasion.

The explosive blank shells used in the mortars were constructed especially for these big guns by an expert fireworks manufacturer. More than 500 of these shells are used in the battle scenes. They cost thousands of dollars.

In directing the battle scenes, Mr. Griffith used field telephones, flag signals, field couriers and even a captive balloon. These methods were not used as part of the army equipment, but were merely used by Mr. Griffith in staging the production. He used the modern war methods to better execute the methods of 1861-65.

The artillery duels present one of the most striking features of the picture. "The Clansman" describes the organization and motives of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and shows more than 2000 of these white-hooded riders in their raids on the negroes.

General Sherman's historical march to the sea, together with the burning of the entire city of Atlanta, is shown in the picture. The burning of Atlanta is shown at night. The entire city with its countless number of buildings and dwellings is shown in the destruction. A terrific battle between Ku Klux riders and negro troops, provides another thrilling feature.

The assassination of President Lincoln by Wilkes Booth, is shown for the first time in the history of motion pictures.

The final scenes of "The Clansmnn" provide the most powerful sermons that could possibly be preached against the horrors of war.

"The Clansman" is presented by an all-star cast, including Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spotiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, George Seigman, Walter Long, Mary Alden, Joseph Hennebery, Sam de Grasse, Howard Gaye, Donald Crisp, William De Vaull and Jennie Lee.

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) STAR
SEPT. 27, 1915

M[illegible]

'BIRTH OF A NATION' TO BE AT OLYMPIC TWO WEEKS LONGER

Photo-Spectacle Such a Drawing Card Time Limit Is Extended a Week.

The run of "The Birth of a Nation," the great photo-play spectacle, at the Olympic Theater, has proved such a strong drawing card, that a week's extension has been gained. Yesterday started the fifth week of the picture's run here, and this will be extended over next week, so that the Veiled Prophet week visitors may see it.

Attendance records have been broken almost daily at the Olympic Theater recently, and when it is considered that there is a daily matinee, it can be seen how strong the attraction is drawing.

All court troubles connected with the photo drama have been straightened out.

BIG MOVING PICTURE SPECTACLE AT ARENA

"The Birth of a Nation" Will be Shown There, Owing to Fire at Princess

Arrangements were completed on Saturday night by manager Wright of the Princess Theatre by which "The Birth of a Nation" will be produced at the Arena during the coming week. This will be good news to those Montrealers who feared that this moving picture spectacle would not be shown here owing to the fire at the Princess Theatre.

Many difficulties had to be overcome in order to make sure that "The Birth of a Nation" would be shown here as planned, but it was felt that, since all preparations had been made for the presentation of this feature, it must be given, if at all possible. Several places were considered for the showing of the picture, and it was finally considered that the Arena was in every way the best.

This evening the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Arena, and matinee and evening performances will be given every day this week, with the exception of Wednesday night, when a patriotic concert is to be given by the massed bands of the city.

A small army of workmen has been engaged to make the many changes necessary for the showing of this much talked-of picture in the Arena, for special arrangements have to be made regarding the setting of the projecting machine, and for the work of the men engaged in producing the spectacular effects that go with the picture. An orchestra of thirty has been engaged, and has been busily engaged in rehearsing the special music written for the production. By to-night, it is promised that everything will be in as good a shape for the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" as if it were being presented at the Princess.

Great interest has been manifest in the production, and, despite the fire at the Princess Theatre, there has been a heavy advance sale. It is practically assured that the Arena will be crowded every night during the week.

For the convenience of patrons, the box office at the Princess will be open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, as well as the box office at the Arena.

[illegible] Can[illegible]
1-27-15

[illegible] Toronto (Ont.)
Sept 27/1915 Star

THEATRES

Melba's Red Cross Concert.

Madame Nellie Melba's appearance in Massey Hall next Monday night for the sole benefit of the Canadian Red Cross will command the attention of music lovers and the city at large from now until that time. Nothing could be more appropriate than that the local musical season should be opened with an event the entire proceeds of which are to be devoted to a patriotic purpose, and Madame Melba, by volunteering her services, together with those of her assisting artists, has created a precedent. Both of her concerts in Massey Hall last season drew capacity audiences, and this time, when she is giving not only of the superb art, but also of the tremendous money value which it commands, her reception is likely to be greater than ever. To-day her voice is in its prime—rich, velvety, and lucious. One of her most successful colleagues said recently: "She is unique. There probably has never lived a woman with such a perfect voice since the art of voice training began."

Second Week For "Movie" Spectacle.

Prolonging its engagement to accommodate the vast crowds that are visiting the Alexandra Theatre daily, "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's mammoth film spectacle inaugurates the second week of its engagement with a popular-price matinee this afternoon. Never before has such a sensational drama graced the boards of a Toronto theatre. Its five thousand individual scenes are made more impressive by the musical accompaniment that is played by a symphony orchestra of thirty. Many circumstances have conspired to make this spectacular film the most discussed play in the world. It embraces a period of 150 years and pictorializes the greatest events of the Civil war, as well as those of reconstruction. During the week performances will be given afternoon and evening, with no advance in prices.

LEWISTON (Maine) JOURNAL
SEPT. 28, 1915.

School Histories. "The Birth of a Nation," at the Empire This Week.

When one sees D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," and learn from it the many facts and sidelights of American history that are not to be found in the school editions of history, the thought comes that the educational departments of the country are neglecting the real education of the growing children.

"The Birth of a Nation" in clear, impressive motion pictures, gives the real story of this great rebellion and the spectator realizes that in his studies he has learned but a small part of the actual history.

For instance, it was new to many that after the States of the Confederacy had signed a peace, there were Northern statesmen who wished and urged the President to treat the rebellious states as conquered provinces and to hang their leaders. This is but one of many things that are brought to light in "The Birth of a Nation" for the first time to millions of people who have always felt that they knew the better part of the real history of the Civil War.

The question arises in the minds of the many; "Why are so many facts kept from the students in the schools of the North; and why should the people of the South be given a different version than the people of the North?"

Must it remain for the motion pictures to give the people of the world the real truth of history and other educational matters? It would seem so. And if it must be, let there be more pictures produced like "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Empire theatre of this city for an engagement of one week, beginning next Monday, Oct. 4th, and continuing every afternoon and evening throughout the week.

JACKSONVILLE (Fla.) TIMES-UNION
SEPT. 28, 1915

[illegible]rable in every respect.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 27.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala theater, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, made its entry into the South tonight at the Colonial theater here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion Greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Mayo, with members of the council and board of aldermen, Admiral Beattie, the commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard; Col. Haynes in command at Fortress Monroe, representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others prominent in the official and social life of eastern Virginia were in the audience.

COLUMBUS (Ohio) DISPATCH
SEPT. 29, 1915

The DISPATCH MAIL BAG

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

To the Editor of The Dispatch:

Sir: It seems to me that it would be a mistake to sanction the exhibition of the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," in Ohio. While it is a stupendous production, the general effect is pernicious in the extreme, and argues for nothing but slavery and glorifies the record of the Ku Klux Klan. Further, it is unfair to the worst aspects of race prejudice. It has been said that "The Birth of a Nation" shows evil where it does not exist, but nowhere does it approve the colored people, except where he is a slave. One would judge that since the negro was freed he has been a thing of evil with not a redeeming quality and without a single virtue. For some of its "historical" pictures and statements it quotes authorities but for its evil charges and the military rule in the south immediately after the war it pretends to quote no authority but does not state its sources, thereby making the story one that is mischievous to say the least.

When witnessing this film I protested against its character, and it left me with two thoughts indictments if made against the colored race be true get nothing could atone for the condition of slavery, and, second, no one is justified in exhibiting such unpleasant history in view of the citizenship of the present day.

J. W. Wheeler.
Godman Guild.

SEPT. 26, 1915
LLAS (Tex.) NEWS

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT OPERA HOUSE

WILL OPEN TWO WEEKS' ENGAGEMENT MONDAY NIGHT, OCTOBER 4.

The Opera House makes the following announcement:

"Both 'Ben-Hur' and 'The Blue Bird,' which heretofore have held the record for spectacular theatrical productions, are said to be surpassed as far as they surpassed their predecessors by the 'Birth of a Nation,' which opens a two weeks' engagement at the Dallas Opera House Monday night, Oct. 4.

"David W. Griffith is credited in his mighty spectacle with making the most thrilling period of American history live again. The audiences through the hypnotism of 5,000 rapidly moving scenes of battle, romance and chivalry, of a grand operatic musical score made up of themes of love and patriotism, and sound and electrical effects of a unique description are said to be transported for nearly three hours back into the days of the Civil War and Reconstruction. They get a fleeting glimpse of the period such as flashes vividly through the minds of veterans, sitting dreaming around their annual camp fires.

"Many circumstances have conspired to make 'The Birth of a Nation' the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than 'The Clansman' play. D. W. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of Reconstruction: Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theater, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South. These personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxed of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled 'the second struggle' between the North and the South,' a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the Southerner. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

"Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny 'armies' of the theatric board. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux 'rides' right out in the open, which surpass in thrills the Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a 'short cast' drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theater performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina Legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of outdoor nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art form of drama-spectacle-with-music."

Sherman's March to the Sea

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

ONTREAL (Que.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 27, 1915

BIG FILM DRAMA GOING TO ARENA

"The Birth of a Nation" Given First Presentation Tonight

Arrangements were completed lat on Saturday night by Mr. Abbi Wright, manager of the Princes Theatre, by which "The Birth of Nation" will be produced at th Arena during the coming week. Thi will be good news to many thousand in Montreal, who feared that thi most-talked-of moving picture spec tacle of the present day would no be shown here, owing to the fire a the Princess Theatre.

Many difficulties had to be over come in order to make sure that "Th Birth of a Nation" would be show here as planned, but these were al overcome by Mr. Wright, aided b Mr. Lol Solman, who came from To ronto to take a part in the negotia tions. It was felt that since all pre parations had been made for the pre sentation of this spectacle here, i must be given, if at all possible, no matter at what expense of time or money.

Several places were considered by the theatre management, but it was considered that the Arena was in every way the best to be used in such an emergency, and all the details of the change were worked out on Saturday night.

This evening the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Arena, and matinee and evening performances will be given every day this week, with the exception of Wednesday night, when a patriotic concert is to be given by the massed bands of the city garrison. A small army of men and mechanics has been engaged to transform the Arena into a moving picture theatre, and a vast amount of work will be done today in fitting the place for such a purpose. This means much effort and expense, but nothing will be spared to make the Arena a suitable place for such a show.

Mr. S. A. Finley, architect, who has been appointed by the Canadian Theatre Company to represent the company in the matter of the fire loss of the Princess Theatre, stated last evening that the loss is due almost entirely to water and smoke, the damage by fire being only about ten per cent. of the total. The statement made in some evening papers that the gallery had collapsed, is entirely erroneous, says Mr. Finley, as there has been no structural damage of any kind, the galleries and floors being as solid as the day they were built. The fall of the ceilings caused a loud report, which gave rise to the rumor that an explosion had occurred. Mr. Finley, who was the architect of the Princess Theatre when the building was constructed, stated that the work of repair has already begun and will be rushed to completion.

NEW ORLEANS (La.) STATES
SEPT. 28, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION ON SOUTHERN TOUR

Griffith Picture Presented At Norfolk In Presence of Distinguished Audience

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 28.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala Theatre, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffiths' mighty spectacle, "The Birth of A Nation," made its entry into the South last night at the Colonial Theatre here.

An audience typical of the old dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Windham R. Mayo, with members of the council and board of aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard; Col. Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and others prominent in the official and social life of Eastern Virginia were in the audience. The production scored heavily.

Griffith being a Southerner born, the son of Brigadier General John Griffith, of Kentucky, has caught the psychology of this historic period of our national evolution. He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement; the threatening news of a presidential election in 1860, that was to disrupt the ties that held us together. Impelling pictures of the heroisms and sufferings of war as it actually is, follow. Sherman's march to the sea is shown in its devastating totality, in a manner never reached by any other historian or dramatist. The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes when those half-starved and worn-out heroes offered a desperate resistance behind the crater's rim which has challenged the admiration of the world.

Stirring Scenes Are Shown.

So many details folow this startling beginning that it is difficult to cover all in the briefest comment. You see the final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox; the memorable night in Ford's theatre when a fanatic's bullet laid Abraham Lincoln low and robbed the sorely tried nation of its guiding force. The furies break loose after this in eight years of the reconstruction period. They are truthfully and forcefully told for the first time. A horde of scalawags and unscrupulous politicians come out of the North while the South is setting about its task of rehabilitation.

The chivalrous men of that day organize an invisible empire to right these outrages. The ignorant freed men who had been beguiled by the notorious carpetbaggers, are put right by their true friends. The South masters its task with skill and bravery, the villains and the politicians are driven out and a new era dawns for a powerful part of the mightiest nation in the world's history in a way which brings this impelling, gripping narrative to a logical clo

...ING FROM Lubbock
Date Jan 1 RO
9-28-15

Providence Opera House.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular photo play, opened the fifth week of its engagement at the Providence Opera House yesterday to crowded houses at both performances. It was announced that this is positively the last week that the photo play will be shown here. The same enthusiasm that was shown at previous performances was very much in evidence at yesterday's performances.

A picturesque note was struck at the very beginning for young women in crinoline and pantalets, with flowing curls, distributed programmes in the foyer as the patrons entered for their seats.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in photoplay upon which the producer, Mr. D. W. Griffith, and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unrivalled by any other production ever presented either in this city or any other. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The production is valuable as a lesson in history, for besides the decisive battles of the Civil War, Lee's surrender to Grant, Sherman's march to the sea (one of the finest pictures), the burning of Atlanta, the assasination of President Lincoln and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan are among the incidents pictured and some of the most wonderful and reckless riding is shown by hundreds of these daring horsemen.

It is difficult to choose among the most striking pictures. The war scenes, the remarkable representation of Ford's Theatre with views in turn of the audiences, the play in progress and the President's box, the sheeted Ku Klux riders hesitating on their deeds, the mob preceded the war, all these excited wonscenes, the happy plantation life which der and admiration.

The cast, too, was excellent, each member was individually striking in facial play and pantomine. Young Ben Cameron was a picturesque hero and the Misses Marsh, Cooper and Gish rivalled each other in daintiness and girlish charm. Mr. Seigman was a stalwart and insinuating villain. Mr. Henaberry's portrayal of Abraham Lincoln was effective in make-up and bearing. Miss [illegible]

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) HERALD
SEPT. 26, 1915

FREE ADVS. PLEASE FILM PROMOTERS

"Birth of a Nation," When Privately Shown, Will Probably Prove Tame and Mayor Can't Object.

A GREAT GAME.

Poor old Puritanical Hartford, with its wayback notions and its sixteenth century ideas is always before the public of other cities. This time it is brought to the attention of the country through remonstrances made against the appearance in a local playhouse of the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation."

It looks to the Herald as if the managers of the movie film courted the publicity given the film for advertising reasons. If that is a fact, the film has received more than the ordinary amount of free publicity, and it should be a paying proposition after it is finally shown to a board of censors at the Capital Town.

It is likely that the owners of the big film will come to Hartford and invite to the theater in the early morning hours, the mayor, the board of aldermen and both white and colored ministers of the gospel. The film will probably be run off and the good gentlemen present who are looking out for the moral welfare of Hartford will be obliged to say that there isn't one thing objectionable in the entire thousands of feet of celluloid.

It is a decidedly easy matter for the owners of the film to cut out anything that could be called the least bit objectionable, and then the authorities and ministers and colored people will be obliged to let it appear for a week at a local theater.

This game of howling about a moving picture in advance has been played in this city probably more times than it has been played in other New England towns. Whenever an objection has been made, the mayor has agreed to censor the film, and after the show has publicly declared that he and his followers could not find one objectionable inch on the much advertised roll of celluloid.

Mayor Lawler is still considering the advisability of allowing the film to be presented. If the owners do cut out everything that would be objectionable to even the most fastidious colored gentleman, the Herald does not understand how his honor could very well demand that it not be shown in Hartford town.

Judging from appearances the film promoters are now laughing in their sleeves over the present situation at the Capital Town. They will surely give a private view of the big production, and then be in a position where they can well afford to laugh heartily at the expense of the bright Hartfordites who were pulled into the free advertising game with their eyes wide open.

Hartford people who say the movie, "The Birth of a Nation," in New York city, where it has been running a whole year at prices ranging from fifty cents to $2, say that they cannot understand what sensible objections any person could possibly make to the production as given in the metropolitan playhouse.

The Herald predicts that the kickers will kick and the film will go on the white screen just the same, and those who pay their money to see the attraction will declare afterwards that they failed to see any reason whatever for making so much noise over an ordinary movie show.

FRESNO (Cal.) REPUBLICAN
SEPT. 26, 1915

WHITE

"The Clansman" has broken all records for long-run business at the White Theater this past week, the attendance so far having exceeded 10,000 admissions. There is yet one whole week to run as the engagement will not be concluded until Sunday night, October 3. There will be matinees this afternoon, Wednesday and next Saturday and Sunday at 2:30 p. m. The evening shows begin at 8 o'clock sharp as the film runs for nearly three hours.

This production in 12 reels was directed by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer. It is an adaptation from Thomas Dixon Jr.'s popular novel of the same name, and is the costliest motion picture ever produced.

"The Clansman" deals with the Civil war period. It shows the causes that led up to this conflict, and carries the spectator through the war. In "The Clansman" are shown the most marvelous battle scenes that have ever been staged. The siege before Petersburg with thousands of soldiers in action, is realistically shown in the picture. The battle fields were laid out and trenches dug under the direct supervision of seven G. A. R. veterans, who took part in the original conflict. These veterans, two of whom were commissioned officers, remained with Mr. Griffith during the entire period that the scenes were being staged.

Artillery duels, in which explosive shells are hurled by both the northern and southern troops, from huge mortars, are shown in motion pictures for the first time in "The Clansman." The artilery used is the same that was used during the Civil war and borrowed from the United States government for the occasion.

The explosive blank shells used in the mortars were constructed especially for these big guns by an expert fireworks manufacturer. More than 500 of these shells are used in the battle scenes. They cost thousands of dollars.

In directing the battle scenes, Mr. Griffith used field telephones, flag signals, field couriers and even a captive balloon. These methods were not used as part of the army equipment, but were merely used by Mr. Griffith in staging the production. He used the modern war methods to better execute the methods of 1861-65.

The artillery duels present one of the most striking features of the picture. "The Clansman" describes the organization and motives of the famous Ku Klux Klan, and shows more than 2000 of these white-hooded riders in their raids on the negroes.

General Sherman's historical march to the sea, together with the burning of the entire city of Atlanta, is shown in the picture. The burning of Atlanta is shown at night. The entire city with its countless number of buildings and dwellings is shown in the destruction. A terrific battle between Ku Klux riders and negro troops, provides another thrilling feature.

The assassination of President Lincoln by Wilkes Booth, is shown for the first time in the history of motion pictures.

The final scenes of "The Clansmnn" provide the most powerful sermons that could possibly be preached against the horrors of war.

"The Clansman" is presented by an all-star cast, including Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spotiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, George Seigman, Walter Long, Mary Alden, Joseph Hennebery, Sam de Grasse, Howard Gaye, Donald Crisp, William De Vaull and Jennie Lee.

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) STAR
SEPT. 27, 1915

'BIRTH OF A NATION' TO BE AT OLYMPIC TWO WEEKS LONGER

Photo-Spectacle Such a Drawing Card Time Limit Is Extended a Week.

The run of "The Birth of a Nation," the great photo-play spectacle, at the Olympic Theater, has proved such a strong drawing card, that a week's extension has been gained. Yesterday started the fifth week of the picture's run here, and this will be extended over next week, so that the Veiled Prophet week visitors may see it.

Attendance records have been broken almost daily at the Olympic Theater recently, and when it is considered that there is a daily matinee, it can be seen how strong the attraction is drawing.

All court troubles connected with the photo drama have been straightened out.

JACKSONVILLE (Fla.) TIMES-UNION
SEPT. 28, 1915

...rable in every respect.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 27.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala theater, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffith's spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, made its entry into the South tonight at the Colonial theater here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion Greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Mayo, with members of the council and board of aldermen, Admiral Beattie, the commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard; Col. Haynes in command at Fortress Monroe, representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others prominent in the official and social life of eastern Virginia were in the audience.

DIG MOVING PICTURE SPECTACLE AT ARENA

"The Birth of a Nation" Will be Shown Here, Owing to Fire at Princess

Arrangements were completed on Saturday night by manager Wright of the Princess Theatre by which "The Birth of a Nation" will be produced at the Arena during the coming week. This will be good news to those Montrealers who feared that this moving picture spectacle would not be shown here owing to the fire at the Princess Theatre.

Many difficulties had to be overcome in order to make sure that "The Birth of a Nation" would be shown here as planned, but it was felt that, since all preparations had been made for the presentation of this feature, it must be given, if at all possible. Several places were considered for the showing of the picture, and it was finally considered that the Arena was in every way the best.

This evening the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Arena, and matinee and evening performances will be given every day this week, with the exception of Wednesday night, when a patriotic concert is to be given by the massed bands of the city.

A small army of workmen has been engaged to make the many changes necessary for the showing of this much talked-of picture in the Arena, for special arrangements have to be made regarding the setting of the projecting machine, and for the work of the men engaged in producing the spectacular effects that go with the picture. An orchestra of thirty has been engaged, and has been busily engaged in rehearsing the special music written for the production. By to-night, it is promised that everything will be in as good a shape for the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" as if it were being presented at the Princess.

Great interest has been manifest in the production, and, despite the fire at the Princess Theatre, there has been a heavy advance sale. It is practically assured that the Arena will be crowded every night during the week.

For the convenience of patrons, the box office at the Princess will be open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, as well as the box office at the Arena.

...Toronto (Can.)
Sept. 27/1915 Star

THEATRES

Melba's Red Cross Concert.

Madame Nellie Melba's appearance in Massey Hall next Monday night for the sole benefit of the Canadian Red Cross will command the attention of music lovers and the city at large from now until that time. Nothing could be more appropriate than that the local musical season should be opened with an event the entire proceeds of which are to be devoted to a patriotic purpose, and Madame Melba, by volunteering her services, together with those of her assisting artists, has created a precedent. Both of her concerts in Massey Hall last season drew capacity audiences, and this time, when she is giving not only of the superb art, but also of the tremendous money value which it commands, her reception is likely to be greater than ever. To-day her voice is in its prime—rich, velvety, and lucious. One of her most successful colleagues said recently: "She is unique. There probably has never lived a woman with such a perfect voice since the art of voice training began."

Second Week For "Movie" Spectacle.

Prolonging its engagement to accommodate the vast crowds that are visiting the Alexandra Theatre daily, "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's mammoth film spectacle inaugurates the second week of its engagement with a popular-price matinee this afternoon. Never before has such a sensational drama graced the boards of a Toronto theatre. Its five thousand individual scenes are made more impressive by the musical accompaniment that is played by a symphony orchestra of thirty. Many circumstances have conspired to make this spectacular film the most discussed play in the world. It embraces a period of 150 years and pictorializes the greatest events of the Civil war, as well as those of reconstruction. During the week performances will be given afternoon and evening, with no advance in prices.

LEWISTON (Maine) JOURNAL
SEPT. 28, 1915.

School Hygiene. The Birth of a Nation," at the Empire next Week.

When one sees D. W. Griffith's wonderful film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," and learn from it the many facts and sidelights of American history that are not to be found in the school editions of history, the thought comes that the educational departments of the country are neglecting the real education of the growing children.

"The Birth of a Nation" in clear, impressive motion pictures, gives the real story of this great rebellion and the spectator realizes that in his studies he has learned but a small part of the actual history.

For instance, it was new to many that after the States of the Confederacy had signed a peace, there were Northern statesmen who wished and urged the President to treat the rebellious states as conquered provinces and to hang their leaders. This is but one of many things that are brought to light in "The Birth of a Nation" for the first time to millions of people who have always felt that they knew the better part of the real history of the Civil War.

The question arises in the minds of the many: "Why are so many facts kept from the students in the schools of the North; and why should the people of the South be given a different version than the people of the North?"

Must it remain for the motion pictures to give the people of the world the real truth of history and other educational matters? It would seem so. And if it must be, let there be more pictures produced like "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Empire theatre of this city for an engagement of one week, beginning next Monday, Oct. 4th, and continuing every afternoon and evening throughout the week.

COLUMBUS (Ohio) DISPATCH
SEPT. 28, 1915

The DISPATCH MAIL BAG

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

To the Editor of The Dispatch:

Sir: It seems to me that it would be a mistake to sanction the exhibition of the moving picture film, "The Birth of the Nation," in Ohio. While it is a stupendous production in a technical sense it is pernicious in its effect and the general argues for nothing in particular, but glorifies the record of slavery and the night work of the Ku-Klux Klan.

Further, it is unfair to the negro race and tends to emphasize the worst aspects of race prejudice. The Birth of a Nation shows evil white as well as colored people, but nowhere except in the colored people would judge it approve the colored man would be where he is at present. One would judge that since the negro was freed he has been a thing of evil with not a redeeming quality and without a spark of progress and statements it quotes authorities but for its evil charges pictures against white statesmen, the south immediately after the war it pretends and the military rule in the south immediately after the war it pretends and thereby making the story one that is thereby making this film I protest mischievous in any the least. When witnessing this film I protested against its character, and it left me with two thoughts in mind, first, assuming that all the indictments it made against could atone for the condition of slavery and, second, no one yet nothing could atone for such unpleasant justified in exhibiting such unpleasantness in view of the citizenship of the present day.

J. W. Wheeler.

Godman Guild.

SEPT. 26. 1915
LLAS (Tex.) NEWS

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT OPERA HOUSE

WILL OPEN TWO WEEKS' ENGAGEMENT MONDAY NIGHT, OCTOBER 4.

The Opera House makes the following announcement:

"Both 'Ben-Hur' and 'The Blue Bird,' which heretofore have held the record for spectacular theatrical productions, are said to be surpassed as far as they surpassed their predecessors by the 'Birth of a Nation,' which opens a two weeks' engagement at the Dallas Opera House Monday night, Oct. 4.

"David W. Griffith is credited in his mighty spectacle with making the most thrilling period of American history live again. The audiences through the hypnotism of 5,000 rapidly moving scenes of battle, romance and chivalry, of a grand operatic musical score made up of themes of love and patriotism, and sound and electrical effects of a unique description are said to be transported for nearly three hours back into the days of the Civil War and Reconstruction. They get a fleeting glimpse of the period such as flashes vividly through the minds of veterans, sitting dreaming around their annual camp fires.

"Many circumstances have conspired to make 'The Birth of a Nation' the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than 'The Clansman' play. D. W. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of Reconstruction: Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the President in Ford's Theater, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South. These personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled 'the second struggle between the North and the South,' a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the Southerner. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

"Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny 'armies' of the theatric board. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux 'rides' right out in the open, which surpass in thrills the Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a 'short cast' drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theater performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina Legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of outdoor nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art form of drama-spectacle-with-music."

Sherman's March to the Sea

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

ONTREAL (Que.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 27, 1915

BIG FILM DRAMA GOING TO ARENA

"The Birth of a Nation" Given First Presentation Tonight

Arrangements were completed lat on Saturday night by Mr. Abbi Wright, manager of the Princes Theatre, by which "The Birth of Nation" will be produced at th Arena during the coming week. Thi will be good news to many thousand in Montreal, who feared that thi most-talked-of moving picture spec tacle of the present day would no be shown here, owing to the fire a the Princess Theatre.

Many difficulties had to be over come in order to make sure that "Th Birth of a Nation" would be show here as planned, but these were al overcome by Mr. Wright, aided b Mr. Loi Solman, who came from To ronto to take a part in the negotia tions. It was felt that since all pre parations had been made for the pre sentation of this spectacle here, i must be given, if at all possible, no matter at what expense of time o money.

Several places were considered by the theatre management, but it was considered that the Arena was in every way the best to be used in such an emergency, and all the details of the change were worked out on Saturday night.

This evening the first performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Arena, and matinee and evening performances will be given every day this week, with the exception of Wednesday night, when a patriotic concert is to be given by the massed bands of the city garrison. A small army of men and mechanics has been engaged to transform the Arena into a moving picture theatre, and a vast amount of work will be done today in fitting the place for such a purpose. This means much effort and expense, but nothing will be spared to make the Arena a suitable place for such a show.

Mr. S. A. Finley, architect, who has been appointed by the Canadian Theatre Company to represent the company in the matter of the fire loss of the Princess Theatre, stated last evening that the loss is due almost entirely to water and smoke, the damage by fire being only about ten per cent. of the total. The statement made in some evening papers that the gallery had collapsed, is entirely erroneous, says Mr. Finley, as there has been no structural damage of any kind, the galleries and floors being as solid as the day they were built. The fall of the ceilings caused a loud report, which gave rise to the rumor that an explosion had occurred. Mr. Finley, who was the architect of the Princess Theatre when the building was constructed, stated that the work of repair has already begun and will be rushed to completion.

NEW ORLEANS (La.) STATES
SEPT. 28, 1915

BIRTH OF A NATION ON SOUTHERN TOUR

Griffith Picture Presented At Norfolk In Presence of Distinguished Audience

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 28.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala Theatre, London, England, before King George and members of the royal household, D. W. Griffiths' mighty spectacle, "The Birth of A Nation," made its entry into the South last night at the Colonial Theatre here.

An audience typical of the old dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Windham R. Mayo, with members of the council and board of aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard; Col. Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and others prominent in the official and social life of Eastern Virginia were in the audience. The production scored heavily.

Griffith being a Southerner born, the son of Brigadier General John Griffith, of Kentucky, has caught the psychology of this historic period of our national evolution. He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement; the threatening news of a presidential election in 1860, that was to disrupt the ties that held us together. Impelling pictures of the heroisms and sufferings of war as it actually is, follow. Sherman's march to the sea is shown in its devastating totality, in a manner never reached by any other historian or dramatist. The last stand at Petersburg is the climax of the war scenes when those half-starved and worn-out heroes offered a desperate resistance behind the crater's rim which has challenged the admiration of the world.

Stirring Scenes Are Shown.

So many details folow this startling beginning that it is difficult to cover all in the briefest comment. You see the final meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox; the memorable night in Ford's theatre when a fanatic's bullet laid Abraham Lincoln low and robbed the sorely tried nation of its guiding force. The furies break loose after this in eight years of the reconstruction period. They are truthfully and forcefully told for the first time. A horde of scalawags and unscrupulous politicians come out of the North while the South is setting about its task of rehabilitation.

The chivalrous men of that day organize an invisible empire to right these outrages. The ignorant freed men who had been beguiled by the notorious carpetbaggers, are put right by their true friends. The South masters its task with skill and bravery, the villains and the politicians are driven out and a new era dawns for a powerful part of the mightiest nation in the world's history in a way which brings this impelling, gripping narrative to a logical clo

...TING FROM Lubbock
Date Sunday R D
9-28-15

Providence Opera House.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's spectacular photo play, opened the fifth week of its engagement at the Providence Opera House yesterday to crowded houses at both performances. It was announced that this is positively the last week that the photo play will be shown here. The same enthusiasm that was shown at previous performances was very much in evidence at yesterday's performances.

A picturesque note was struck at the very beginning for young women in crinoline and pantalets, with flowing curls, distributed programmes in the foyer as the patrons entered for their seats.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in photoplay upon which the producer, Mr. D. W. Griffith, and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unrivalled by any other production ever presented either in this city or any other. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The production is valuable as a lesson in history, for besides the decisive battles of the Civil War, Lee's surrender to Grant, Sherman's march to the sea (one of the finest pictures), the burning of Atlanta, the assasination of President Lincoln and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan are among the incidents pictured and some of the most wonderful and reckless riding is shown by hundreds of these daring horsemen.

It is difficult to choose among the most striking pictures. The war scenes, the remarkable representation of Ford's Theatre with views in turn of the audiences, the play in progress and the President's box, the sheeted Ku Klux riders hesitating on their deeds, the mob preceded the war, all these excited wonscenes, the happy plantation life which der and admiration.

The cast, too, was excellent, each member was individually striking in facial play and pantomine. Young Ben Cameron was a picturesque hero and the Misses Marsh, Cooper and Gish rivalled each other in daintiness and girlish charm. Mr. Seigman was a stalwart and insinuating villain. Mr. Henaberry's portrayal of Abraham Lincoln was effective in make-up and bearing. Miss [illegible]

PAWTUCKET (R. I.) TIMES
SEP 28 1915

AT THE

"Birth of a Nation" Begins Last Week at the Opera House.

The sumptuous Griffith spectacle, "Birth of a Nation," yesterday entered upon its fifth and last week at the Providence Opera House. Such a run perhaps establishes a record for the smaller cities, and serves to throw light upon the question of the status to be occupied by the moving picture of the future. Certainly the audiences that have greeted these performances week after week are not mere amusement seekers; it is obvious that there are many "repeats" among patrons who realize that the whole of a spectacle of this nature cannot be taken in during a single observation. This picture more than absorbs and distracts; it detaches and vitalizes by a wealth of valuable historical allusion, which surpasses even its power to thrill. Its educational value is therefore an all-important factor in its claim upon popularity.

The term should not be misunderstood, however. The historical effectiveness of this picture is chiefly in the way of verisimilitude: It is an immense ensemble of spectacles renewed as faithfully as possible after half a century and whenever expedient accurately environed. It enforces the fundamental truths of the desolation of war, depicts its needlessness to eyes that see clearly in retrospect what could not be discerned in the heat of pro-slavery and anti-slavery passions, and shows with wonderful fidelity the types of home life and the social customs of 50 years ago. But in its role of a social and political pedagogue it is at a manifest disadvantage, first because the recital is founded upon the novel of Thomas Dixon, a partisan Southerner; and second, because, as is obvious, appeal cannot be adequately made through the eye to the conscience, but only to the emotions. Every scene enacted in the second half of this colossal cinematography probably had its counterpart in the carpetbagger-Northern politician stage of the reconstruction era; the portion eliminated in deference to negro sentiment has had its original; the black mob was true; negro domination, childish insolence and ignorant lust for power were known in the South in those deplorable years; the Ku-Klux Klan was conceived in desperation against the negro, bewildered by his unaccustomed accession to the franchise; the Klan in its earlier periods was not the lawless organization and oppressor of the colored man which was subsequently put down by the federal government to save the South from anarchy; but the attempt to reproduce these incidents of the reconstruction in spectacular form imparts to them undue emphasis. They impress the beholder not as passing phenomena, but as the recitation of conditions and photography of phases; while the author of "The Clansman" has grossly exaggerated the character of Stoneman if he has attempted in this unhappy episode to delineate the mind of Thaddeus Stevens. But the intention of the promoters of this complicated picture was not to misdead, and they have the settled verdict of history as a corrective of false impressions; as a fabrication of the art of animated shadow it justifies everything that was been uttered in its praise.

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) TELEGRAPH
SEPT. 28, 1915.

Cleveland, Sep. 28.—"The Birth of a Nation," said to be the biggest and most costly motion picture production ever presented, which was booked here for 15 weeks next spring and summer at $2 prices, won't be shown. The board of censors at Columbus rejected the film today and will not permit it to be shown in Ohio.

SEPT. 28, 1915
PITTSBURG (Pa.) POST

excellent support. This [illegible] entertainment.

NIXON—"Birth of a Nation" Film

Pittsburgh is still flocking to the Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle. Capacity houses in the Nixon yesterday proved that D. W. Griffith's great scenic achievement holds popular favor, deservedly so. The final production is next week. Never have more vivid details been portrayed than Griffith's dramatization of "The Clansman."

The battle scene in the first part and the vengeance of the Ku Klux Klan in the second are as strong as human achievement in the motion picture art has been able to attain. The lessons drawn are strong and convincing, yet there is nothing objectionable in the production, disproving any apprehension on the part of officials who first frowned upon its presentation in Pittsburgh.

The orchestral accompaniment is excellent. No better peace argument could be produced than the showing of

[illegible] PING FROM Date Norfolk Va Pilot
9-28-15

"BIRTH OF NATION" SUPERB PRODUCTION

Stirring Dramatization Of "The Clansman" Thrilled Packed House At Colonial

The realistic picturization of an epoch in history is what D. W. Griffith undertakes to do in that masterpiece of motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which was presented at the Colonial last night to a packed house, and regardless of whether the play is one calculated to do good, insofar as vivid and graphic portraiture of the turbulous and chaotic days of the Civil war and the Days of Reconstruction is concerned, the production is a thrill with the spirit of tumult and confusion and abounding in the horrors of war, of rapine and desolation.

For sheer tenseness of dramatic interest, Mr. Griffith's work is probably without parallel. Certainly in perfection of effect, in photography and in the thousands of details that have gone into building this greatest epic of film history, the producer has shown a degree of genius not attained by any other. In historical accuracy he builds Ford's theatre and presents with faithful attention to actuality the assassination of Lincoln; the session of the black legislature in South Carolina is shown in a hall constructed from a photograph. Sherman's march through Georgia, the burning of Atlanta, the fighting around Petersburg, the gathering of the Ku Klux—these furnish subjects for spectacular scenes on a scale beyond the dreams of the living stage.

It is a production that holds its audience as has nothing else in the memory of this writer.

The play is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, but Griffith's master hand has subordinated the blatancy of the book.

It portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the old South, quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the great outbreak. Comes the first intimation of the national storm that is brewing. Then the war. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation follows; and the gaunt specter of war shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. The great battle that determined the war is staged; then comes the peace of war—a sickly, miserable peace. The work of rebuilding the South commences under the guidance of Lincoln; then the assassination of the one man who could control the dissenting force. The dark days of negro supremacy in the South are pictured. Follows the rise of the Ku Klux Clan. A sweet, though sometimes sad, love strain surges through the land's miserere, and scenes relieving the high tension of the spirit of the drama are introduced.

With the coming of the Ku Klux the negro supremacy is put down through more bloodshed, following a guerilla warfare. The production shows the agony that the South endured that a nation might be born.

Winsome Mae Marsh, as Flora, the ill-fated youngest daughter of the South Carolina Camerons, handles the leading feminine role in a captivating style. Starry-eyed Lillian Gish is exceptionally good as Elsie Stoneman, the daughter of the leader of the Radical party. Josephine Crowell acted the part of Mrs. Cameron, a mother of many sorrows, and Miriam Cooper, a sweet and winsome Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the Old South. The role of Colonel Ben Cameron was handled by Henry Walthall. Elmer Clifton was Phil Stoneman. George Seigmann was cast in the role of the ambitious negro Lieutenant-Governor, Silas Lynch.

The music throughout the entire production is a notable feature.

Owing to the length of the play, the matinees during the remainder of the week will begin at 2:15 o'clock, and the evening performance will begin at 8:15 o'clock.

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) BULLETIN 720
SEPT. 28, 1915.

Providence Opera House

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's sensational photo play, opened the fifth week of its engagement at the Providence Opera House to capacity audiences yesterday afternoon and last evening. It was announced that this would positively be the final week of the engagement in this city, and every seat was taken and standing room was at a premium at both performances yesterday.

All of the features which were employed in previous weeks were in use at yesterday's performances and will be during the week. The same great enthusiasm that has been shown by the audiences during previous performances was again very much in evidence, especially in scenes where the Ku Klux Klan riders appeared.

In the preparation of the pictures 5000 scenes, 18,000 characters and 3000 horses were called into service, and the cost of the photo play is said to be $500,000. Among the features are the burning of cities, battles reproduced, Ford's Theatre in Washington and the Lincoln assassination, rides of the Ku Klux Klan, and the night photography of battle scenes, with artillery duels in which real shells are used. An orchestra of 25 pieces and a corps of men to add realistic sound touches to the pictures are added features in the presentation of the play.

BURLINGTON (Vt.) NEWS
SEPT. 28, 1915.

12

AMUSEMENTS

Champlin Stock Company Scores Success at Strong Theatre.

The Charles K. Champlin Stock company opened a week's engagement at the Strong theatre yesterday with "The Reformer," by Walter Woods.

In the evening "Beyond the Law" was the attraction. Edna Grandin had the leading part of Dorothy Davis and proved herself a competent actress as well as a beautiful young woman. Morey Drisko was good as the district attorney, and the other members of the company rendered their roles capably.

"The Rosary" is the title of the play to be given by the Chas. K. Champlin Stock Co., at the Strong tonight. As this will be the last presentation of this play during the engagement and that prices are most popular it is suggested that you phone now if you care to have tickets laid aside for tonight.

"Innocent" last season's success from the Ettinge theatre, N. Y., will be played on Wednesday afternoon. It will also be played on Thursday night. The management of the Strong theatre has arranged to have this bill at a popular prices matinee before it is played at night prices on Thursday. Why? Because every one who attends the matinee on Wednesday afternoon and sees this great wonderful play will be a walking advertisement for the play on Thursday night. A special stage reception will be held by the members of the company at the conclusion of this performance when refreshments and dancing will be the order of the judges from joyland.

Wednesday night "The Reformer" will be given. There is no stronger drama on the stage today than this one. A story that drops right into the lives and homes of folks right in the city of Burlington. A spade a spade, and black is black [illegible] afraid of truth don't come to see "The Reformer" Wednesday night at the Strong.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation' is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horse add their quota to its bigness. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appommatox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's theatre, Washington. The South before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances.

It is a picture in a life time; one that will in all probability never be duplicated and for that reason should be viewed by every man, woman and child in this city. Once seen it is never to be forgotten and since the Strong theatre will undoubtedly be crowded daily during its engagement of this remarkable spectacle which commences Oct. 4 for a period of four days, it would be wise for all to engage seats at the earliest possible moment.

There will be two performances daily, the matinee starting promptly at 2:15, while the evening sessions will start at 8.

MONTREAL (Canada) MAIL
SEPT. 28, 1915.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION TEACHES PATRIOTISM IN FINE PHOTOPLAY

Remarkable Production Seen at the Arena by Big House Last Night

VIVID PICTURE OF WAR

A lesson in patriotism can be derived by all who visit the Arena this week and witness "The Birth of a Nation." Never before has it been so clearly demonstrated what war really is and what it really means as the picturization seen last night. The war scenes such as presented in "The Birth of a Nation" are indeed real.

A feature of the production is the effects obtained by an orchestra of thirty musicians, under the direction of L. Dalby. The music, which was written specially for the production, is of a descriptive nature. The war scenes become more real under the treatment of the drums and bugle calls, while love scenes appeal to the heart with the aid of violin.

That the American nation was threatened through the liberation of the blacks in the South forms the theme of the photoplay, around which are built up two separate love stories. Each is treated by a master hand and is told in the highest picture form yet seen in Montreal.

Every passion which war brings forth is painted in vivid colors, love, hate, patriotism, forgiveness—all can be found in one or more of the various strong characters in the play.

The story commences with the beginning of the civil war, where the Cameron family send forth three sons to the front, two of whom are never to return. The first one, through acts of bravery, becomes known as the "Little Colonel." He and an old boarding school chum are fighting on opposite sides and each looks after the other in time of need. The father of the Unionist, Stoneman, is the Radical leader. He favors punishing the Southerners, but Lincoln then pronounces his famous words, "I shall treat them as though they had never gone away."

The assassination of Lincoln and the increasing of Stoneman's power give the blacks a chance to overrule the South. Many examples of the misuses which their power is put to by the blacks are shown and gives the Ku Klux clan an excuse for existence. The clan manages to realize its ambition and the general order of things is once more restored. The South rebuilds slowly but surely and becomes in reality a part of the American Nation. The "Birth of a Nation" has taken place and the spectators leave marvelling at the completeness and exactitude of the production.

RUTLAND (Vt.) HERALD
SEPT. 29, 1915

78

"The Birth of a Nation."

It is amusing to note the continued applause after some of the especially dramatic scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Playhouse last night. I wondered the other evening if many in the audience did not forget momentarily that it was a great motion picture production and unthinkingly desire to call the youthful and good looking Col. Ben Cameron out for a curtain bow or speech. The extremely pretty young girls, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper, who play the principal characters, would certainly have a string of autos waiting for them at the stage door if they were there in person. One can readily understand the widespread interest in motion pictures after seeing what can really be accomplished so perfectly that every emotion is stirred without words and still be better than a good old-fashioned melodramatic thriller. A happy thing, too, is the absence of poorly voiced "bits" actors who marr so many really good plays. —adv.

BURLINGTON (Vt.) FREE PRESS
SEPT. 28, 1915.

THE BURLINGTON FREE

IN MOTION PICTURES ONE ALWAYS GETS THE ORIGINAL CAST

Which is one point worth considering when "The Birth of a Nation" comes here October 4.

There is one point worth considering in motion picture plays—you always get the original cast in producing. "The Birth of a Nation," which is at present doing sensational business all over the country, the selection of players must have been a most trying and serious problem for Mr. Griffith, as the range of players and characters and the work they had to perform covered a multitude of things that could not have been imposed upon ordinary workers in drama and musical comedy.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the greatest sensational success in stage annals of the world. For the first time in the film spectacles one sees in a single masterpiece 5,000 scenes of gigantic magnitude; 18,000 characters; 3,000 horses all in a production which cost a little over $500,000 to produce.

Cities were built up and then destroyed by fire. The biggest battle of the Civil War is re-enacted. Ford's theatre, Washington is reproduced to the smallest detail of the Lincoln tragedy. A series of wild Ku Klux "rides" are shown that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000. Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and KuKlux costumes 25,000 yards of cloth. Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells, costing $30 apiece were used; miles of trenches; thousands of fighters show "War as it really is." Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000 is shown. A musical score for an enlarged orchestra, perfectly synchronized to the thousands of distinct and individual scenes, perfect to the instant adds still more to the production, making altogether the most stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise ever conceived by the brain of man. When "The Birth of a Nation comes to The Strong theatre for its engagement of four days, every man, woman and child should be permitted to view this phenominal triumph which may never be duplicated, and certainly will not for a number of years.

From Argus
Portland Me
Date 9-29-15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

For once the press agent has been outdone. For years it has been his duty to employ exaggeration in the verbal presentation of his subject as to infuse in the mind of the reader a desire to see or hear that which he writes about, but now in "The Birth of a Nation," the gorgeous and tremendous spectale which is now playing a week's return engagement at the B. F. Keith Theatre, the press agent finds himself at a loss to adequately describe the production. Every newspaper critic and reviewer has dwelt in superlatives, it is impossible to exaggerate the stupendousness of this great photo-drama, and the writer is able to do even meagre justice to his subject.

"The Birth of a Nation" cannot be exaggerated, it is so gigantic in scope To describe the tremendous battle scenes would require the greatest war correspondents and masters of language that ever lived. Only the eye alone can realize the wonderful scenes unfolded. War, real, terrific, appalling, heroic, romantic and horrible is painted as no artist in black and white or with brush and colors could ever hope to cope with, as no pen description could ever fully realize. The cavalry charges, the artillery duels, the miles and miles of trenches, the infantry charges, the hand to hand conflict, thousands upon thousands of combatants, make one gasp with amazement. The blood will thrill and shivers run up and down the spine of everyone with a drop of red blood in their veins, yet it will make every spectator thank his stars that our United States is not embroiled in the great European combat.

The cavalry charges and riding of the Klu-Klux Klan shows horsemanship that holds one breathless. As a pictorial production of love, romance and history, the equal of this mighty spectacle has never been shown in Portland. "The Birth of a Nation" stands as pre-eminent as the greatest moving picture ever staged, the one by which all others will be measured. Until someone can conceive a greater subject and will expend more than a half million dollars on production, and then secure a greater genius than David Wark Griffith as the producer, pictures will come and go without affecting the prestige of "The Birth of a Nation." See it; for you owe it to yourself. It is an education in itself. Your neighbor has seen it and if you wish to be up to date in motion picture photography and production and able to judge other pictures by the highest standard of all, you must see this great masterpiece. Two performances daily at B. F. Keith's and it is well to remember that an early reservation of seats is imperative.

MONTREAL (Que.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 23, 1915.
575

FILM MASTERPIECE SHOWN AT ARENA

"Birth of a Nation" Is Revelation of Camera's Possibilities

The long-heralded and well-advertised picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," the first production of its kind to command the same scale of prices as the spoken play of the better class, was given its initial presentation last night at the Arena before an audience, which in numbers would have exhausted the capacity of any theatre in the city. It proved to be a revelation of the possibilities of the camera in the recording and preserving of a thrilling and moving play, given on a scale of vastness, yet with an attention to the minutest detail, never before attempted. Founded upon Thomas Dixon's much-discussed novel of a decade ago, "The Clansman," it also proved a revelation to a majority of the spectators in enlightening them as to the horrors of the reconstruction period which followed the war, and it furnished a convincing explanation of the South's long-maintained attitude of irreconcilability and its fanatical devotion to a lost cause. In atmosphere and some of its episodes it is reminiscent of Belasco's "The Warrens of Virginia," but unhampered by the limitations of time and space imposed upon the legitimate theatre. D. W. Griffiths, the producer of this film masterpiece, has measured his stage in miles and his performers by the thousands, and has shown in such quick succession as to create an impression of simultaneity scenes and incidents occurring at widely-separated places. The battle pictures are marvelous in their sweep and immensity, the scenes showing the operations of the Ku Klux Klan are vividly realistic and convey admirably the sense of mystery and awe attaching to the actual organization, the historical tableaux in which figure Lincoln and his cabinet, John Wilkes Booth, Grant and Lee and other personages of the time are apparently executed with absolutely fidelity to fact, and the personal equation in the drama to which these larger aspects are the setting has been so well-chosen and carefully rehearsed that the characters become as real to the beholder as if they were flesh-and-blood acquaintances instead of pictures on a screen.

The strong protests made by the colored population of Montreal against the showing of the picture here gave rise to expectations that some further measure of disapproval might make itself manifest, but there were no untoward developments. The audience included a number of colored persons of both sexes, but there were no audible expressions of dissent, nor to the unprejudiced observer did there appear to be ground for any. The production deals, it is true, with an acute phase of the negro problem in the South, but it does not go beyond the facts as they are universally admitted, and the characters shown include both good and bad negroes, just as they include both good and bad whites.

It would be ungracious and not entirely truthful to belittle the work of those who conceived and carried out the great spectacle by offering the criticism that the story of the play itself does not match in dignity the historic background utilized and the superb scale on which it has been depicted, but it is at least permissible to express the hope that Mr. Griffith will not rest content with this achievement, but will invest other worthwhile dramas with similarly appropriate and stupendous embellishments. "The Birth of a Nation" is a production that no devotee of the theatre can afford to miss, opening up as it does a conception of the boundless possibilities of an art which but a few years ago was regarded as a cheap, freakish and ephemeral form of entertainment. Perhaps, too, some Canadian will be inspired by this pictorial record of a great crisis in the history of a sister nation to find in the stirring events of these present days the material for a film epic which shall preserve for posterity somewhat of the spirit which is actuating the Dominion in its participation in the world war.

Manager Wright of the Princess Theatre is to be congratulated on the success with which he has overcome the mechanical difficulties incurred in changing the booking of "The Birth of a Nation" to the Arena. These included the installation in two hours yesterday of two transformers, a set of generators and a big switchboard.

MONTREAL (Canada) HERALD
SEPT. 28, 1915.

Film Play At Arena Was Fine

"The Birth of a Nation" Lived Up to its Advance Notices and Drew Big Audience

No production of the real or the pictured stage has so overwhelmingly lived up to its advance notices as has the "Birth of a Nation," shown in the Arena last night before a large crowd. The film is so stupendous and so realistic as to be a constant source of wonder to observers who follow it closely, that human ingenuity can produce it. Continually one is forced to marvel at the tremendous scale of operations as thrown on the screen and to most people the magnitude of the undertaking, from the point of view of cost and number of people engaged, is such that they can scarcely believe their eyes.

The same feeling of wonder possesses the observer from the point of view of the skill and ability shown by the actors and the reproduction of their work. Battle scenes with thousands of soldiers engaged, raised into the realm of the marvellous through the reality of their bayonet attacks, charges, artillery duels and the awful grandeur of battle at its mildest, feature the film throughout. The tragedy of war is brought home to observers in a way that, in Montreal at least, found many an aching heart responsive. As the story developed the same hearts fastened on the gallant members of the Ku Klux Klan as their heroes and the feelings of the times were readily given in the wild outburst of applause that greeted the white-clad riders in their work of protecting and saving their people.

American War Film.

The story deals, of course, with the American civil war and such characters as Lincoln, Grant, Lee, Booth, and others fill a prominent part. Being given from the southern point of view, the tendency naturally is to show the danger from the negro population, and here lies the source of the objection taken to the production by the negroes of Montreal and of several American cities. Fact is closely adhered to, however, and the sin of the producer undoubtedly is in being true to history. Even that, of course, is sufficient to cause some racial feeling, but that none is intended in the production is clear from the efforts made to show the progress made by the colored population of the United States in the years that have passed since the war which certainly were the birth pangs of a nation.

The pictures are presented faultlessly, this being a particular achievement in view of the fact that the Arena had to be fitted for the show after the fire in the Princess Theatre.

The sympathies of the audience are easily won to the heroes and heroines of the story, who are winsome an attractive in personal appearance and artistes of exceptional ability. The course of the proud Southern family as it is ruined through the Civil War and through the negro outbreaks and domination which succeeded the signing of peace, becomes a real story to the observer and the various scenes are carried out with such marvellous fidelity to brutal tragedy of the bloody rebellion kind, that it is marvellous how the actors themselves escaped death. The scenes follow one another in such rapid succession and variety that the imagination of the audience is strained to a point scarcely approached in presentations of actual tragedies. The deep misfortunes attending the pretty Southern girls and the brave young soldiers, becomes real to the observer and many in the house could not control their emotions. The faithfulness of the black help in the Southern home and the method of aiding their masters against their own black kindred, give relief and humor to the production.

BIRTH OF A NATION FILM IS SHOWN ON SCREEN AT ARENA

Remarkable Production, Based on "The Clansman," Attracts Many

A lesson in patriotism can be derived by all who visit the Arena this week and witness "The Birth of a Nation." Never before has it been so clearly demonstrated what war really is and what it really means as the picturization seen last night. The war scenes such as presented in "The Birth of a Nation," are indeed real. The film is from Dixon's book "The Clansman."

A feature of the production is the effects obtained by an orchestra of thirty musicians, under the direction of L. Dalby. The music, which was written specially for the production, is of a descriptive nature. The war scenes become more real under the treatment of the drums and bugle calls, while love scenes appeal to the heart with the aid of violin.

That the American nation was threatened through the liberation of the blacks in the South forms the theme of the photoplay, around which are built up two separate love stories. Each is treated by a master hand and is told in the highest picture form yet seen in Montreal.

Every passion which war brings forth is painted in vivid colors, love, hate, patriotism, forgiveness—all can be found in one or more of the various strong characters in the play.

The story commences with the beginning of the civil war, where the Cameron family send forth three sons to the front, two of whom are never to return. The first one, through acts of bravery, becomes known as the "Little Colonel." He and an old boarding school chum are fighting on opposite sides and each looks after the other in time of need. The father of the Unionist, Stoneman, is the Radical leader. He favors punishing the Southerners, but Lincoln then pronounces his famous words, "I shall treat them as though they had never gone away."

The assassination of Lincoln and the increasing of Stoneman's power give the blacks a chance to overrule the South. Many examples of the misuses which their power is put to by the blacks are shown and gives the Ku Klux clan an excuse for existence. The clan manages to realize its ambition and the general order of things is once more restored. The South rebuilds slowly but surely and becomes in reality a part of the American Nation. The "Birth of a Nation" has taken place and the spectators leave marvelling at the completeness and exactitude of the production.

SEPT. 29, 1915
[illegible]BURG (Pa.) POST

Theater Memoranda

"The Birth of a Nation," now in the fifth week of its successful run at the Nixon Theater, is a photo spectacle of American history which makes an indelible impression on all. Running through the historical scenes are two romantic love episodes, taken from Thomas Dixon's famous stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

The properties used in the William Fox Film Corporation's production of "Sin," the photoplay in which Theda Bara is shown at the Grand Opera House next week, includes a wide range of articles from an Italian necklace of gayly colored stones to an oceangoing steamer.

The photoplay attraction at Schenley Theater tomorrow is "Simon, the Jester," with Edward Jose in the leading role. Friday "Via Wireless" will be shown, and Saturday "The Flash of an Emerald."

MANCHESTER (N. H.) LEADER
SEPT. 23, 1915.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" A REAL MASTERPIECE

Portrays American History of the '60's in Most Vivid Manner

Press agents apparently have not overdone their duty or used too superlative language in their endeavors to attract attention to the great film production, "The Birth of a Nation," which yesterday opened a week's engagement at the Auditorium theatre. Large crowds sat through the three hours which it takes to run off the reels with keen enjoyment and without weariness.

The story has to do with the Civil war and the terrible days through which the South passed during the re-construction period. One of its virtues is its strict adherence to fact as handed down by authorities. Not only that but it furnishes an excellent opportunity for one to brush up his history of the nation during the middle of the 19th century, and get a few details which are ordinarily overlooked.

Intertwined is the inevitable love story, having to do with two families, one that of a northern statesman, a leader in congress who comes into power following the assassination of Lincoln. He advocates equal rights and is instrumental in instigating the infamous carpet baggers. He comes to a sudden realization of his wrong when a mulatto, whom he has encouraged, seeks his beautiful daughter in marriage. The other is a true old southern family which sends three sons to war and suffers the death of a daughter, pursued by a vicious negro.

Of course the story ends happily, that is, as far as the love theme is concerned. But the merit of the picture lies in its potent argument against war. One cannot help but realize, after seeing this masterpiece of the film world, the utter futility of war.

The picture is in every respect ambitious. Every scene appears to be on a scale which indicates no reservation of time, energy or expense. The battle scenes are magnificent in their reality and stupendity. The costuming is seemingly perfect, careful attention being given to the minutest detail of dress and setting.

The advent of the Ku Klux Klan, which sprang up to down the negro's growing insolence and overriding, injected an element which was dramatic, inspiring and at the same time awesome.

One gets a reminder of the asmosphere that is coming upon entering the back of the screen and an orchestra. The music was a veritable melange, an assembling of melodies from scores of operas and songs, but at the same time in true operatic fashion it followed the emotion depicted upon the screen.

One got a reminder of the atmosphere that was coming upon entering the theater by being greeted by program maidens, garbed in the costume of the South during the war period. The interior of the theater is lavishly decorated with the [illegible]

CLIPPING FROM Press
Date Rutland Mail
9-29-15

this week.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS BIG CROWDS AT THE KEITH THEATRE

The enthusiastic greeting which the great motion picture play "The Birth of a Nation" is receiving during its return engagement at Keith's this week makes it evident that Manager Harry Smith made a popular move when he secured a second presentation of this triumph of motion picture photography. Despite the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" played Portland an entire week before, drawing record houses for each performance, there seem to be hundreds of Portland people who either have not seen it or are anxious to view it once again.

And in very truth "The Birth of a Nation" is a motion picture drama that will bear repetition more than once. So wonderful is it from a spectacular standpoint, so realistically have the various scenes been staged, so gripping is the story, so dramatic the situations, that an auditor must needs view it breathless with suspense and emotion. It is a picture that brings tears to the eyes of the hardiest, for no one can watch these great scenes depicting the throes of that great struggle for national supremacy, the Civil war, and remain unmoved. With such cunning and craft are the scenes staged that it is impossible to realize that after all they are merely pictures, and that the men and women taking part in them are actors, and are not moved to the depths of their being by the horrors that are transpiring around them.

"The Birth of a Nation," as those who are at all familiar with the history of the film, and who is not? are aware, is an adaptation of Thomas Dixon's famous story "The Clansman." It has to do not only with the period of the Civil war, with the great battles that were waged between the Blue and the Gray, with Sherman's triumphal march to the sea, and Lee's surrender at Appamattox, but with the still bitterer, although less spectacular struggles of the Reconstruction period. There is a scene depicting the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's theatre, scenes innumerable illustrating how the carpet-baggers and other unscrupulous men of their ilk maneuvered Southern politics, scenes showing the secret rites of the Ku Klux clan, scenes in which wild night rides of the clansmen play a part, scenes of riot and rebellion, and then the final great battle between clansmen and negroes with its victory for the clansmen.

With these tremendous, spectacular scenes are interwoven other scenes which carry the story of the drama to its climax, scenes depicting incidents in the individual lives of the characters, which are no less engrossing than the incidents in which hundreds of actors participate.

These pictures telling the actual story of "The Clansmen" are followed by others showing what a tremendous growth and change of ideals there has been in the South since the days of the Reconstruction period, so that all in all the picture has a decided educational value. The incidental music is another feature that must be dewlt upon, and that is as invaluable an adjunct to the story picturization as are the films themselves. Without this music, so wonderfully adapted to the tenor of the pictures, the battle scenes would lose a great deal of their weight and convincing quality. This incidental music by an augmented orchestra is a decided factor in the appeal of "The Birth of a Nation."

Staged by David W. Griffiths, one of the wizards of the motion picture world, this great film drama represents practically a new standard of achievement in motion picture photography. It is a photo drama that everyone should see, and that will undoubtedly draw tremendous [illegible] to the Keith all this week.

RUTLAND (Vt.) HERALD
SEPT. 29, 1915

friend, [illegible] cured. And the friend, [illegible] whom the plan had been arranged, only needed shaving materials to uncover the secret message.—London Standard.

AT THE PLAYHOUSE.

Mary Marsh, the pretty little Miss who plays the part of Flora, the pet sister, in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Playhouse has arranged for two thousand feet of film, all scenes in which she is the central figure, to be printed for her and put away. She declares that on her 16th birthday this film will be opened, provided she lives 40 years longer, at a birthday gathering of all her old and new friends, and they will then have the pleasure of seeing her just as she was in her youth. Of course, this is a jolly idea; but will Miss Marsh be able to overcome the natural curiosity of woman and not steal a look at the film before the scheduled date?—adv.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM
SEPT. 29, 1915

SOME FACTS ABOUT "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Cost $500,000 to Produce—Over 1,500,000 Have Seen It During Short Career.

"The Birth of a Nation," a historical film that has attracted national attention and which is soon to be shown at Poli's theatre in this city, is the result of a gigantic enterprise. The following facts and figures give a faint idea of the magnitude of the task imposed on those who were instrumental in its promotion.

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty theatre, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont theatre, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois theatre, Chicago, Ill., starting June 6; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also 17 weeks in Los Angeles and 18 weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expenses, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, two hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil war re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes, 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5.-000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 a piece were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty-foot cars to transport equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousands distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times, but has been approved by every Board of Censors in the United States and by scores and scores of the most prominent United States senators and representatives, governors of states, judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfted those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines equisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation reborn" as the result of the war between th states and reconstruction.

BRIDGEPORT (Ct.) FARMER
SEPT. 29, 1915

Worcester Passes "Birth of a Nation"

Resident Manager Matt Saunders of Poli's theatre and Compensation Commissioner E. T. Buckingham motored to Providence yesterday and saw "The Birth of a Nation." They were guests of Louis B. Mayer, president of the American Feature Film Co., who also entertained the board of censors from Worcester, Mass.

The Worcester censors visited Providence at the request of Manager Frank Whitbeck, of Poli's theatre, that city, as "The Birth of a Nation" is booked there after its appearance here next week.

Mayor George M. Wright, chairman of Worcester's board of censors, said the production will be allowed in that city. He maintained that it was of educational value, from a historical viewpoint, and that it was of immense dramatic interest.

CLIPPING FROM Expressdale
Date Portland Me
9-29-15

[illegible] open on Monday, Oct. 4. There are still a few boxes left.—Advertisement.

BIRTH OF A NATION.

At first sight it seems incredible that the production The Birth of a Nation now being presented at the B. F. Keith Theater should have taken such a wonderful hold on the public. No play of any description has visited Portland in years, if ever before, that has drawn from the outset greater concourses of people. There is scarcely a human being old enough to know anything, but has heard of The Birth of a Nation and has been curious to witness it.

But after viewing the performance, quite a few reasons are apparent for its popularity. In the first place it is the acme of screen spectacles up to the present time. The groupings of the various scenes, the training of the participants and the realisms of the episodes, are marvelous examples of stage management, while the clearness and lack of flickering, almost makes the spectator forget it is not living, throbbing life that is being viewed.

The scenes portraying the assassination of Lincoln are, in many respects the most wonderful, for all the actors by their facial expressions and movements play a congruous part. In New York the spectacle created a sensation just as it has in Boston, not only from the interesting nature of the subject but the manner in which it is presented.

Various novelties are introduced on the stage in conjunction with the production and a Symphony Orchestra of 20 men offer a musical backing for the masterpiece that makes it triply effective.

A small army of effect-workers are employed on the stage, under the direction of one man who by a system of red and green lights signals the different men when to start and just when to stop any given effect. That is why the patrons will marvel at the wonderful syncronism of effects as the varying scenes are flashed before them. No big stage production that has ever appeared in this City in times past has been given a more minute attention to every little detail than is exercised in this marvelous screen triumph. There are two performances daily at B. F. Keith's at 2 and 8 p. m.—Advertisement.

WORCESTER (Mass.) GAZETTE
SEPT. 29, 1915

BIRTH OF NATION MAY SHOW HERE

Mayor Wright Sees Nothing Objectionable in Picture In Providence

Mayor George M. Wright, on his return last night from Providence, where he viewed a production of the moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," said he sees nothing objectionable about the film, and he will offer no objection to its being shown in Worcester.

The Mayor was accompanied on the trip yesterday by Street Commissioner Albert T. Rhodes and George C. Halcott, superintendent of buildings, both of whom are members of the License Board, and they saw nothing about the picture that struck them as objectionable. Private Secretary John W. Odlin also accompanied the party.

The film has been barred in Springfield by Mayor Stacey of that city, and a lively controversy has arisen, in which some of the opponents of Mayor Stacey claim he stopped it to corral the vote of the colored population at the coming city election.

BOSTON TRAVELER
OCT. 1, 1915

[illegible] three parts of [illegible] "Experience," is [illegible] and the Man in [illegible] his a Boston college boy who [illegible] studies to go on the stage. His sister Miriam Collins is at present leading woman for William Hodge in "The Road to Happiness," and his brother, William, is at Harvard.

WHEN "The Birth of a Nation" leaves the Majestic it will be followed on Nov. 1 by another film play, "The Battle Cry of Peace." The picture is based on Hudson Maxim's book, "Defenceless America," and was written by Commodore Blackton. It urges national preparedness as a safeguard against war; it issues a call to arms to prevent war. The scenes show New York city, invaded by a powerful foe, helpless and plundered. Buildings crumble under the fire of great guns; women and children are captured to die horrible deaths. Theatrical realism is said to go farther than it has ever gone before. Charles Richman has the leading role and Joseph Kilgour plays George Washington—probably either an apparition or a reincarnation.

RUTLAND (Vt) HERALD 787
SEPT. 29, 1915

The Herald is the only newspaper in Southern Vermont that receives the full report of the Associated Press by special wire.

HERALD TELEPHONE NUMBERS:
Editorial Rooms 63
Business Department 53

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1915.

GATES AGAIN, WHY?

The fairly constant mention of the name of Governor Charles W. Gates as a possible candidate for re-nomination inspires the query: Why?

It is not denied that the incumbent of the office has made a fairly good governor. It is certain that he has succeeded in steering a most sagacious course of compromise through some fairly acute state crises. It is further conceded that he is popular, of high personal character and possessed of a special knowledge of highway matters.

Comparing Governor Gates with past governors of a decade or so, one might say that he resembles Charles J. Bell in many respects, but has never been put to the test in anything so widely pulsed as the Mary Rogers case.

He has not the ability and courage characteristic of Fletcher D. Proctor but has much of his diplomacy in handling men, lacking, however, the directness and force of the latter. He has not a successful business career behind him like George H. Prouty and John Abner Mead and lacks the personality of John G. McCullough.

Where William W. Stickney and Allen M. Fletcher were austere and prone to make enemies by uncompromising convictions, Governor Gates has an agreeable way of avoiding controversial issues or "passing the buck" to some one else.

In another two years he might very likely master the broader phases of state problems which now receive little of his attention, but one would hardly expect him to be a leader in the various developments of the public business which are certain to confront another legislature.

The Herald has no particular respect for the "mountain rule," but submits that it is there and the man who breaks it will need to be something exceptional. The principal question is: Does the conjunction of public need and personal fitness exist to the point of demanding a renomination for Governor Gates?

The Film and the Fact.

Wherever "The Birth of a Nation" is shown, a revival of historical argument, dealing with reconstruction days, is certain. The principal allegation against the great Griffith work is that it is false history, especially in relation to the negro domination of the South and the provocation of the whites which resulted in the lawless Ku-Klux Klans.

Let it be conceded that the film, based on the novel of a notorious partisan, Thomas Dixon, jr., is deftly exaggerated for dramatic effect, just as Dixon exaggerated the situation of the whites in his book.

The white members of the celebrated "negro" legislature were more than a mere handful, as shown in the film. The proportion was 85 blacks and 72 whites, according to the American encyclopedia. It would hardly be possible, however, to exaggerate the fantastic scenes of that body.

Professor E. Benjamin Andrews of Brown university, says, in "The Last Quarter Century:"

Black legislatures abused their power, becoming instruments of carpet-bag leaders and rings in robbing white property-holders. . . . So soon as the federal bayonets were gone, fair means or foul were certain to remove the sceptre from colored hands. Precisely this happened.

In the same work appears an illustration, drawn by W. R. Leigh, showing the South Carolina legislature passing an appropriation bill. The scene in the Griffith film might well have been based on this picture, as it even shows the incident of the "member from Ulster" with his feet on the desk.

There is a reproduction of a bill for new state-house furnishings amounting to $17,465, and Professor Andrews says further:

The colored legislators of South Carolina furnished the State House with gorgeous clocks at $480 each, mirrors at $750 and chandeliers at $650. Their own apartments were a barbaric display of gewgaws, carpets and upholstery.

The author quotes the words of an eye-witness, who described the bedlam which reigned, and the crowd of open-mouthed negroes in the gallery. He continues:

There were said to be in South Carolina alone, in November, 1874, 200 negro trial justices who could neither read nor write, also negro school commissioners equally ignorant, receiving a thousand a year each, while negro juries, deciding delicate points of legal evidence, settled questions involving lives and property.

The Herald finds no reference to a negro lieutenant-governor, but W. Beverly Nash, a black senator, said in public:

"The reformers complain of taxes too high. I tell you they are not high enough. I want them (the white property-holders) taxed until they put those lands back where they belong, into the hands of those who worked for them. You worked for them; you labored for them and were sold to pay for them, and you ought to have them."

As Professor Andrews says, it was inevitable that the white men of the South would not long tolerate such conditions, and the Ku-Klux was the result. Naturally, also, both Mr. Dixon and Mr. Griffith have selected the heyday of the Klan for their purposes. It is the death of romance to say so, but the later exploits of the masked clansmen were not quite so creditable. In fact, the strong arm of federal authority was finally invoked to suppress them and stop their outrages.

Right here the discussion impinges on the present, because a burning question in the South today is the further enfranchisement of the negro, still out-numbering the white man in many communities and still with his potentialties for misused power.

"The Birth of a Nation" represents a South that is not typical of today, but that it vividly depicts a phase of the darker days of reconstruction would seem to be pretty firmly established.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) STANDARD 99
SEPT. 29, 1915

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) POST 98
SEPT. 29, 1915

149

Realized

FORD THEATRE SCENE WITH ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S DEATH

JOSEPH HENEBERY AS ABRAHAHAM LINCOLN.

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustrated by the Ford's theatre scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

The old fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's theatre in April, 1865 but also the auditorium of the theatre, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the box draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is meant by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous art achievements of the film drama.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM 10
SEPT. 29, 1915

IS PLEASING EPISODE IN 'THE BIRTH OF A NATION'

Love of Elsie Stoneman and Wounded Rebel Officer Gives Lillian Gish Fine Chance.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" coming to Poli's theater next Monday, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in any scenes. The eyes before the camera are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm, at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War and Reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of Reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish has hardly an idle moment.

PLAYS ELSIE STONEMAN IN "BIRTH OF NATION.'

LILLIAN GISH.

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) EAGLE
Date .....
SEP 30 1915

FILM NEWS —IN— SHORT REELS

FF

Only six more performances of D. W. Griffiths' "Birth of a Nation" will be given at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. Since the presentation of the picture history of the Civil War period more than 320,000 persons have seen it at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The last performance will be given Saturday night.

chau, have been supplied.

LOCAL MEN SEE FILM IN PROVIDENCE

E. T. Buckingham and Poli's Manager Witness Production With Censors.

Compensation Commissioner Edward T. Buckingham and Matt Saunders, manager of Poli's theatre, attended a showing of the film, "A Birth of a Nation" yesterday at Providence, together with several members of the Worcester, Mass., board of censors.

Included in the Worcester party were Mayor George M. Wright, Chief of Police George A. Hill, George C. Halkott, chairman of the city license committee, and Albert T. Rhodes, all whom attended at the request of Manager Frank Whittbeck, of Poli's theatre in Worcester.

After seeing the picture, Mayor Wright said that it was all right and that as it would be a good thing from a historical and educational standpoint, it would be shown in Worcester after it is brought from Bridgeport at the end of next week.

BRIDGEPORT (Ct.) FARMER
SEPT. 29, 1915

WHOLE ARMIES USED TO PRODUCE BATTLES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through the valley, in struggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to same household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, dear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the South. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Apomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

CLIPPING FROM Press
Date Portland Me
9-30-15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT KEITH'S.

In all things there is always one best and to that one best all others of its kind are compared. In screen spectacles that one best is admitted and proclaimed throughout the world to be D. W. Griffith's grand triumph of the camera, "The Birth of a Nation" now showing twice daily at the B. F. Keith Theatre. It is the most stupendous and glorious spectacle ever presented and will undoubtedly be the pinacle of film art for the next twenty years to come. Because of the wonderful success of "The Birth of a Nation" others have sought subjects to exploint coupled with the names of great operatic and dramatic stars at $2 top prices, but to get a dramatic subject so vital and interesting to the people of America is next to an impossibility. The most tremendous and critical time in the history of the United States is the Civil war and the days of reconstruction. "Quo Vadis," "The Fall of Pompeii," "Carmen," "Cabiaria" and others may be interesting, fine photographically and serve to present an epoch or a star, but they are not vital to the citizens of today, the subject has not the punch, has not the dramatic importance to modern life as does the vital issues of "The Birth of a Nation" which has made the United States of America the God's country of today.

There is only one "The Birth of a Nation" and the place to see it is at the B. F. Keith Theatre, where the individual comfort is so well looked after in the finest appointed theatre in the State of Maine.

KEITH VAUDEVILLE NEXT WEEK.

The theatregoing pulic in general wanted a two a day vaudeville at B. F. Keith's, if the scores of requests for this popular brand of amusement received by the management may be taken as a criterion. Portland showed unmistakably by the failure of the Portland Players and the heavy losses of the Keith dramatic stock that permanent stock has been overdone in this City and that the majority of people want a change. Musical stock has also been a failure from a financial standpoint, both at the Cape and in town. Vaudeville of the big time, two a day variety rules the day.

And commencing next Monday's matinee B. F. Keith vaudeville, a $1 show in value will be offered for the approval of local theatregoers for ten, twenty and thirty cents. This is done to meet popular demand for a price within the reach of all. With the capacity of the B. F. Keith Theatre it is possible to give Portland the best of big time vaudeville at ten, twenty and thirty cents if the public do their share and patronize it.

The headline act for the opening week will be the greatest minstrel act in vaudeville, the late George Evans' Honey Boy Minstrels condensed from the best features of the big $2 show which toured the country into half an hour of splendid vaudeville. There will be six other acts of National reputation. Watch the papers for the [illegible]

LEWISTON (Maine) SUN
SEPT. 29, 1915

beauty and massiveness it has never been approached in the whole history of the American stage.—adv.

FF

"The Birth of a Nation" at Empire

With the approach of half a century after the actual scenes of the Civil War, this highest developement of the motion picture art bears a keen relationship to current events. Aside from its dramatic appeal and poetic flight it brings back to a younger generation with a new-born realism the things which our fathers and grandfathers went through that out of the travail could come the Nation we are so proud of today. It is not a case of opening old wounds but is art suggestive, the highest form of art to point out to us the mistakes and misunderstandings of the past that we may face the crisis of the present with a calmness and determination to uphold the right. The dramatic form has often been employed by the greatest minds of the world to express underlined truths and as regards the usages and the sufferings of war, no pen has been able to make as impressive a picture as Griffith has encompassed in this masterpiece. He masses great armies upon a historic plane to reproduce the records of a mighty struggle and by the human interests of two damilies makes a great nations efforts a topic of a dramatic construction which appeals to the heart and the sympathies as no bald narrative of facts could hope to do.

"The Birth of a Nation" is well worth while and when one has witnessed it it is easy to understand why it has created such a gigantic stir. The engagement of this greatest of all film spectacles opens at the Empire theatre next Monday for the entire week.—adv.

KEENE (N. H.) SENTINEL
SEPT. 29, 1915

438

names having been added to the membership lately.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Famous Photoplay Presented at the Scenic Theatre Thursday.

D. W. Griffith's famous photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," which is described as a two-act historical drama based on the novel "The Clansman" by Thomas Dixon, was given its first presentation at the Scenic theatre Thursday. In the afternoon the attendance was rather small and it was only fair in the evening, but Friday and Saturday the audiences were large.

The play was produced by a very fine cast and the pictures taken in true to life surroundings, while the number taking part is large. Some of the scenes are very beautiful others are very terrible. The music furnished by the company's special orchestra of a dozen or more pieces, is a feature of the show.

The story told is that of the Union, told from a Southern standpoint. Comes the Civil war, when the Camerons fight for the South and the Stonemans, their friends, are arrayed against them. After the war, Stoneman, the country's radical power following Lincoln's assassination, tries to make the Blacks rule the Whites. The Ku Klux Klan springs from the brain of the oldest Cameron boy and comes to the rescue, finally aiding Stoneman and his daughter, who are beset by the mulatto political leader Stoneman has set up. The Stonemans and Camerons—what are left of them—are reunited.

The first part of the play, which takes the situation from just before the war through the assassination of Lincoln, is probably true enough to life, but it seemed to many who saw the picture that the second part, which covers the "Carpetbag" days in the South, the ravages of the Blacks, etc., was highly exaggerated.

From a mechanical and spectacular standpoint "The Birth of a Nation" is nothing less than wonderful. As regards any other standpoint opinion must vary greatly with the sympathies and emotions of those who see it.

CLIPPING FROM Press
Portland Me
9-30-15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT KEITH'S.

FF

In all things there is always one best and to that one best all others of its kind are compared. In screen spectacles that one best is admitted and proclaimed throughout the world to be D. W. Griffith's grand triumph of the camera, "The Birth of a Nation" now showing twice daily at the B. F. Keith theatre. The most tremendous and critical time in the history of the United States is the civil war and the days of reconstruction.

Anyone who doubts the patriotism of Americans should see the audiences, day after day, rise as one to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," and here the cheers that the battle scenes provoke. A more stupendous, overwhelming, blood-stirring and inspiring production has never before been conceived. Portland theatregoers realize this great opportunity and already 38,000 citizens of the Forest city have attended Keith's during the first week and the present week's engagement. Mail orders are coming in from all the surrounding country. Fathers and mothers come up to the box office and frequently buy as many as six tickets for their own and friends' school children. As an educational feature and a truthful representation of history, this great photo-drama has no equal.

This film spectacle is not only a photo-drama in the ordinary sense, but it is also a mighty panorama and pictorial exposition of the most vital points of American history which are particularly interesting to Americans now on account of the threatened complications with the warring European powers. Super-added to history is a delightful love romance of the North and South, while the whole is lit up and made fascinating by Mr. Griffith's remarkable gift of quiet humor and keen eye for the slightest significant detail.

As a work of art it is wonderful and so beautiful and so full of life that it robs one of the power of criticism. It is a great work, first, last and all the time, and it stamps David W. Grifith as a master artist in whom the power of visual interpretation reaches a height that cannot easily be comprehended at one sitting. There is no drama, moving picture, opera or spectacle now before the American public in active operation or contemplated production which is half as stirring or stupendous or nearly as costly to produce as "The Birth of a Nation." It is the picture par excellance, the standard by which all other pictures must be measured, the criterion of criterions for expert criticism.

The demand for seats for the balance of the week indicates that again capacity attendance is to be the rule and that there will be many disappointed if they do not make early reservations. Two-thirds the population of Portland have seen this great picture and it looks as if Biddeford, Saco, Falmouth, Yarmouth and places as far away as Buxton, Bridgton and Sanford are sending large parties to see this great spectacle for reservations are being received from these towns and cities.

LEWISTON (Maine) SUN
SEPT. 30, 1915

—adv.

FF

"The Birth of a Nation" Next Week

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the establishment of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a first class theatrical attraction which has been crowding the houses all over the country at "two dollar top" prices.

"The Birth of a Nation" which will be shown at the Empire starting next Monday, Oct. 4 and continuing for the rest of the week is indeed more than a film, for nearly one hundred people are employed in the music and mechanical effects during the unreeling of this 12,000 feet of celluloid, yet never a word is spoken from the stage during the two and three-quarters hours performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of reconstruction days with a love romance of the North and South. The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Grifith clan and realism, are particularly effective.

After seeing this marvelous production, many students of the subject predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than words. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay in so far as spectacular features are concerned.

A few years ago we were wont to hear of films or photoplays as being "in their infancy." But "The Birth of a Nation" may be said to be the full grown adult of that infant, for it is hard to conceive of a greater achievement in moving picture [illegible]

The marvelous scenes simply astound the spectator, they thrill him again and again with their magnitude, dash and realistic detail. Scenes are projected upon the screen that would seem almost impossible to produce, yet they are shown and because Mr. Griffith's master mind has made these wonders possible he has been placed in the list of a very few who are claimed to be "underpaid at $100,000 a year." Seat sale opens today.—adv.

HARTFORD (Conn.) COURANT
Sept. 30, 1915

meeting upon the day set apart for holy and sacred purposes is certainly a misuse of the day. We will believe those are members of the democratic party, to whom such an innovation is offensive! Man's zeal—to be effective must always be in obedience to God's commands.

Hartford, Sept. 27. A. D. C.

On "The Birth of a Nation."

To the Editor of The Courant:—

"The Birth of a Nation" is showing in New York, going on two years and in Boston about four months, where the mayor won't even allow barefoot dancing on the stage. The much talked of play "Sapho" was played here as well as "Three Weeks." An ex-mayor let the play "The Clansman" come so I don't see how the present mayor could have the heart to stop "The Birth of a Nation" being shown here, as long as the burlesque shows are permitted, which are degrading. I think if there are to be any race riots here it would be if the folks see "Uncle Tom's Cabin" many more times as played by the road companies outside of the Poli's Stock Company.

Frank Kort[illegible]

September 29.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
SEPT. 30, 1915

to the allegorical play, "The Victory," to be seen for the first time at the Toy this evening.

It is unlikely that "The Passing Show of 1915," the current entertainment at the Winter Garden in New York, will be seen in Boston for some months. It is to be transferred first to Chicago "for a run" and then "out East" again.

The Majestic, it seems, is to house pictures for a while after "The Birth of a Nation" fades from its stage at the end of next month. To it will succeed another "photo-spectacle" on a similarly large and vivid scale, "The Battle Cry of Peace," a pictorial parable of preparedness for war, with illustrations from the history of the United States and from an imaginary conquest and sacking of New York by an enemy. As "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Battle Cry of Peace" have equally proved, spectacle on a huge scale is a true field for the films.

MANCHESTER (N. H.) UNION
SEPT. 30, 1915

53

murder [illegible] against them.

REFINED COMEDY IN "BIRTH OF NATION"

A great deal of film comedy is horse play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old-style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-mile away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil war portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil war type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costumes of Civil war and Reconstruction times that are heir-looms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born, and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

RUTLAND (Vt.) HERALD
SEPT. 30, 1915

AUDIENCES INCREASING.

"Birth of a Nation" is Drawing Large Houses at Playhouse.

The largest audiences of the week witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Playhouse yesterday, and the advance sales for today's performances indicate another big house this afternoon and evening. Although the houses are getting larger as the week goes on, the management states that so far there are seats for all who desire to see the Griffith film.

So far, no criticism has been heard of the film story, with the exception of the public address of Dr. De Berry, and much comment has been made on the parts of the drama censored out in Boston and other cities. Patrons of the theater who have seen both versions say the full version is much more artistic and less suggestive than the mutilated film.

The answer of the Griffith people to the charge that the play misrepresents the negro is that it attempts to show the South of 1865 and thenceforward, not the South of today.

The big production, with its accompanying music and realistic battle-sounds, will be shown the rest of the week, twice a day.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) POST
SEPT. 30, 1915

98

14

KNOWN AS THE GIRL WITH THE THOUSAND FACES

MAE MARSH CLEVER.

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at Poli's next week, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the younger sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her face is better konwn than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
OCT. 1, 1915

[illegible] Britain, Ct., H. H. [illegible] W. A. Lincoln, C. C. Crocker, W. H. Dexter, A. A. Packard, G. D. Chamberlain, G. C. Baldwin, Dr W. F. Andrews and Dr L. L. Doggett of this city.

THE PHOTOPLAY APPROVED

How It Impressed a Man of New England Family and Education—The Defect Which He Deplores

To the Editor of The Republican:—

As a transient visitor to Springfield for a few hours I feel compelled, while waiting for the train, to express the other side of the subject to your editorial, "It Should Not be Allowed." You refer to the picture-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," as "notorious," "pernicious in its influence," in a class with "disreputable resorts," and appeal to a sense of "decency" to prohibit its production. I assume that your editorial writer has never seen this play, and speaks of it from hearsay.

I have seen it in Chicago, and though a New Englander of the abolition family of Fosters, and a Negro sympathizer by education and instinct, I must say I believe you are utterly mistaken as to the character of this production.

The consensus of opinion of the critics in whom I have confidence is that this is the greatest achievement of the new art of picture drama. Effects are produced which raise the cheap "movie" to the level of the legitimate stage.

We all know the historical truth about the disgraceful "carpet-bag governments" which the North in sheer stupidity imposed upon the South after the war, and the hard and forbidding character of some New England statesmen. We also know that the Negro has vices and criminal instincts just as white men have. Only a sentimentalist, it seems to me, would object to the sincere artistic presentation of those historical facts and the dramatic portrayal of those criminal instincts.

When I viewed "The Birth of a Nation" with my English wife, neither she nor I saw anything but natural human drama, unexaggerated—drama, it is true, from the viewpoint of the South, but all the more welcome to me as a New Englander because I had found it hard to appreciate the southern side of the question. And I did feel sympathetically for the first time, without any revulsion, the reasonableness of the southern attitude.

The worst thing about it is that it fails to combine with the southern point of view a sympathetic presentation of the Negro point of view. But may we not leave that to another picture-drama as great in its art as "The Birth of a Nation"?

SHERWIN CODY.

MANCHESTER (N. H.) LEADER
SEPT. 30, 1915

[illegible] giving valuable hints to [illegible] home dressmaker.

Pattern Department,
The Manchester Union-Leader,
Manchester, N. H.

"BIRTH OF NATION" COMEDY IS CLEAN

A great deal of film comedy is horse play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation" proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old-style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-mile away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil war portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil war type.

WALTHAM (Mass.) FREE PRESS
SEPT. 30, 1915

913

FILM PLAY IN 26th WEEK

"Birth of a Nation" Still Draws Many

All records theatrically, have been smashed completely by D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic Theatre, Boston. In number of weeks this attraction completes in Boston one solid half year of consecutive performances, for this is the 26th week of its stay. It is the more remarkable if one stops to consider that the most of this time has been through the summer months when theatres are closed as a rule. It is well known theatrical history by this time that after a run of 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" was obliged to leave this playhouse, on account of the opening of the regular season on Labor Day, and a new home was found at the Majestic in order to meet the very pronounced public demand for a continuance of the Boston engagement.

And still the crowds flock to the Majestic Theatre, Boston, to enthuse over these realistic scenes of the ante-bellum days, the Civil War and the reconstruction period. The 27th week will begin at the Majestic next [illegible] afternoon, Oct. 4.

BOSTON ADVERTISER
OCT. 2, 1915

[illegible] DeCoe, that daring balancer with the pile of tables and chairs, and others.

Majestic Theatre

Entering, on Monday next, the beginning of its second half year in Boston, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic Theatre continues to hold undiminished the popular interest, which, in spite of the phenomenally long run, is marked by big audiences at every afternoon and evening performance. Saturday marked the completion of the 312th consecutive presentation of the Griffith spectacle in this city, a figure hitherto never approached by any theatrical attraction whatever in Boston. To date, upwards of 250,000 people of this vicinity have seen the production, yet, judging by the capacity houses of last week, as many more are anxious to witness it before the termination of its limited engagement.

BURLINGTON (Vt.) FREE PRESS
SEPT. 30, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," the sensational and spectacular Griffith production of the Civil War period, in twelve parts, based on the book "The Clansman" breathes the spirit of that well-known work. The two great outstanding features of it are its controversial spirit and splendor, and the magnificence of its production. Taken as a whole it is the most tremendous offering ever projected.

The greatness of the production is in its spectacular points and the historical reproductions, yet so clearly defined is the drama and so very carefully presented that it grips the audience hard. The appeal is far-reaching and there probably never has been a production offered to the American public that can approach the "swing" of its powerful "pull" or sometimes almost uncanny reproductions of historical scenes. From a technical viewpoint it may be placed upon a pedestal by itself. Nothing approaching "The Birth of a Nation" as a spectacle has ever been seen in Burlington. It is a magnificent production, wonderful in its scope, dramatic to a degree in its construction, faithful in detail and convincing in its argument. Those who may feel inclined to take offense at alleged incidents of half a century ago, and find it difficult to square such offenses with latter day conditions, should bear in mind that the traitor, Arnold, of the Revolution, was the same Arnold who, as the daring "rider of the black horse," was the hero of the siege of Quebec.

Beginning with the troublous times just preceding the Civil War "The Birth of a Nation" takes us through that awful struggle, culminating in the assassination of Lincoln, into and through the reconstruction period, which has been classed by many as the darkest period of United States history.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at The Strong for four days, beginning October 4. Seat sale opens to-day.

ITTSBURG (Pa.) PRESS
OCT. 1, 1915

Journal.

UNUSUALLY FINE ACTING IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation" now in the midst of a record

MIRIAM COOPER,
At the Nixon, Oct. 4.

breaking run at the Nixon, is the unusual quality of the acting under the direction of David W. Griffith.

Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, "the little Confederate colonel," is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and the Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all delightful feminine portrayals.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
OCT. 2, 1915

SAW "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Believes West Springfield Would Do Well to Allow Its Presentation

To the Editor of The Republican:—

The strange contest waged here as to whether or not the remarkable photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," shall be presented in West Springfield town hall is both amusing and interesting. It brings out many odd human characteristics, chief among which is the keenness of so many who ought to be broader minded than to jump at conclusions quite before they have any accurate information on a publicly-discussed topic like this. Others of a yet weaker type or for reasons more or less obvious are prone to be of the "follow-the-leader" variety. Why should this play be censored because Springfield has happened to object to it? Why have so many people the idea that criticism of something one hasn't seen is of any material weight or value? Few if any photo-plays ever presented in Springfield can be compared from an artistic standpoint, or even in magnitude, with "The Birth of a Nation." This great dramatic production contains none of the vapidness, vulgarity or idle sensationalism seen all too often in the average motion-picture theater. It is intensely patriotic, thoroughly historical, and, possessing such attributes, cannot fail to be educational, too! As a public school teacher, I am frank to say that I particularly regret that there is a chance that all the upper grade and high school pupils of this town may not have full opportunity of seeing and profiting by it.

After seeing and enjoying this photo-play in Boston a few weeks ago my sentiments toward the colored race were by no means lowered or impaired. Considering the fact that guerrillas and carpet-baggers in the South are factors in the play,—the presentation of the Negro puts him unquestionably on a par with the Aryan. Much emphasis is placed upon the faithfulness and sincerity in the Negro character, and prominence is given to the Hampton institute scenes and the tremendously potent industrial work there being actually accomplished. The Negroes everywhere should be asked to realize that this magnificent photo-play makes vividly obvious the astonishing steps they have taken along industrial and educational lines since their emancipation a few decades ago. No play ever yet presented anywhere arouses a stronger feeling of sympathy or admiration for the patience, the courage or the progress made by the true manhood of the South, white and black.

The audience applauded as vigorously the courageous Confederates gallantly leading forlorn hopes at Gettysburg as it did the great and decisive victories of the Union side in the great controversy. All must agree that the picture was an inspiration and a great lesson in the larger patriotism to all who saw it, and illustrated as few sermons or books have ever done the glory of a reunited country,—a firmer welding of North and South, and the establishment more sure than ever of the universal brotherhood which all true patriots ought and do desire.

The intention of its authors, unquestionably, was to show the awfulness and wickedness of a state of war, and the dire consequences, in this age surely, ought to be impressed upon the minds of every young and growing mind. What period more than that of the civil war could be selected which more vitally interest American citizenship with such an object in view? If critics (especially the many who haven't yet had the privilege of seeing it) only realized that this photo-play is one of the most powerful peace advocates ever yet launched, and besides is of great educational value and a patriotic inspiration also, they would hesitate long before placing any sort of ban upon it.

MARION LOOMIS ASCHENBACH.
West Springfield, October 1, 1915.

Ev. Ledger Art

Interviewing the Uninterviewable

One advantage that the motion-picture actress has is that she is not pestered for interviews in every city in which her picture is seen.

The movie actress can give out what she pleases—or what her press agent pleases—at the studio once and for all, and is not bothered on the road, because she does not go on the road. Instead she can luxuriate in the "glorious climate of California" with an entourage that a princess might envy. At least that is the popular impression.

The scribe was thinking of all this the other afternoon at the Forrest Theatre, while witnessing for the 20th time that wonder of the photoplay stage, or screen "The Birth of a Nation." It was a warm afternoon, although not uncomfortably so in the theatre, and the semi-darkness and low murmur of music had a soporific effect. The head of Miriam Cooper, that is, the picture of her face, was thrown upon the screen, and as she rolled her soulful eyes in the direction of the scribe it appeared to him that she was about to say something and wanted a little encouragement.

"What is it?" he asked—or thought he asked—"are you tired of Philadelphia?"

"I have never been in Philadelphia in my life," was the remarkable statement of the film star.

"What—oh, of course, not; but what do you think would be your opinion of our beautiful city if you had been here?"

"Silly!"

"What, Philadelphia silly?"

"No, you."

What further might have been said will never be known, for at this point a vision in furbelows and in crinoline gently shook the sleeper and whispered: "You are disturbing those about you, sir."

The scribe had been sleeping out loud. But he had made a record. He is the only person, as far as is known, who has been able to sleep during any part of "The Birth of a Nation."

PITTSBURG (Pa.) CHRONICLE
OCT. 1, 1915

FINE ACTING FEATURES "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a record-breaking run at the Nixon, is the unusual quality of the actors under the direction of David W. Griffith. Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman, of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all pleasing feminine portrayals. In addition there is a large cast of principals who assume the various historical roles of Civil War times and the Reconstruction period.

Telegraph Art

LILLIAN GISH IN FILM FORREST

:-: Movies

NATION FILM SET RECORD FOR CITY

Local Managers Are Now Assured of Success for Really Big Features.

UNDOUBTEDLY "The Birth of a Nation," the mighty film spectacle produced in this city at the Trent theatre last week, showed which way the wind blows when it comes to motion pictures in Trenton. The gross receipts for the week, exceeding the sum of $10,000, showed that Trenton is certainly a seat for this sort of entertainment, and that the managers would do very well to book as many big pictures as possible.

"The Birth of a Nation," of course, was out of the ordinary, but there are lots and lots of big pictures that the managers could secure and in proportion gain as much success as did the Griffith spectacle. Jesse L. Lasky, Metro, the Famous Players, Fox, the World Film and the Pathe company are producing unusual features, and all of them ought to be booked for the movie patrons of Trenton. They are sure to meet with success.

Ev. Telegram Art

CONTINUING PHOTOPLAYS

FORREST—"The Birth of a Nation," with Henry B. Walthal, Mae Marsh and Spottiswoode Akin. D. W. Griffith's mammoth photoplay of the Civil War and Reconstruction, founded in part on Thomas Dixon's "Clansman." A marvelous entertainment.

PHILADELPHIA (PA.) PUB. LEDGER
OCT. 2, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

A Correspondent Who Thinks the Film Play "Socially Uplifting"

To the Editor of Public Ledger:

Sir—It was with deep regret that I read the strong assertions of W. W. Keen in regard to the "Birth of a Nation." If I may venture to express my opinion, I would say that this picture is socially uplifting. While there are many things which may be condemned as promoting animosity and race hatred, it is well to become acquainted with them in order to behold this greatest of all problems from the right angle.

To the eternal credit of the negro let it be said that he never once took advantage of his helpless charges during the war, when his master was away fighting against his freedom, and it was only when his ignorant and passionate nature was imposed upon by the "Carpet Baggers," and he was used as a tool in the hands of such men as Thaddeus Stevens, to forward certain political schemes, that the demon of revenge burst loose, and he endeavored to retaliate upon his former masters for the years of servitude which he had suffered. It was to protect themselves that the white men formed the Ku-Klux Klan, and because of the overwhelming numbers of the negroes, they were forced to have recourse to many acts which, under present conditions, shock the morals of society. The proud Southerner refused to bow his head under the yoke of that nation which put negro soldiers over him, and not only deprived him of his right to vote, but treated him more like a dog than like a citizen. It was then that he was forced to take the law into his own hands to protect himself and his family.

All this is set forth in the annals of history, but does not the picture also show it? The play does not act altogether against the negro, but against those whites, not deserving the name of men, who imposed upon and deluded him.

STANLEY A. WALTERS.
West Philadelphia, October 1, 1915.

haps we shall yet see a recrudescence on the rapier and the crusader's mace.

Dallas T. News Art

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," which opens its first Texas engagement at the Dallas Opera House Monday night, is a spectacle of Civil war and reconstruction days, said to be truly gigantic in its proportions. The Battle of Petersburg, for example, was staged on a field five miles in extent, and involved 18,000 men. The thrilling rides of the Ku-Klux Klans called into service 2,000 horses. In Ford's theater, exactly reproduced from photographs and contemporary descriptions, a full audience is seated, with President Lincoln in his box, and Laura Keene and her company on the stage presenting "Our American Cousin." The South Carolina legislature, chosen at the first election under carpetbag rule, is shown in full and exciting session. These are among the 5,000 scenes of war, love, romance, chivalry, passion and patriotism that go to make up what is said to be the most magnificent theatrical entertainment ever conceived and executed by the mind of man.

D. W. Griffith is responsible for the production, which has been running in New York since the third of last March, and in Chicago since June 5, with capacity audiences at practically every performance. In each of these cities the management of "The Birth of a Nation" has leased the theater outright for the runs at least one more than the runs at least one more year. The spectacle has also to its credit runs that have broken all records, not even excepting those of "Ben-Hur" and "The Blue Bird," in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Atlantic City. It will be presented here with exactly the same musical accompaniment and the same sound and electrical effects that have made it the sensation in all these great amusement centers. As in the other cities, the same scale of prices charged for first-class productions will be charged, with $2 for the best seats.

Telegraph Art

That same meed of success which came to the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," in other cities, has been the fortune of the production here. Each presentation in the Forrest has been to a crowded house. So widespread has been the discussion of the theme of "The Birth of a Nation" that it is hardly necessary again to outline the story. Suffice it to say that the spectacle deals in a big way with a big theme brought upon the screen by the skill of a master hand that has intermingled the tragic with elements of romance and of comedy. Incidental to the showing of the picture is a musical score which is carefully synchronized with shifting scenes. No better cast has been assembled for a motion picture presentation. It is no wonder, therefore, that "The Birth of a Nation" is successful.

VARIETY (New York City)
OCT. 1, 1915

agement, about Oct. 15.

"NATION" A BIG HIT.

London, Sept. 29.

"The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Scala Monday and created a sensation. It is undoubtedly a big success.

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) DISPATCH
OCT. 3, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

D W GRIFFITH'S marvelous masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth and last week of its successful run at the Nixon Theater tomorrow afternoon, is the most impressive spectacle ever staged. At the Nixon its run promises to eclipse all records of either dramatic or photoplay productions.

Thrilling battle scenes, love lyrics of romantic beauty, episodes of rare historical interest and Nature in its fairest garb are component parts of the most lavish production ever presented to the public. It is vital-throbbing with life and virility, of great historical and educational values, and withal a great love story that holds great audiences spellbound.

The stirring events of the Civil War and the period of Reconstruction are shown in striking detail. The fighting in the trenches at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the saving of the South by the Scottish clans are faithfully reproduced. Months of research by historians preceded the actual work of production. Engineers from West Point and veterans of the North and South assisted in laying out the great battlegrounds. The artillery and other ordnance were those of the exact period. The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies took over two months. Director Griffith used 20 batteries of cameras, which he directed from a central tower by means of a system of underground telephone connections.

Such perfection of detail insured the success which this spectacle has achieved in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Milwaukee and Pittsburg.

As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close, it is well to see this great production at the earliest possible time, as there will be no other engagement played either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburg. The performances start at 2:15 and 8:15.

St. Louis D. Globe Oct 3

The Birth of a Nation.

ALTHOUGH every effort was made by the management to further extend the phenomenal run of D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, at the Olympic Theater, it was found impossible to defer the engagements of the regular weekly attractions contracted to appear, beginning on October 10. Consequently the Griffith masterpiece terminates its six weeks' run next Saturday night.

Over 50,000 persons have already seen The Birth of a Nation at the Broadway house, making a record in St. Louis theatricals. D. M. Griffith, who has laid his constructive hand to many plans, has surpassed all his former efforts in the production of The Birth of a Nation. Ben Hur was supposed to be a great production, but the photo-spectacle of the war is far ahead of the Lew Wallace dramatized story. Stage war plays of a former era were tame in comparison. Sheridan's Ride, Held by the Enemy and others come to mind, but when one sees the battle of Petersburg, or the night ridings of thousands of members of the Ku-Klux Klan, one forgets the war plays by speaking names of a former era. In the Griffith spectacle are scenes of unique beauty and strength. Besides the historical worth of this great film, the constant throb of the romantic story thrills the hearts of all.

St. Louis Telegraph Oct 3

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," enters upon its eighth month at the Liberty Theatre this week. On Saturday night the 600th performance in Greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances. That record will be passed on Wednesday of the current week. The big Griffith production has passed through the latter part of one season and into the beginning of the second season in town.

NEW YORK TELEGRAM
OCT 3 1915

FF

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" enters upon its eighth month at the Liberty Theatre this week. On Saturday night the 600th performance in Greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances. That record will be passed on Wednesday of the current week.

NEW YORK (N. Y.) TRIBUNE
OCT. 3, 1915

the story proper is a slight one.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre begins its eighth month this week. The historical value of D. W. Griffith's big spectacle is doubtful and it must be admitted that the story of the play is not as skilfully handled as in some of the more recent work of the same producer, but the manipulation of groups and, in particular, the rides of the clansmen are accomplished with a skill which is as near genius as anything the moving pictures have yet shown. "The Birth of a Nation" is to continue its run here indefinitely and the producers have announced that it will be seen in no other theatre in New York.

FOLK (Va.) VIRGINIAN-PILOT
OCT. 2, 1915

FROM THE P.

At The Colonial

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FOR LAST TIME

Final Performances This Afternoon And Tonight

FF

All indications point to overflow audiences at the Colonial theatre this afternoon and tonight when the last two performances of D. W. Griffith's magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given. For the matinee the house is practically sold out, but a few seats are still obtainable and they should be secured at once as "standing room only" will probably be the condition when the performance begins. For the night performance also the sale has been such as to indicate another packed house. To those who have not yet seen this mighty spectacle it is recommended that they do not lose this last opportunity.

MANCHESTER (N. H.) MIRROR
OCT. 1, 1915

[illegible] of the various frocks, frills and furbelows [illegible] that have most recently come from the moulders of fashion.

FF

Majestic Theatre.

All records, theatrically, have been smashed completely by D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic theatre, Boston. In number of weeks this attraction completes in Boston one solid half year of consecutive performances, for this is the 26th week of its stay. It is the more remarkable if one stops to consider that the most of this time has been through the summer months when theatres are closed as a rule. It is well known theatrical history by this time that after a run of 22 weeks at the Tremont theatre "The Birth of a Nation" was obliged to leave this playhouse, on account of the opening of the regular season on Labor Day, and a new home was found at the Majestic in order to meet the very pronounced public demand for a continuance of the Boston engagement.

The length of the stay becomes the more remarkable when it is considered that all other famous runs in Boston have been of plays which gave eight performances a week, while "The Birth of a Nation" has continuously been presented every afternoon and evening, making twelve performances each week.

And still the crowds flock to the Majestic theatre, Boston, to enthuse over these realistic scenes of the anti-bellum days, the civil war and the reconstruction period. The 27th week will begin at the Majestic next Monday afternoon, October [illegible]

Dallas Daily Times Herald Oct 3/15

"The Birth of a Nation, Great Spectacle to Be at Opera House

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's, mighty spectacle of the Southland during the terrible days of civil war and reconstruction, will be seen for the first time in Texas at the Dallas Opera House tomorrow night. The drama, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," though covering a far wider field, is set forth in two terrific acts, the first culminating in the battle of Petersburg, and the second in the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans on their errands of vengeance and mercy.

Mr. Griffith, whose name has become the most conspicuous, not only in the world of film drama, but the theatrical world in general, since the launching of "The Birth of a Nation" in Los Angeles last February, chose for the theme of his spectacle and turmoil and travail of this country, out of which a new and united nation was born. A Southerner himself, the son of a Kentucky brigadier-general in the Confederate army, Griffith understands the heart of the South, and "The Birth of a Nation" has done more to give the world at large a true conception of the agonies and hopes of a race of heroes and heroines than anything that has ever been promulgated by the written word.

◆ ◆ ◆

North and South Struggle.

The great disturbing factor of the old nation, which was little more than a confederation of sovereign states, was slavery, and the disposal of the question of what America should do with the black man plunged the North and South into a deadly struggle that ended only nominally when the military Titans, Lee and Grant, shook hands at Appomattox. There was still to be a long period of distress in the South, under the rule of the carpetbaggers and their tools, which the newly-liberated race became. Incited by the heartlessness of greedy politicians, the freedmen became a menace, from which the South extricated itself through the famous secret organization, the Ku Klux Klan.

It has been the aim of Mr. Griffith to tell the stories of both struggles so vividly that they cannot be forgotten. In order to do the work conscientiously, he employed a whole corps of history experts to ransack five thousand bound volumes, to say nothing of numerous pamphlets and manuscript records. From their researches he selected the most dramatic and best authenticated incidents, and staged them at the tremendous cost of $500,000. Not the smallest of the 200,000 historical details flashed upon the screen during the life of the show can be proven untrue. Yet Mr. Griffith never becomes tedious as a teacher of history. He has the unerring instinct of the dramatist, and he makes every moment of the spectacle dramatic.

◆ ◆ ◆

Cost Half a Million.

Those who have seen "The Birth of a Nation" cease to wonder how Griffith "got away" with $500,000 in staging the spectacle. They wonder, rather, how he produced it at so moderate a cost. There is the battle of Petersburg, for example, fought on a field five miles in extent, and employing some 18,000 men. The field was laid out by expert military engineers reproducing exactly the old field of Petersburg, with its roads, its trenches and its clumps of trees. Then, there is Sherman's march to the sea, culminating in the storming and burning of Atlanta. The city had to be built by Griffith, only to become the food of flames. It was necessary, too, for Griffith to build up the little Southern town, in which the romance of this plot is laid, with its streets, its old colonial mansions, its venerable public buildings and its quaint stores. These, too, fall victim to the depredations of vandals, black and white, and to the torch. Ford's theater had to be constructed, with its entire auditorium, its stage and its boxes, for the assassination of Lincoln. Three thousand horses of fire and mettle had to be secured for the mad rides of the Ku Klux Klans.

◆ ◆ ◆

Realistic Sound Effects.

After he had completed the pictorial work of his giant spectacle, Griffith set about inventing realistic sound effects, and practically every minute of the production is so enlivened by appropriate sounds that the spectators forget the spoken word or even imagine they hear it. A musical score of grand opera caliber, using for its theme the various American patriotic airs and the romantic songs of two continents, aids marvelously the illusion. This score will be interpreted here, as everywhere else the spectacle is exhibited, by a special symphony orchestra.

Some Scenes From "The Birth of a Nation"

SOUTHERN BALL ON EVE OF "BATTLE OF BULL RUN."

At the Dallas Opera House Three Weeks

Gathering of The Ku Klux Klans
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. GRIFFITH
PRODUCER OF
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT OPERA HOUSE

WILL OPEN FIRST TEXAS ENGAGEMENT TOMORROW NIGHT—IS GREAT CIVIL WAR SPECTACLE.

The Dallas Opera House management has furnished the following:

"Facts about 'The Birth of a Nation,' D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle of Civil War and Reconstruction days, which opens its first Texas engagement at the Dallas Opera House tomorrow night, speak more eloquently of its merits than any words can do. Based upon Thomas Dixon's novel, 'The Clansman,' it tells the true story of the South that culminated in the formation and the chivalrous deeds of the 'invisible empire,' far more vividly and eloquently than the written or the spoken word can ever tell it. Throughout it all there runs a double thread of the most beautiful romance ever conceived by an American novelist or dramatist.

"'The Birth of a Nation' contains 5,000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses, cost $500,000 and eight months of hard labor to produce, and presents, during the two hours and forty-five minutes of its exhibiton, a complete and vivid summary of the most intensely interesting period of American history.

"Glimpses of some of the greatest battles of the Civil War are seen, culminating finally in a detailed view of the battle of Petersburg, which was, perhaps, the most picturesque of the war, not even

PAINESVILLE (O.) TELEGRAPH-R
OCT. 1, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" said to be the biggest and most costly motion picture production ever presented, which was booked to show at the Opera House for fifteen consecutive weeks next spring and summer at two-dollar prices, won't be displayed. The state board of censors at Columbus rejected the film Tuesday and will not permit it to be exhibited in Ohio.

"The Birth of a Nation," is adapted from Thomas Dixon's book "The Clansman." Motion picture producers regard it as one of the biggest films ever made. It shows on a large scale scenes which are alleged to have taken place immediately following the Civil War.

The state censors assigned two reasons for rejection—it might arouse prejudice against the colored race and it might arouse prejudice between North and South. The film has been a storm center in cities where it has been shown. In Boston and Philadelphia it is said to have been the cause of numerous race riots. The state board received numerous letters from colored people protesting against the showing of the film.

URGES CHURCHES TO USE THE 'MOVIE'

Local Rector Tells of the Wonders Seen in Great Film-Making City.

By Rev. David M. Steele, D. D.
(Rector of the Church of St. Luke and The Epiphany.)

With the development of the moving picture theaters, which now number twenty thousand within the United States alone, there has come into existence an enterprise of unexampled industrial and social importance. The scope of the industry has increased and its patronage has expanded, until the daily attendance at the moving picture shows of the country aggregate four-fifths of the daily enrollment of the public schools. The statistics of attendance far exceed the numbers reported by churches, libraries and all other institutions for social betterment combined.

These facts are such that they cannot be ignored either by the educational or the religious forces of the country. On the one hand, there are dangers to be guarded against; on the other hand, the whole has in it such vast possibilities for good, it is such an agency for education and can be made such a useful instrument for moral uplift that the churches as well as the schools ought to use the cinemetograph wherever and whenever possible. If either or both of them fail to do this they are guilty of almost criminal negligence.

How great the industry has come to be it is almost impossible to realize. The only way to gain even a vague idea of the size is from figures. And among all these financial figures speak the loudest. They prove that managers of theaters and makers of films have confidence in the permanence of what seems to some to be only a craze. Would that church people, both pastors and parishioners, had the same faith and confidence in the worth of religion and in the abiding need for the church among the same multitudes.

Cost of Staging.

As illustrative of the cost of staging some of these pictures, the following among the best-known feature films may be mentioned: "Quo Vadis?" cost $250,000 to produce; "Atlantis" [illegible] $225,000; "Hamlet," $250,000; while $236,000 was paid to make the "Lion Hunt" film. The films of Captain Scott in the Antarctic cost a quarter of a million dollars, while the staging of "The Birth of a Nation" is said to have cost half a million dollars. Yet as great as the cost may be the profits are much greater. The first cost of producing motion pictures is paid for by the sale of copies of the films at prices ranging from ten cents to twenty-five cents a foot. At ten cents a foot a standard reel nets a profit of about four cents a foot, or $40 for the reel. Circulations run from fifty to one hundred copies, permitting a profit at this figure of $4000 for one hundred films for one day.

On a recent visit of six weeks across the continent the most interesting thing I saw—much more amazing even than the San Francisco Exposition—was "the place where the movies are made" in Southern California, for Los Angeles is the veritable center of the motion picture industry. While there I made a visit out to Universal City—truly a city, comprising motion film factories and offices and the largest picture production stage in the world. The fact that artificial light does not have to be used much because of the number of bright sunlight days is largely responsible for the number of picture studios which have been built in this vicinity. Work indoors requires a special light with a high actinic power, costing as much as thirty dollars an hour.

The Wonder City.

This wonder town of Universal City was formally opened only on March 15, 1915. Here are housed in buildings of brick and cement, three or four thousand employes, real cowboys and real Indians as well as actors. It is a veritable city, with its own municipal government. It has a huge zoo, containing actual wild animals. Ten miles of film can be turned out in a week. This tract, devoted to the manufacture of pictures, comprises 230 acres of valley and hill land, being divided into two parts: the Main Plant, stretching approximately five hundred yards—and the Ranch. In an administration building are executive offices, a cashier's desk, a telegraph station and a technical department. On one side is a laboratory building which is acknowledged the most complete and up-to-date on the coast. On the other side is a large restaurant where meals are served to employes and visitors.

Back of the administration building is the main stage, five hundred feet in length by one hundred and twenty-five feet in depth. It is equipped with light diffusers and on it there can be staged, at one time, twenty different scenes; that many companies may be found working there constantly. Back of the stage, and stretching the full length of it, are the property rooms where everything in the way of furniture, bric-a-brac, etc., are stored. Here may be found furniture of literally every period since man began sitting on chairs and eating from tables, all the various sets of furniture and furnishings one sees in moving pictures.

Back of the property rooms are two rows of dressing rooms, built for the accommodation of the stars and leading people, eighty rooms in all, equipped with the most modern appliances, electric lights, etc. In addition to these there are a score of other dressing rooms in another part of the grounds where the hundreds of extra players put on their make-up. The company have installed their own planing mill and cabinet making shop, where a host of men are kept busy with the erection of special stuff. Here skilled workmen make all doorways, staircases, pillars, windows, etc., for rooms used in pictures, and make all new pieces of property stock. In this building also are paint frames where all scenery is painted. The men who work in this department are all scenic artists and it is they who paint all the "backings" that are used. But the most interesting of all departments is that of the property makers, where all "fakes" are turned out. Men here employed make anything that is needed in the way of special properties, from paper soles of mail to wooden turkeys for Thanksgiving spreads.

For Education.

So much for pictures of recreation. But there are those for education and for moral elevation also. It is the duty the churches ought to utilize and that the clergy should know more about. How suddenly this has become a subject for their interest and how seriously is the attempt now being made in some progressive quarters to adopt the picture is illustrated by the fact that one of the largest conventions assembled in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition was for just this purpose. It proves that the day of the passive who did nothing but preach is gone. Now comes the "Movie School Matters."

All the attending ministers were given a practical demonstration of how to operate a movie machine, how to insert one, and how to make a proper selection of pictures through the film exchanges. The instructor was Rev. James O'May, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Aurora, Ill., who is himself pastor of a church which seats more than one thousand persons and who has successfully solved

Dallas Ev. Journal Oct 1 / 15

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" MOST STUPENDOUS EFFORT

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen for the first time in Texas at the Dallas Opera House next Monday night, is that of making history live through romance. He has touched the highest peaks of American history—slavery, the War of Secession, the treaty at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the reconciliation of North and South, and the wresting of the South from the terrible rule of the carpetbaggers and their tools through the agency of the "invisible empire" of the Ku-Klux Klan.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story, or rather a double love story. According to critical experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indoor" theater, but he has also developed a new art form far superior to the old-fashioned history, or historical novel or drama. An eminent public man has characterized it as "history by lightning."

Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical picture. Lincoln is seen among his counsellors issuing the first call for troops ever brought together to enforce the sovereignty of the central Government over the Sovereignty of the State. Glimpses of many battlefieuds are shown, and the spectator is ushered onto the field at Petersburg, where he witnesses the terrible conflict in detail, with all the burstling of shells, the roar of cannon and the extinguishing of life. Sherman and his thousands march to the sea and storm and burn Atlanta. Lee and Grant shake hands at Appomattox. The war is over. The audience is ushered into Ford's Theater and witness the assassination of Abraham Lincoln as surely as did the audience that assembled there on that terrible night in April, 1865. The stilling of the mighty heart of Lincoln gave the enemies of the South in Congress the upper hand, and they used their power to impose upon their late foemen the pernicious rule of the carpetbagger and his black tool. The excesses of these rulers resulted in a state more terrible than war and gave rise to the "invisible empire" of the Ku-Klux Klan. It is in the thrilling rides of the clansmen on their deeds of chivalry that bring the "Birth of a Nation" to its terrific climax above a series of climaxes that already had seemed to have touched the highest point attainable.

War veterans, both North and South, have witnessed the spectacle in vast numbers, and many of them have become so excited that their old battle cries have rung out in the auditoriums of the theaters. The scenes in the latter half of the picture, in which the clansmen participate, are so skillfully managed, and the interest is so intensely sustained, that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the scheen drama. But "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development. With all the splendid photographic art of the other two, it introduces the "thrill" which has always heretofore been absent from the photodrama and which for years has practically been absent from the stage of the spoken drama. The epic method of narration has been adopted. Enormous ranges of time and space are covered. All the arts contribute to the spectacular realization of poetry, history and romance. In the 5,000 scenes of the picture there are said to be 200,000 historical details. Besides the achievement of the picture itself, the exhibition of it employs fifty flesh-and-blood helpers at each performance, including a complete symphony orchestra for the interpretation of a musical score of grand operatic caliber.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution. Will the motion picture replace the textbook in the public schools? Will the Walter Scotts and the Alexander Dumas of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historians be replaced by the camera man, and the still-life painter by one who, like Griffith, can turn out hundreds of Rembrant, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment? Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque; yet, in view of such an accomplishment as "The Birth of a Nation," it is impossible to set a limit on the future achievements of the motion picture.

Press Oct 3

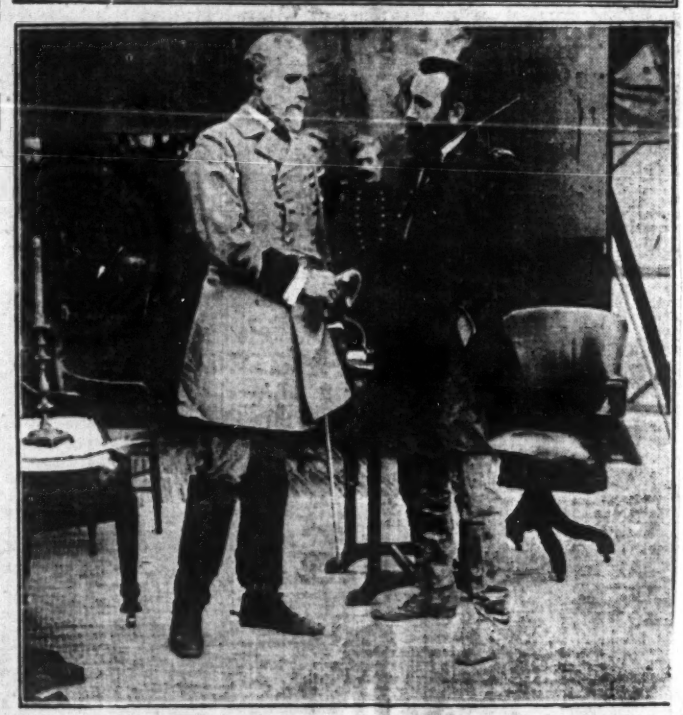
AT THE FORREST

That same meed of sweeping success which came to the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities has been the fortune of the production in this city. At each presentation of the picture in the Forrest there has been a crowd sufficient to place standing room at a premium. However, the management has made every effort to accommodate patrons with seats, and persons turned away from the box office for lack of accommodation have purchased tickets for later performances. This is made possible by the arrangement permitting the purchase of seats two weeks in advance.

So widespread has been the discussion of "The Birth of a Nation" that it is hardly necessary again to outline the story. Sufice it to say that the spectacle deals in a big way with a big theme. No such wonderful photographic conceptions have ever before been made for the screen. A more complete idea of the conflict of armies on the field of battle could not be given, even were actual hostilities to be photographed. The onlooker sees a battle as only those in the very front line of fighting would see a conflict.

Then there is a wonderful realization of the South in the ante-bellum days when slaves worked in the cotton fields and were sold on the block. The great Liberator who gave to the helpless the boon of freedom is seen in his very human aspect as the comforter of the oppressed, and the tragedy that snuffs out the light of such a life is most impressive. Indeed, it would be difficult to imagine a more effective and affecting scene than that showing the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's Theater, at Washington.

HISTORIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"



LEE AND GRANT AT APPOMATTOX

IN CONNECTION with a discussion of the movies, and nearly everything theatrical seems to be in connection with them nowadays, it is interesting to discover that photoplays have given musicians an opportunity to display a new phase of their skill in the arrangement of proper accompanying scores for picture showings. I noticed last week that this has been done with especially fine effect in "The Birth of a Nation." Joseph Carl Briel, who planned this score, has employed the Wagnerian leit-motif scheme and he has made his selections from patriotic melodies—as might be expected—to bits of grand opera, folksong and dance and the symphony, as represented by Dvorak's "New World"—again most appropriate.

To the strains of "Dixie" the Confederate troops march spiritedly upon the screen, while at almost every appearance of the boys in blue one hears that still more typical American tune, "Yankee Doodle." Of course, these naturally suggest themselves to a musical adapter, but it must be conceded that there was something of inspiration in the selection of "The Ride of the Valkyries" for each appearance of the dashing Ku-Klux Klan. Yet, while it seems that the redoubtable clansmen know no other music than that of the Valkyries, the discerning mind will note that "Der Freischutz" and the blithesome "Light Cavalry" of von Suppe are also called into requisition.

Each principal character in the play has a distinctive theme, which from time to time asserts itself in the musical structure. When Abraham Lincoln enters the box at Ford's Theatre, in Washington, strains of "Hail to the Chief" greet the ear. There is upon the mimic stage in that theatre a company of players engaged in presenting the comedy, "Our American Cousin," and while this is in progress the overture to "Norma" is heard. In an animated scene, during which, on the eve of a battle, men in uniform dance joyously with their charming partners, the orchestra plays "Comin' Thro' the Rye," while "My Old Kentucky Home" is another of the grateful melodies fitted deftly into the scheme of things. As the banner of the Southland flies in the breeze one hears "The Bonnie Blue Flag," and there is a realistic accompaniment to the scenes of battle when the orchestra plays "The Civil War." The Scandinavian composer, Grieg, wrote a wonderful suite to accompany the Ibsen play, "Peer Gynt." It would seem that such music could hardly be adapted to another illustrative purpose, yet the aptness of Mr. Briel's utilization of this music to that part of "The Birth of a Nation" showing the burning of Petersburg is at once striking.

LEWISTON (Maine) SUN
OCT. 1, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Next Week

Shows may come and shows may go feature film be widely heralded and after brief exhibitions returned to the shelves, but "The Birth of a Nation" continues on its triumphant way and will be shown at the Empire theatre all next week, commencing Monday afternoon and continuing throughout the week. Besides the film spectacle itself "The Birth of a Nation" music has taken a firm hold on the fancy of New England theatregoers. It revives most of the old tunes of the Civil War and includes also much elaborate orchestration in modern mode.

For out-of-town patrons the matinee performance will be found attractive the same as night and more convenient to attend. No Sunday shows will be given, but with that exception Mr. Griffith's spectacle will be performed twice daily at the Empire.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the biggest production so far made. There were over 120,000 feet of film when the cameras finished their work in the West and South, but the process of selection, which plays such a telling part in those productions, has reduced this to 12,000 feet, the spectacle as it now stands taking about two and three-quarters hours to present. The production cost over $150,000 and the first presentation was given in Los Angeles, Calif., since which the production has been shown in New York City, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Atlantic City, Brighton Beach and Long Branch for long runs and playing to capacity at every performance.

The production will be presented here in the same big manner that has characterized its performances in the above cities, with augmented orchestra and all other details exact.—adv.

P. Ledger Oct 3

AT THE PHOTOPLAY

FORREST — D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues here. So widespread has been the discussion of this photoplay that it is not necessary to outline the story. Suffice it to say that the spectacle deals, in a big way, with a big theme. No such photographic conceptions have ever before been made for the screen, and the Griffith achievement is unquestionably the greatest yet accomplished along these lines. A more complete idea of the conflict of armies on the field of battle could not be given, even were actual hostilities to be photographed. The onlooker sees a battle as only those in the very front line of fighting would see such a conflict. Then there is a realization of the South of ante-bellum days, when slaves worked in the cotton fields and were sold on the block. The great Liberator, who gave to the helpless the boon of freedom, is seen in his very human aspect as the comforter of the oppressed, while the tragedy that snuffs out the light of such a life is, in contrast, the more impressive.

Inquirer Oct 3

FORREST—It was a wise managerial provision that arranged for a seat sale two weeks in advance for the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its last weeks at this theatre. The lobby of the theatre is thronged during the entire day by persons who are eager to purchase seats, and those who are turned away have opportunity to make reservations in advance so that dissatisfaction is thereby averted. "The Birth of a Nation" is a marvel of theatrical managers all over the country, for the same sort of sweeping success which the production has had here is the record of the film achievement in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities.

It is a big theme that has been handled by Griffith and his effort measured up in every respect to the stupendous historical romance. There is no one who will not declare that this Griffith achievement is the greatest yet made known to the stage. Actual participation in a battle on a European field would give the onlooker no more complete idea of the conflict of armies than may be had by viewing contending Union and Confederate troops in "The Birth of a Nation." In this picture one sees the South of ante-bellum days and there is a suggestion of the causes leading to the War of the Rebellion, with Abraham Lincoln as a central figure. Remarkably true to life is the impersonation given of that great Emancipator and it is a moment of poignant tragedy when he is seen to droop as he falls a victim to the assassin's bullet. The stirring scenes depicting the night rides of the Ku Klux Klan are deeply impressed upon each beholder and there is, by the same token, as lasting an impression made by the romantic tale which adorns this historic creation.

The musical score prepared by Joseph Carl Briel, played by a symphony orchestra, is of great value in a dramatic way. As for the cast it should be said that its superior is not to be found in any other motion picture production. Who wonders, then, that "The Birth of a Nation" is epoch-making in the world of the theatre.

QUINCY (Mass.) LEDGER
OCT. 2, 1915

[illegible], an unusual feat for the average

MAJESTIC THEATRE

All records, theatrically, have been smashed completely by D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic Theatre, Boston. In number of weeks this attraction completes in Boston one solid half year of consecutive performances, for this is the 26th week of its stay. It is the more remarkable if one stops to consider that the most of this time has been through the summer months when theatres are closed as a rule. It is well known theatrical history by this time that after a run of 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" was obliged to leave this playhouse, on account of the opening of the regular season on Labor Day, and a new home was found at the Majestic in order to meet the very pronounced public demand for a continuance of the Boston engagement.

The length of the stay becomes the more extraordinary when it is considered that all other famous runs in Boston have been of plays which gave eight performances a week, while "The Birth of a Nation" has continuously been presented every afternoon and evening, making twelve performances each week.

M. American Oct 3

MOTION PICTURES

Forrest—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photoplay on the "Clansman" Thomas Dixon's popular novel. This photoplay on the trying days of reconstruction in the south has a wealth of detail, a breadth of view and a rapidity of action possible only to the motion picture. It is largely in the lavish employment of these powers that the overwhelming force of the film resides. Its famous climax is worked up solely by this means. The spectator is shown alternately the imperiled Camerons and Stonemen and the hordes of clansmen racing to their rescue. But throughout the entire film there is no more powerful episode, however than the death of "little pet sister." Mae Marsh takes this role with consummate skill.

WHY I FAVOR IT

BY D. W. GRIFFITH

THE $2 PICTURE

WHY I OPPOSE IT

BY DANIEL FROHMAN

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Creator of "The Birth of a Nation."

I SUPPOSE because the motion picture is a comparatively new form of expression in dramatic art that we are asked questions that would never be addressed to an old-line producer.

Before me is one relating to the possibility of the $2 motion picture being a permanent institution. I would answer that query in the affirmative without qualification, except for one other possibility. It will only be a permanent charge until motion pictures are placed upon a par with grand opera and then the $2 price will be as obsolete as the current charge for ordinary motion pictures is to-day in comparison with the $2 scale in the theatre. The motion picture does not differ from any other branch of art or business that I am acquainted with. The old fundamental law of supply and demand will always regulate it and the other law of the survival of the fittest will take care of the price question.

This statement is made conservatively, and I hope my readers will not think that a natural optimism makes me overly enthusiastic. We have grown steadily with the development of this wonderful industry and only those who started in at the beginning and know the inside facts are capable of forming any correct estimate. The great public to which any institution must appeal for its existence is just realizing the unlimited possibilities of the motion picture as a form of expression.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been the pioneer in this direction, but there will be many pictures which will measure up with the public demand, and when the theatregoers of this country find something they like there is never any question as to the price. Anything is worth the price that compares with the standards that the patrons of the playhouses have unconsciously built up in their own minds. Look at the record engagements of "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Milwaukee, Los Angeles and San Francisco. It has already outstripped every competitor of the spoken stage and has surpassed the records of such great dramatic successes as "Ben Hur," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Merry Widow," "Charley's Aunt," "A Trip to Chinatown" and numerous others of the record makers of their respective eras. There is only one answer to all this. The motion picture has arrived at a point where it can compete with the spoken drama in the matter of price. It took time and patience and just a little daring to reach this point. There will be no retrogression, however.

It was only a few years back that we all thought it was the limit of extravagance to spend $1,000 upon the making of a motion picture. In those days 10 cents was the highest charge of admission. In less than seven years I have seen the picture business climb up from that lowly station to the present triumph of "The Birth of a Nation." This production cost nearly half a million dollars. This is 500 times the cost of the first 10-cent motion picture. Instead of charging $5 per seat to keep up the ratio, we only ask $2 for the best seats and the prices are scaled downward to 25 cents for the gallery tickets.

In the not distant future some motion picture producer will select a great story that will cost a million dollars to properly produce, and he will get $5 a seat for his production. You see, the motion picture is not hampered by the cramped perspective of a 36-foot proscenium opening. The whole world is at its beck and call. Eons and eons of time have been piling up great scenic productions for the producer, which he can reproduce on a piece of celluloid one inch long and three-fourths of an inch wide. The thing narrows down to a question of selection. If the motion picture director has the dramatic instinct and the imagination there is no limit to what he can do. He also does not have to depend upon canvas and a small stage for his reproduction of nature. He can reproduce anything that history or poetic imagination outlines for him. The world's literary masterpieces are still stored up in libraries, an inexhaustible fund for him to call upon. Therefore, I say that the price will always be governed by the output, which in time will be controlled by the demand. If you do something the world is interested in, the demand will be forthcoming.

THE production of "$2 motion pictures," which has become the object of several photoplay producers, is an excellent ambition, in many ways meriting respect and commendation, but nevertheless a policy at variance with all the traditions of the staged or screened drama. Motion pictures can never be too elaborately or magnificently produced. They can never be made too good for the public, but the public should not be forced to pay exorbitant prices for the privilege of seeing them.

The question resolves itself into the old one of the classes and the masses. The advocates of the $2 film offering forget one powerful truth in their efforts to interest exclusively the two-dollar element of the public in their productions. To whom does the motion picture owe its very existence? Whose nickels and dimes are represented in the vast producing plants and great industrial fabric of the film business to which to-day we point with such conscious pride as indications of the stability of the industry? Is it to the classes or to the masses that we owe our present prosperity and prestige?

It was the man who paid the dime to see the then despised and lowly "movie" when the people who are represented in this so-called "$2 clientele" were either scornful of or antagonistic to the new screen drama, who has made possible the production of these very photo-spectacles which are to be shown to the newly converted $2 audience.

Aside from any sentimental feeling which might prompt the motion picture producer to stand by the masses who made possible his rise to fortune, there is a very sound business reason which should induce the far-seeing film producer to please always and interruptedly the masses.

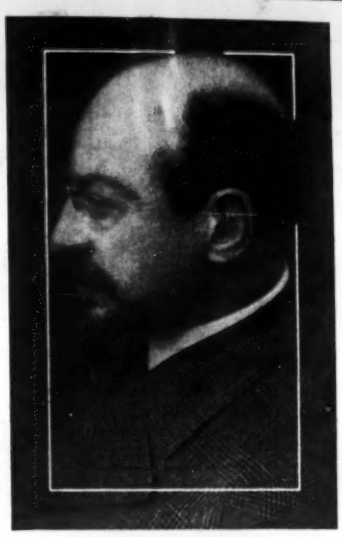
In this premise we have precedental authority in the record of the spoken drama. I have little doubt that any theatrical manager will support my assertion that the best returns to be obtained from theatrical productions are derived from those which interest the vast general public, and not from those with any peculiar and limited appeal, to a "set."

Take, for illustration, "The Old Homestead," "In Old Kentucky," "Way Down East," "Rip Van Winkle," "The Two Orphans." Did they derive their greatest profits from the high-priced theatres in the big cities, or from the popular-priced theatres in every town and hamlet in the country? The answer is a matter of theatrical history. For that reason, when the Famous Players Film Company makes its screen adaptation of "The Old Homestead," which it will shortly do, we will return it in its new form to the masses who have made its popularity on the stage endure for two generations—to the people who can afford to pay the minimum price of admission in proportion to the expense and elaborateness of the subject, which can be estimated to be from ten to twenty-five cents.

This has been the policy of the Famous Players throughout its entire existence as a producing organization, and a conviction from which we have never departed even during the presentation of such profit-deserving subjects as Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda," Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo." This will continue to be our policy when, shortly, we present Pauline Frederick in "Zaza," Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper." This will be the policy when our allied producer on the Paramount programme, the Lasky Feature Play Company, presents Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen"—the only policy, in my contention, consistent with the traditions of the screen, for because of their support in the dark days of the industry, when our existence was precarious and objectionable to press and pulpit, given loyally and earnestly, the masses to-day deserve the very best that the film manufacturers can produce.

This our slogan: "Make $2 pictures, but show them for from 10 to 25 cents!" Such subjects as are mentioned above assuredly belong to the "$2 production class," yet they will be shown all through the country at an admission cost within the financial means of all. Screen plays now in the course of

[CONTINUED ON PAGE FOUR.]



DANIEL FROHMAN,
Managing Director Players Film Co.

NEWTON (Mass.) GRAPHIC
OCT. 1, 1915

CLIPPING FROM
Philadelphia, (Pa.) North American
OCT 3 1915
Date .....

"Heart of Jennefer," with Hazel Dawn and war pictures.

MOTION PICTURES

Forrest—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photoplay on the Clansman," Thomas Dixon's popular novel. This photoplay on the trying days of reconstruction in the south has a wealth of detail, a breadth of view and a rapidity of action possible only to the motion picture. It is largely in the lavish employment of these powers that the overwhelming force of the film resides. Its famous climax is worked up solely by this means. The spectator is shown alternately the imperiled Camerons and Stonemen and the hordes of clansmen racing to their rescue. But throughout the entire film there is no more powerful episode, however, than the death of "little pet sister." Mae Marsh takes this role with consummate skill.

CLIPPING FROM
Philadelphia, (Pa.) Public Ledger
OCT 3
to .....

AT THE PHOTOPLAY

FORREST — D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues here. So widespread has been the discussion of this photoplay that it is not necessary to outline the story. Suffice it to say that the spectacle deals, in a big way, with a big theme. No such photographic conceptions have ever before been made for the screen, and the Griffith achievement is unquestionably the greatest yet accomplished along these lines. A more complete idea of the conflict of armies on the field of battle could not be given, even were actual hostilities to be photographed. The onlooker sees a battle as only those in the very front line of fighting would see such a conflict. Then there is a realization of the South of ante-bellum days, when slaves worked in the cotton fields and were sold on the block. The great Liberator, who gave to the helpless the boon of freedom, is seen in his very human aspect as the comforter of the oppressed, while the tragedy that snuffs out the light of such a life is, in contrast, the more impressive.

...dard received numerous letters ... colored people protesting against the ... showing of the film.

BOSTON POST
OCT. 3, 1915

...the most original comedians on the stage. His one hobby outside stage life is that of reading up on ancient history. He often introduces the names of many of the old Greek and Roman warriors in his lines, and this in a large measure gets him many a legitimate laugh.

✦ ✦ ✦ ✦ ✦

It is curious to observe the different types of people who visit "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic. Young and old, thoughtful and flippant, all find in the remarkable series of pictures something to chain the attention. The fame of the spectacle has spread throughout New England and patrons have come from long distances to view it. "The Birth of a Nation" is the first instance in this city where a photoplay has comprised an entire performance, and it is the pioneer in Boston of the others which are to follow.

...days and Saturdays.

MAJESTIC THEATRE—All record... theatrically, have been smashed co... pletely by D. W. Griffith's mighty spe... tacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at t... Majestic Theatre, Boston. In numb... of weeks this attraction completes i... Boston one solid half year of consec... tive performances, for this is the 26t... week of its stay. It is the more r... markable if one stops to consider th... the most of this time has been throug... the summer months when theatres a... closed as a rule. It is well known th... atrical history by this time that aft... a run of 22 weeks at the Tremont Th... atre "The Birth of a Nation" w... obliged to leave this playhouse, on a... count of the opening of the regul... season on Labor Day, and a new hom... was found at the Majestic in order t... meet the very pronounced public d... mand for a continuance of the Bost... engagement.

LEWISTON (Maine) JOURNAL
OCT. 1, 1915

AMUSE

All Next Week "The Birth of a Nation," at the Empire

"The Birth of a Nation" the sensational and spectacular Griffith production of the Civil War period, in 12 parts based on the book "The Clansman" breathes the spirit of that well known work. The two great outstanding features of it are its controversial spirit and splendor, and the magnificence of its production. Taken as a whole it is the most tremendous offering ever projected.

The greatness of the production is in its spectacular points and the historical reproductions, yet so clearly defined is the drama and so very carefully presented that it grips the audience hard. The appeal is far-reaching and there probably never has been a production offered to the American public that can approach the "swing" of its powerful "pull" or sometimes almost uncanny reproductions of historical scenes. From a technical viewpoint it may be placed upon a pedestal by itself.

Nothing approaching "The Birth of a Nation" as a spectacle has ever been seen in Lewiston. It is a magnificent production, wonderful in its scope, dramatic to a degree in its construction, faithful in detail and convincing in its argument. Those who may feel inclined to take offense at alleged incidents of half a century ago, and find it difficult to square such offenses with latter day conditions, should bear in mind that the traitor, Arnold, of the Revolution, was the same Arnold, who, as the daring "rider of the black horse" was the hero of the siege of Quebec.

Beginning Monday afternoon, and continuing every afternoon and evening thruout the remainder of the week, the Empire will present "The Birth of a Nation"—aye, present it in a manner that will defy any presentation it has ever had to eclipse it. An augemnted symphony orchestra, a crew for stage effects, an example of artistic exhibition never before equalled in Maine, will be offered the people of Lewiston and Auburn all next week at the Empire, a sight they will never forget—"The Birth of a Nation."

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) STANDARD
OCT. 1, 1915

GRANT AND LEE MEET IN 'THE BIRTH OF A NATION'

Incident, Although Not Long, Makes Vivid Impression on All Who Witness It.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at Poli's all next week, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. He is a statue in gray. The contrast in manner is also marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) HERALD
OCT. 1, 1915
314

BURLINGTON (Vt.) NEWS
OCT. 1, 1915

musical triumph, and flattering success for those who brought the artists to Burlington.

"The Birth of a Nation."

In all things there is always one best and to that one best all others of its kind are compared. In screen spectacles that one best is admitted and proclaimed throughout the world to be D. W. Griffith's grand triumph of the camera "The Birth of a Nation" the most glorious spectacle ever presented to man and expected to be the pinnacle of film art for the next twenty years to come. One may have seen big productions in photo drama before, for instance "Quo Vadis" "The Fall of Pompeii", "Cabiria" and others but before "The Birth of a Nation" all of these must bow. A more stupendous, overwhelming, blood-stirring and inspiring production has never before been conceived and its showing at the Strong theatre for an engagement of four days commencing October 4 will undoubtedly be the signal for a mighty rush of people to see this vast spectacle of which such a tremendous amount of notoriety has been spread throughout the length and breadth of the entire country.

EVERLY (Mass.) CITIZEN
OCT. 2, 1915

theatre patron.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"
Amazing Records Established by this Wonderful Attraction at the MAJESTIC THEATRE.

All records, theatrically have been smashed completely by D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," in this city, which was seen for 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre by nearly half the population of Boston and the past 3 weeks at Majestic, making its 26th big week in Boston. So insatiable has been the desire of the theatre going population of New England to see more of this marvelous $500,000 production that arrangements had to be made for another theatre as its Boston home, and so the Majestic Theatre becomes the fortunate possessor of "The Birth of A Nation" as an attraction for a limited additional stay in Boston. 18,000 persons and 3,000 horses were used in reproducing this picture; which is a complete story of the Civil War. The Majestic Theatre will begin next Monday afternoon, with performances given twice daily, every afternoon at 2.10 and every evening at 8.10. Seats are now selling for next week

"BIRTH OF NATION" IS TRUE PICTURE OF TIME

Not a Farce or Comedy, But General Story Carries With it Some Funny Scenes.

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not comedy, it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle. Comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies but clasped in each others arms.

Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again there is the scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing, "Mississippi Sawyer," Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the somber shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy or. Such is life.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM
OCT. 1, 1915

STRIKING PICTURES TO BE SHOWN BY Y. M. C. A.

The feature at the Y. M. C. A.'s motion picture program tomorrow will be an Essany production, entitled, "Temper," in which the leading part in this photo-drama is played by Henry B. Walthall, who featured in "The Birth of a Nation" as Col. Cameron. The picture itself is a wonderful emotional drama, which gives play to Walthall's genius in interpreting the human passions of grief, love and hate.

The other pictures will be a George Ade comedy entitled "The Fable of the Two Unfettered Birds," in which it is declared and shown that the parental instinct is bound to crop out even among refrigerator uplifters. The other comedy is a Lubin production entitled "Willie Goes to Sea," and is funny from start to finish. In "A Fiend at the Throttle," an engine driven by a madman tries to run down the heroine, and she escapes by a miracle. Her act saves the lives of a train filled with passengers. The educational numbers will display thousands of queer pelicans on Pelican island, a visit to St. Augustine, and boys diving for coins at Kingston harbor, etc., etc., closing with a comedy cartoon. Current events will be pictured in the Pathe Weekly.

The opening exhibitions last Saturday drew crowded houses both afternoon and evening. Tomorrow the exhibition will begin at 1:45 and 6:45.

Chesapeake City Md.
10-2-15

BREEZES FROM ST. LOUIS.

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 28, 1915.

The extraordinary success of "The Birth of a Nation" caused a change in the plans of the Olympic theater, and prevented for the time being the appearance of Elsie Janis, who will go to New York before reaching St. Louis. The opening of the regular season at the Broadway playhouse has been deferred until October 10, when "The Girls From Utah," with Julia Sanderson, Donald Brian and Joseph Cauthorne, will inaugurate the series of dramatic and musical offerings that will make up the list of the Olympic's attractions for the winter season.

CLIPPING FROM The Bulletin
Philadelphia
10-2-15

A NEW ONE IN LOBBY DISPLAYS

Chicago, Sept. 25.—Great strides are being made by Hamburg, Engstrom & Co., who are located in the Mallers Building, Chicago, in the art of manufacturing lobby display frames in oil paintings that can be sold to the exhibitors for less than they could buy photos. These oil paintings are made of all the leading motion picture stars, and they are truly wonderful pieces of work. Hamburg, Engstrom & Co. are at present making these paintings for the Famous Players, V.-L.-S.-E., Universal, Metro, Celebrated Players, and D. W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation, and every mail brings them many inquiries from all over the country and new orders from leading producers everywhere. They employ a staff of the best oil and water artists that can be found. The individual theater owner can buy these paintings as well as the producers, and before long these handsome lobby portraits will supplant the cheap, gaudy paper frames. The next surprise that Mr. Hamburg has in store will be embossed oil paintings. These are now being perfected in their studios.

Chesapeake City Md.
10-2-15

TRAVELER
OCT. 2, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

Entering on Monday next, the beginning of the second half year in Boston, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic Theatre continues to hold undiminished the popular interest which, in spite of the phenomenally long run, is marked by undepleted audiences at every afternoon and evening performance. Saturday marked the completion of the 312th consecutive presentation of the Griffith spectacle in this city, a figure hitherto never approached by any theatrical attraction whatever in Boston.

In spite of the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" is now being presented in some of the smaller cities, large numbers of suburbanites and New Englanders continue to flock to the Majestic, attraceed by the exceptionally attractive producing conditions, especially the very fine execution of Briel's incidental music by an orchestra of 40 pieces. Many out-of-town parties, in Boston for the day, make it a point to take in "The Birth of a Nation" as a fitting climax to their program. Among such this week saw about 750 baseball "fans" from Fitchburg and vicinity, who celebrated "Moran day" at Braves Field and later attended the Majestic in a body. Performances will continue throughout the coming week as usual, two daily, at 2:10 and 8:10.

CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK PRESS
Date .....

1915

Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" enters upon its eighth month at the Liberty Theatre this week. Last night the 600th showing in Greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg o' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances. The production has passed through the latter part of one season and into the beginning of the second season, and arrangements have been completed for its continuance in the Liberty Theatre indefinitely, which is the proven test of its sustained popularity. It is positively stated that it will not be seen in any other theatre in New York until the termination of the run in the Liberty.

PITTSBURG (Pa.) GAZETTE-TIMES
OCT. 1, 1915

AMUSEMENTS.

One of the many reasons for the great success of "The Birth of a Nation," now in the midst of a second [illegible] run at the Nixon, is the unusual quality of the actors under the direction of David W. Griffith. Their work is at the farthest removed from the rough-and-ready methods and horseplay of a great deal of picture production. Henry Walthall's Ben Cameron, "The little Confederate colonel," is a fine, sincere and subtle piece of characterization, while the Elsie Stoneman of Lillian Gish, the Flora Cameron of Mae Marsh and the Margaret Cameron of Miriam Cooper are all delightful feminine portrayals.

BOSTON MORNING GLOBE
OCT. 3, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Continues at the Majestic

Although nearly half a million people have witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" since coming to Boston six months ago, the Griffith spectacle at the Majestic Theatre enters this week upon its second half year with interest unabated. All records for continuous engagement in this city were long ago smashed by this production.

From being an issue between races this photo drama seems to have settled down to being an effective preachment against the horrors of war, either civil or international. Through the smoke of European battlefields, pictured in the daily press, can be seen in vivid retrospect our own was gone of 50 years ago. "The Birth of a Nation" has already been shown 312 consecutive times in Boston, and the end is not yet. Until further notice daily performances will be given at 2:10 and 8:10 p m.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT
OCT. 2, 1915

tinguish the film. Other pictures precede it.

Majestic

"The Birth of a Nation," filmed spectacle of unusual magnitude and scope. The earlier reels unroll scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. Then follows a pictorial chronicle of conditions in the South during the days of Reconstruction. Finally comes an apotheosis of the United States. Into all this is woven sentimental adventure. Music accompanies the whole. The twenty-seventh week.

Seattle Times Oct 5

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

It is now declared that this big Griffith spectacle, with its wholly unusual features in photo play production, will stay at the Nixon at least one week longer after this week, or until Saturday night, October 16. Following this it will likely be shown in some other Pittsburgh house, not yet announced, and where the engagement will be indefinite. This change arises from two causes. The regular booking contracts of the season at the Nixon are clamoring for their allotted time, while the continued immense audiences for the photo play make it inexpedient to close the Pittsburgh engagement. Last night began the sixth week of the stay of this picture of Reconstruction days, and the crowds still besiege the box office.

Women's Wear Oct 5

Liberty; 42d St., west of Broadway. Tel. Bryant 37. Matinee daily—"The Birth of a Nation," the greatest motion picture ever shown in America. Produced by David W. Griffith, the world's greatest motion picture director. No one should miss it.

Pittsburg Leader Oct 5

Famous Screen Play at the Nixon

With the patronage bigger than ever, the sixth week of "The Birth of a Nation" opened yesterday at the Nixon. Establishing a record for motion picture business in this vicinity, the Nixon box office last week took in $12,000. Many persons are being attracted from adjoining towns by reason of the fact that the production will not be shown in any other theater within 100 miles of Pittsburg.

"The Birth of a Nation" contains every possible thrill that can be given by the spoken drama and enacts scenes with backgrounds which would be impossible to present on the stage. The photography is splendid, the posing highly artistic and the many historical events depicted are enacted with thrilling and realistic detail.

The symphony orchestra accompanying the production plays incidental music in a manner that adds greatly to the entertaining value of the picture. Albert Peace, the well-known conductor, renders tonal effects that well suit the action of the play, being an arrangement made by Joseph Freil, a former Pittsburger.

Dallas M. News Oct 4

Opera House.

Every reel of "The Birth of a Nation" was shown Saturday night before the Dallas Board of Censors. The moving picture was passed by the board, all of the members agreeing that it has no objectionable features.

An advance notice of the film says:

"So strenuous is the fighting in the big battle scenes of 'The Birth of a Nation,' which opens its first Texas engagement at the Dallas Opera House tonight, that the spectator has difficulty, it is said, in making himself believe it is not real battles that were photographed. There is apparent no such 'faking' as is seen in the fights of 'supers' on the regular stage in Shakespearean and other plays where battles are portrayed.

"As a matter of fact, there was a good deal of fighting in making 'The Birth of a Nation,' not so grim and terrible as that being witnessed daily on the battle fields of Europe, but as strenuous and exciting as that which characterizes a football game between two colleges, where rivalry is intense. During the several weeks of rehearsing and photographing these battles an average of five men were carried to the field hospital daily for medical and surgical treatment. Fortunately, however, not a single death occurred.

"There is said to be no 'faking,' either, in the falling from their horses of several of the clansmen in their battles with the carpetbag rabble. The men impersonating the clansmen actually tumbled from their horses at full gallop while the cameras were turned on them. These men are 'trick riders,' who formerly made a dangerous living with 'wild west' shows, and who are now in great demand by the motion picture producers. Mr. Griffith corralled the best of them for 'The Birth of a Nation,' and it is they who furnish so many thrills in the battle scenes. Mr. Griffith also employed some 'trick horses,' very difficult to train for this dangerous work, which will fall, as though shot dead, instantly at command of their riders, no matter how fast they may be galloping at the moment. These horses play their daring parts in the battles of the Kluxers."

Blue Mail & Daily Telegraph Oct

Sherman's March to the Sea, as shown in "The Birth of a Nation"—at the Elks' Opera House, three days, beginning Thursday night, October

Ev. Journal Dallas Oct 4

FAMOUS FILM TO SHOW TONIGHT AT OPERA HOUSE

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Begin Week's Engagement in Dallas.

Veterans of both the North and the South will have an opportunity at the Dallas Opera House tonight to pass upon the accuracy of David W. Griffith in reproducing in "The Birth of a Nation" the stirring events of 1861-65, as well as the series of terrible incidents that attended the reconstruction of the Southland after the long and bloody struggle between the States was over. All the remaining heroes of both armies residing in Dallas will witness "The Birth of a Nation" as guests of the management of the spectacle and the manager of the theater.

Five professors of American history in as many Western universities were employed steadily for three months by Mr. Griffith in gathering data, both odd and accurate, for his giant spectacle. In addition to these five experts, Mr. Griffith commissioned a large number of history students in various parts of America, and especially in Washington, to look up everything they could find on some particular point, in official documents and old pamphlets. It is due to the work that this little army of pains-taking scholars accomplished that "The Birth of a Nation" is so accurate historically that it has been highly indorsed by the universities in the great amusement centers of America. Thousands of old soldiers, both North and South, have witnessed the spectacle in the various cities where it has been shown, and they have added their indorsement, based upon first-hand observation.

But Griffith, like Dumas, uses history as the background of romance, and his historical accuracy never becomes dull and tedious. Unlike Dumas, however, Griffith never warps history to fit his story. He has made his plot, based upon Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," so consistent that it fits the facts of history exactly.

Knoxville Sentinel Oct 4/10 Times

TESTIMONIAL TO NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

—Office of—
THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORPORATION
420 Longacre Building.

New York, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1915.

The Knoxville Sentinel,
Knoxville, Tenn.

Gentlemen:—

You will kindly reserve for us 120 inches of space to be used in the exploitation of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth Of a Nation," which will be shown at Staub's theatre for three days, beginning Monday, October 11.

You will recognize in this order a rather unusual amount of space for a theatrical production to use. In this connection I will state that it is the policy of Mr. Griffith, the producer of this great picture, to use more liberal advertising space than has ever been used by any theatrical production.

We have found through our experience that adequate newspaper advertising pays us handsomely, and the success of "The Birth of a Nation" is really a testimonial to newspaper advertising, and we believe that this success is one of the best arguments the newspapers have covering the value of their space.

All of this is said, of course, with the understanding that the article advertised must have the proper merit. Otherwise the newspaper advertising will not produce the results.

We are anticipating big business in Knoxville, and beg to thank you in advance for the careful attention we know you will give our order.

Cordially and sincerely,
THEODORE MITCHELL,
General Press Representative.

...testing against the ...

At Staub's

Music is still being presented before capacity audiences in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and St. Louis, Knoxville playgoers will enjoy the privilege of witnessing D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at Staub's theatre the first three days of next week. The engagement will begin Monday night and matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday. Seats for the five performances will go on sale at the box office Friday morning.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle at Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theatre, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the south's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct scenes and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of 30.—Adv.

Pittsburgh Post Oct 5

NIXON—"Birth of a Nation," Photo Spectacle.

The daily sight of crowds gathering at the Nixon Theater was repeated at the start of the sixth week of this supreme motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." Again long lines formed, extending from the box office far down the street.

Frequent reviews of D. W. Griffith's swiftly moving scenes of Civil war days, the stirring battles enacted with tremendous realism, and the Ku Klux work in reconstructing the South have appeared in The Post. The thrilling effect of the orchestral music directed by Albert Peace heightens the pleasure, giving a vividness to the action sweeping across the screen, an appeal to eye and ear that

Supreme Court Justice Pendleton has indicated his willingness to grant this amount for her annual expenditures upon application of Mary B. Chamberlme of Skaneateles, N. Y., her guardian, who has presented to the court a schedule of the estimated cost of Miss Loney's education and maintenance for the coming year.

The affidavits presented to Justice Pendleton show Mrs. Loney, mother of the girl, feared that something might happen on the fatal trip across the Atlantic. She made a will leaving her entire estate to her daughter in case Mr. Loney did not survive her. He went down with his wife when the Lusitania was torpedoed.

Miss Loney managed to get into a lifeboat as the ship was sinking. This was overturned and the girl swam for 10 minutes until picked up by another boat. She has been living in Skaneateles under the chaperonage of Miss Chamberlaine, but proposes to rent a home in Park avenue soon for the winter and attend school here.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Tele. Oct 5

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation," Photoplay.

Beinning its sixth week in the Nixon Theater, "The Birth of a Nation" yesterday drew two crowds of spectators that were as large as those at previous performances. Still showing its reel of night riders, battles and holding them together with love stories, the picture is predicted to run several weeks longer. Besides the picture, the house is entertained by a symphony orchestra conducted by Albert Peace.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 5

NIXON.

"The Birth of a Nation," the splendid spectacle at the Nixon theater, yesterday entered upon the sixth week of its presentation, and continues to draw large crowds. Long lines of prospective spectators may be seen each day extending from the box office far down Sixth ave. Every sensation and thrill of the spoken drama is experienced in enjoying D. W. Griffith's swiftly moving scenes of Civil war days. The splendid photography, artistic posing, genuine humor and patriotism, delight each successive audience. The incidental music of the symphony orchestra gives added vividness to the action and heightens the pleasure of the eye.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch Oct 5

"The Birth of a Nation" Moves to Garrick Theater Sunday.

"The Birth of a Nation" photoplay, which is now in its sixth and last week at the Olympic Theater, will move Sunday to the Garrick Theater. The theater, which is the property of the Messrs. Shubert, is being renovated for this production. The same scale of prices will be charged which prevailed at the Olympic—25 cents to $1 for matinees and 25 cents to $2 for night performances.

Post-Dispatch readers have recently asked why the prices charged here and in New York and Chicago for tickets to this attraction were higher than in San Francisco, where the highest charge was 75 cents. The local manager of "The Birth of a Nation" said, in reply to this question, that the Pacific Coast rights for the film were let on terms which did not give the producing company the same control over prices which it has here; and furthermore that the accessories of the San Francisco production were inferior to those of the engagement here. In San Francisco, he said, only five musicians were employed, while here the orchestra numbers 30.

St. Louis Daily Globe Oct 5

BIRTH OF A NATION TO BE SHOWN AT GARRICK THEATER

Great Film Play Now at Olympic Changes Location Next Sunday.

Beginning with a matinee performance Sunday, D. W. Griffith's photo spectacle, The Birth of a Nation, which has been the attraction for six weeks at the Olympic, will be moved to the Garrick Theater, Chestnut and Sixth streets.

In preparation for the showing of the film at the Garrick, the theater has been entirely redecorated, renovated and refurnished. In order that it may present an appearance in accord with the reel, the Messrs. Shubert have wired to their representative here to spare no expense in restoring the theater to its former appearance.

Some Films to Be Shown.

The same orchestra of thirty persons, same production and accessories and effects that have been viewed by 100,000 persons since the spectacle arrived at the Olympic, will be seen at the Garrick, where the performance will continue for some days.

The front elevation at the Garrick is now undergoing a sand blast treatment and it will be outlined for the occasion with a blaze of lights. New and attractive white way lamps will be employed to brilliantly light the interior.

Beautiful Tapestry Scheme.

Tapestry effects, together with a clever decorative scheme, will make beautiful the inferior of the building. Lobby, foyers and retiring rooms also will be treated with harmonious color schemes.

A handsome marquee will adorn the entrance doors.

The sale of seats will open at the box office of the Garrick Thursday morning.

Every chair in the theater, including the gallery, which contains standard opera seats, will be reserved. The same scale of prices as at the Olympic will prevail.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 5

THE NIXON.

There does not seem to be a waning to the great magnetic powers of "The Birth of a Nation" film, which commenced its sixth week in the Nixon Theater yesterday, and instead of patronage diminishing as the picture nears the close of its engagement, it is increasing. Judging from the audiences of yesterday afternoon and last night, the picture will be viewed by larger crowds than any previous week during the Pittsburgh engagement.

Battle scenes, stirring rides of the Ku-Klux Klan, pathetic home pictures, and a veritable gallery of pictures from the great construction period which succeeded the Civil war, are presented with vividness, fine suggestion and historical accuracy.

"The Birth of a Nation" is all that its author and producers claim. To learn the real purpose of the picture and to become better acquainted with its aims, one must see it. Replicas of historical buildings and signatures are shown.

There is sensation after sensation, and one viewing the film sits in amazement, wondering how such a wonderful motion picture could be taken. Accompanying all of this is artistic photography and effective acting by persons portraying the various characters. A symphony orchestra provides incidental music to harmonize with the various gripping scenes on the screen.

Pittsburgh Leader Oct 5

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE NEXT WEEK

MIRIAM COOPER
In "The Birth of a Nation"

That the big historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon theater, has aroused the interest and enthusiasm of the people of Pittsburg, as well as the people of the surrounding towns, as no other theatrical offering of years, was evidenced by the storm of protests against closing the engagement which followed the announcement that the present week would end local opportunity to see D. W. Griffith's masterpiece. Aroused by the unprecedented demand for seats for this week's performances, J. J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation," and Samuel F. Nixon, of the Nixon theater, got together in New York and rearranged bookings so as to make it possible for this sensation of the amusement world to stay one more week at the Nixon. As extended, the engagement will now run all next week, ending with the matinee and night performances Saturday, October 16. The seat sale for this week has already broken the record of the big spectacle's record-breaking local engagement and since the opening of the box office last Monday, the long line of eager seat purchasers, which has extended half way down the block on Sixth avenue, has been unbroken from morning until night. This spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the great war in the minds of all. Civil strife that grew out of misunderstandings; battles fought over wide-stretching areas; the great, all-loving heart of the President and the little men who after his death thwarted his far-seeing plans; the victory of the north and the terrible aftermath of reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes the working out of which impinges as vividly upon 1915 as 1861-'71. Never before has America's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on stage, film, panorama or canvas. It is the biggest patriotic entertainment ever devised. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and the cunning art of the mechanical effects combine to make an offering satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatergoers.

LK (VL.) VIRGINIAN-PILOT
OCT. 7, 1915

ITLAND (VL) HERALD
OCT. 2, 1915

AMU

FROM THE PRESS AGENTS

At The Colonial

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STILL THE SENSATION

Immense Crowds Still Packing Colonial Theatre To See Spectacle

There has been not the slightest cessation of interest displayed by the public of Norfolk and surrounding towns in the marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is still filling the Colonial theatre to capacity every afternoon and night. A double force is kept busy at the box office from opening time to closing time and, while it has been found impossible to fill 'phone orders or answer 'phone calls on this account, it is still possible to secure desirable seats by personal application in time for the remaining performances.

David J. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the North and the South.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluoid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. According to experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art form far superior to the old-fashioned history or historical novel. A very eminent public man has nicknamed it "history by lightning."

Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical pictures.

...theatre.

E. S. Kaite of Royce street is visiting relatives in Danby.

SPECIAL PRICE FOR CHILDREN.

A Lesson In History in "The Birth of a Nation."

Interest in the historical end of the most wonderful picture in the kingdom of photoplays, "The Birth of a Nation," continues and Warren D. Church, manager of the Playhouse where the picture will be shown this afternoon and tonight for the last times, has made a special offer for the younger element, old enough to appreciate the value of the "movies" along this line.

In speaking of the picture last night Mr. Church said:

"I have made a special price for this afternoon for the benefit of the young people, for others who have seen the picture speak of its historic value. Mr. Griffith, the producer, went to considerable expense in getting together both Confederate and Union generals to stage the scenes of the battle acts.

"This is only one of many instances which have been accurately reproduced in the picture, compiled at an expense of $500,000 and including the period surrounding the Civil war."

The picture will be shown at Burlington beginning Monday of next week and from there it will go to St. Albans for two days. The picture will be in Barre the week of October 11.

The film being shown in Vermont is in charge of David E. Dow, a well-known theatrical man and especially well known since the motion picture end of the game developed.

WALTHAM (Mass.) NEWS
OCT. 2, 1915

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

All records theatrically have been smashed completely by D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic Theatre, Boston. In number of weeks this attraction completes in Boston one solid half-year of consecutive performances for this is the twenty-sixth week of its stay. It is the more remarkable if one stops to consider that the most of this time has been through the summer months when theatres are closed as a rule. It is well known theatrical history by this time that after a run of 22 weeks at the Tremont Theatre, "The Birth of a Nation" was obliged to leave this play house, on account of the opening of the regular season on Labor Day, and a new home was found at the Majestic in order to meet the very pronounced public demand for a continuance of the Boston engagement.

The length of the stay becomes the more remarkable when it is considered that all other famous runs in Boston have been of plays which gave eight performances a week, while "The Birth of a Nation" has continuously been presented every afternoon and evening, making twelve performances each week. If these performances which have been given are figured out on the basis of eight performances a week it would have required nearly ten months, or to be exact, thirty-nine weeks, to have given the 312 performances of "The Birth of a Nation" which will have been given by Saturday night of this week, October 2.

And still the crowds flock to the Majestic Theatre, Boston, to enthuse over these realistic scenes of the antibellum days, the Civil War and the reconstruction period. The 27th week will begin at the Majestic next Monday afternoon, October 4.

CHATTANOOGA (Tenn.) NEWS
OCT. 2, 1915

AT THE BIJOU

"Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be shown at the Bijou on Oct. 14-15-16. It will be shown here just as it was in New York and Boston at $2.

MAE MARSH

Who Plays Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mayor Littleton and the president of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others will be invited to witness the opening night's performance. Prices for this special engagement in Chattanooga will be announced later.

OCT. 2, 1915
ASHEVILLE (N. C.) CITIZEN

SHOWING OF PICTURE

LOCAL ORGANIZATION PROTESTS AGAINST COMING ATTRACTION.

"The Birth of a Nation" Booked for Presentation at the Auditorium This Month.

Formal protest against the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," the moving picture production booked for presentation at the Auditorium October 18, 19 and 20, was made at yesterday's meeting of the city commissioners by the Western North Carolina Educational and Missionary society through J. R. Nelson, president, and E. F. Mason, secretary. The protest was contained in a communication addressed to the commissioners in which they were congratulated upon the success of their administration at Asheville and in which their attention was called to the fact that the picture which is booked for presentation here is regarded by the organization as one which will create bad feeling between the members of the two races. The picture is based on "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

The commissioners ordered that the petition be filed, no action being taken which would interfere with the presentation of the picture at this city. The protest here followed those of negro's organizations in many cities throughout the country although it stated that the picture has never yet been forbidden at any of the cities at which it has been booked. It is being shown at Norfolk at the present time that city being the first southern municipality which was chosen for the presentation of the picture. A hard fight was made against it at Norfolk but the governing body of that city took no action to forbid its presentation.

Macon avenue was ordered paved at yesterday afternoon's meeting of the commissioners, the city engineer being instructed to prepare specifications for the work and to ask the contractors of the city to make bids on the work.

A number of matters of a routine nature were considered at yesterday's meeting and members of the board to whom various matters had been referred made their reports to the board as a whole.

HOLYOKE (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
OCT. 1, 1915

WOULD RENT CITY HALL FOR FILMS

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AGENT SEEKS RIGHT TO USE HALL FOR THREE WEEKS.

George D. Miller, the New England agent for the "Birth of a Nation" picture production, was in the city this morning and conferred with Mayor Woods and City Clerk John F. Sheehan relative to leasing the city hall for three weeks, beginning October 11. No decision was made in the case as there are several of the dates during that period already booked.

While there are lot of people in the city who undoubtedly would like to see the big picture production which has been such a sensation in the big cities for the past year, there is little support for the plan of having it produced in the city hall. The city hall is primarily for the use of the citizens of Holyoke. The rental, as fixed by the board of aldermen, is set at a figure so low that it barely covers the cost of service. To withdraw the hall from use by any body of Holyoke citizens that might want it and turn it over to some outside party intent only on making as much money out of it as possible would seem the height of bad policy.

Again, the city hall is not insured and while the possibility of a fire or an accident there during such an attraction is remote, it is still well within the realm of possibility. If the city hall has to be burned, by all means let it be done by some of our own.

By the action of the board of aldermen, the sole right to lease the city hall rests with the city clerk and the mayor has nothing to do with the decision.

TO HAVE "DOG ROAST."

The members of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church will enjoy the second "Dog Roast" of the year tomorrow. Early in the summer about thirty members of the league journeyed forth laden with good things to eat. Needless to say the chief feature of the menu was fat, juicy frankfurts which the party by the aid of long sticks roasted over the camp fire. The appetites of those present were excited to the ...
...testing ag...the...

MANCHESTER (N. H.) MIRROR
OCT. 2, 1915

SATURDAY, OCT

THE PLAYHOUSE

Rose King is playing in Brooklyn and Joe Creehan is holding down the boards at Lowell.

The opera troupe which played at the Palace the last three days of this week had hard luck. The tenor's voice went back on him Friday night and the "Rigoletto" sketch had to be cut out. The manager of the troupe, a lady, was stricken with a rheumatic affliction and confined to her bed at the hotel. She would not take the services of any regular physician, being a Christian Scientist, and notified her New York doctor to give her absent treatment. But one of the entire company of actors could speak English, and that one but slightly.

Manager O'Neill says it may be that "The Dream of the Orient" will be here again this season. That was a fast—very fast—dancing and singing combination. He has not heard yet from "The Green Umbrella" people. That was also a tip-top act.

It is understood that "The Fashion Shop" is coming back to Manchester. Correspondence is being had with the management of this act.

The business done by the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company at the Park theatre this week was fine from the box-office standpoint. It is one of the mysteries of theatre history how this ancient melodrama holds on—but it does, and probably always will.

Word from George Freeman, who is out with the "Damaged Goods" company, is to the effect that business is good. The company is now getting into Pennsylvania.

The posters and the bills of the "Everywoman" show, due here at the Palace Saturday night of next week, are more than ordinarily artistic. Some of them would be great for the den.

Certain of the local clergymen took in "The Birth of a Nation" picture at the Auditorium this week, and were much surprised at the scope of the modern moving picture idea.

While the Ku-Klux Klan idea was idealized in "The Birth of a Nation," following the trend of the Dixon story, the congressional reports of 1871 give the bald-headed facts that the Ku-Klux gentry were robbers and guerillas, and that much of their rounding-up of victims was due to politics and had nothing to do with the protection of the white woman. Some of the men they hanged were innocent of even a misdemeanor. Congress in 1871 thoroughly and exhaustively sifted this Ku-Klux Klan business.

Perhaps everybody doesn't know it, but Corse Payton, who opens an engagement at the Park theatre next week, once submitted to a biography analysis, and Gertrude Andrews wrote a book about him. The book was illustrated with stock wood cuts, and was almost as funny as a Mark Twain ebullition. However, Payton regarded it as great. There was nothing in it about the coat that he swapped off with Walter Cox. The date of the Corse Payton book was 1901.

LOWELL (Mass.) SUN
OCT. 2, 1915

country to ... to munitions. Furthermore, it would be an injustice to the manufacturers who have a right to fill foreign orders that do not conflict with the duties of a neutral power as laid down by international law.

BIRTH OF A NATION

West Springfield has granted a permit for the production of "The Birth of a Nation" which Springfield, across the river, barred. "You see, we don't have to worry about a negro vote on this side," said the chairman of the West Springfield selectmen. Not a neighborly remark to make, but one containing as the saying goes, more truth than poetry.—Springfield Union.

Possibly it is because this historic production has been barred in Springfield that it has been barred in Lowell also. We are copying Springfield in a few things, it would seem, but certainly not in our method of doing business. In preventing the people of Lowell from seeing this historic and patriotic production in their own city Mayor Murphy has done them an injustice. There is nothing in the pictures as now revised to justify this interdict. There have been plays presented here that should have been stopped and when Mayor Murphy's attention was called to one of them he said he had read the book and there was nothing wrong in it. But the dramatization acted out upon the stage usually departs from the narrative, as it did in that particular case.

BURLINGTON (Vt.) NEWS
OCT. 2, 1915

...Week, who has been ... with relatives ... and ... Monday, will in a few days return to her home in Marlboro, Mass.

AMUSEMENTS.

Last Day of Champlin Company's Engagement at Strong.

The Charles K. Champlin Stock company continued their engagement at the Strong theatre yesterday with two performances of David Belasco's, "The Heart of Maryland." There was a large audience in the afternoon, and in the evening the attendance tested the capacity of the theatre.

The Champlin company gives its last performances here today, giving "Stolen Evidence" afternoon and night.

"Birth of a Nation."

The dramatic form has often been employed by the greatest minds of the world to express the usages and sufferings of war. No pen has been able to make as impressive a picture as Griffith has encompassed in this masterpiece. A born realist he cuts into the quick of facts that he may establish his dramatic plot. He masses great armies upon a historic plane to reproduce the records of a mighty struggle and by the human interests of two families makes a great nation's efforts a topic of dramatic construction which appeals to the heart and the sympathies as no bald narrative of facts could hope to do. To attain results he employs the passions, the loves and the conflict of essential drama. He writes history by flashes of lightning and with it all has built up a spectacle that thrills the human soul, brings tears to the eyes, mingles pathos with laughter, and above all else, does something fine upon the most tremendous scale that was ever undertaken by a dramatist in the world's history.

"The Birth of a Nation" is well worth while and when one has witnessed it, it is easy to understand why it has created such a gigantic stir. The engagement of this greatest of all film spectacles opens at the Strong theatre next Monday for four days.

PHILADELPHIA, (PA.) RECORD.
Date ... OCT 3 ...

Forrest—"Birth of a Nation."

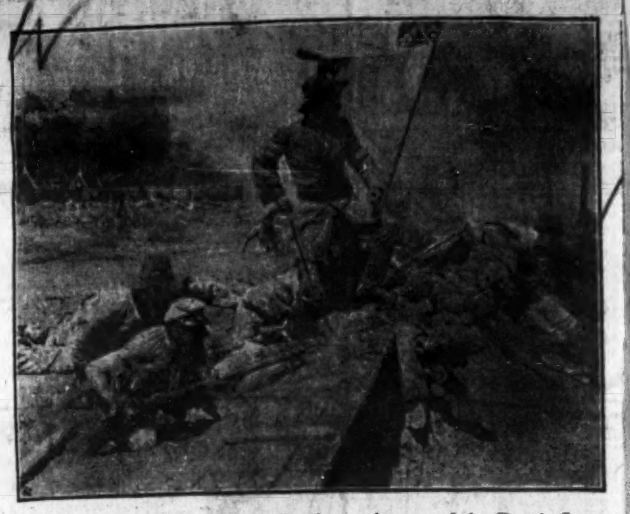
The same meed of unceasing success which cause to the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities, has been the fortune of the production in this city. At each presentation of the picture in the Forrest Theatre there has been a crowd sufficient to place standing room at a premium. However, the management has made every effort to accommodate patrons with seats and persons who have been turned away from the box office for lack of accommodation have wisely purchased tickets for later performances. This is made possible by the arrangement permitting the purchase of seats two weeks in advance.

So widespread has been the discussion of the theme of "The Birth of a Nation" that it is hardly necessary again to outline the story. Suffice it to say that the spectacle deals in a big way with a big theme. No such wonderful photographic conceptions have ever before been made for the screen and the Griffith achievement is unquestionably the greatest yet made known to the theatre patrons. A more complete idea of the conflict of armies on the field of battle could not be given even were actual hostilities to be photographed. The onlooker sees a battle as only those in the very front line of fighting would see a conflict. Then there is a wonderful realization of the South of ante-bellum days, when slaves worked in the cotton fields and were sold on the block. The great Liberator, who gave to the helpless the boon of freedom, is seen in his very human aspect as the comforter of the oppressed, and the tragedy that snuffs out the light of such a life is in contrast the more impressive. Indeed, it would be difficult to imagine a more effective and affecting scene than that showing the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, at Washington. Yet these are but a few of the many tremendous incidents brought upon the screen and the skill of the master hand that intermingled the tragic with elements of romance and of comedy is sure to command the highest respect and admiration.

Incidental to the showing of the picture is a musical score which is a marvel in synchronization, for each motion is illustrative of the shifting scene and the whole field of musical composition seems to have been searched with the skill of the true artist. No better cast has ever been assembled for a motion picture presentation. There is no wonder, therefore, that "The Birth of a Nation" is epoch-making in theatricals.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM 101
OCT. 2, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Carries Many Stirring War Scenes



The Little Colonel Leading His Regiment in one of the Battle Scenes

"BIRTH OF A NATION" AT POLI'S MONDAY

Engagement Here Extends Over Entire Week—Production is Wonderful One.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at Poli's beginning Monday afternoon and continuing for the week, with daily matinees.

This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the big playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Natioan" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburgh; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattock; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimilies of the originals. Althgether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,00 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

RUTLAND (Vt.) NEWS
OCT. 2, 1915

FF

will be confined to her bed for some time.

Last Performance of "The Birth of a Nation" Tonight.

The great picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which has already drawn 11 large audiences to The Playhouse this week, will be shown for the last time this evening. As the exhibition is long, taking three hours, it constitutes the entire program of the evening.

Starting with scenes in the south just before the civil war, the films take the audience through the stirring episodes which preceded the opening of hostilities, the starting of troops for the front, actual fighting, including the siege of Petersburgh, the assassination of Lincoln, Lee's surrender, the tyranny of the negroes after they were freed, the work of the Klu Klux Klan and the reconstruction period, following the conflict. Some of the great Afro-American colleges are shown to give an idea of the change which has taken place in the people since 1870. Patriotic music and southern melodies are played through the entire evening. There is a love story which runs through the picture.

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) GAZETTE-TIMES
OCT. 3, 1915

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth week of its successful run at the Nixon Theater tomorrow afternoon, is the most impressive spectacle ever staged. At the Nixon its run promises to eclipse all records of either dramatic or photoplay productions.

The stirring events of the Civil War and the period of Reconstruction are shown in striking detail. The fighting in the trenches at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the saving of the South by the clans are faithfully reproduced. Months of research by historians preceded the actual work of production. Engineers from West Point and veterans of the North and South assisted in laying out the great battlegrounds. The artillery and other ordnance were those of the exact period. The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies took over two months. Director Griffith used 20 batteries of cameras which he directed from a central tower by means of a system of underground telephone connections.

As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close it is well to see this great production at the earliest possible time, as there will be no other engagement played either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburgh. The performances start at 2:15 and 8:15.

PHILADELPHIA, (Pa.) INQUIRER.
OCT 3
ate .....

FF

FORREST—It was a wise managerial provision that arranged for a seat sale two weeks in advance for the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its last weeks at this theatre. The lobby of the theatre is thronged during the entire day by persons who are eager to purchase seats, and those who are turned away have opportunity to make reservations in advance so that dissatisfaction is thereby averted. "The Birth of a Nation" is a marvel of theatrical managers all over the country, for the same sort of sweeping success which the production has had here is the record of the film achievement in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities.

It is a big theme that has been handled by Griffith and his effort measured up in every respect to the stupendous historical romance. There is no one who will not declare that this Griffith achievement is the greatest yet made known to the stage. Actual participation in a battle on a European field would give the onlooker no more complete idea of the conflict of armies than may be had by viewing contending Union and Confederate troops in "The Birth of a Nation." In this picture one sees the South of ante-bellum days and there is a suggestion of the causes leading to the War of the Rebellion, with Abraham Lincoln as a central figure. Remarkably true to life is the impersonation given of that great Emancipator and it is a moment of poignant tragedy when he is seen to droop as he falls a victim to the assassin's bullet. The stirring scenes depicting the night rides of the Ku Klux Klan are deeply impressed upon each beholder and there is, by the same token, as lasting an impression made by the romantic tale which adorns this historic creation.

The musical score prepared by Joseph Carl Briel, played by a symphony orchestra, is of great value in a dramatic way. As for the cast it should be said that its superior is not to be found in any other motion picture production. Who wonders, then, that "The Birth of a Nation" is epoch-making in the world of the theatre.

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) GAZETTE-TIMES
OCT. 3, 1915

One of the contributing beauties of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon is the musical score. Of its author, Joseph Carl Briel, mention is made elsewhere. But the score is so delightfully interpreted that due credit should be given the orchestra and its direction. There is no name on the program to indicate where this credit belongs so it is only an act of justice to name Albert Pesce as one of the big factors in the success of the Griffith pictures. He is the orchestra leader and one of the best in the country.

Before coming to America Mr. Pesce, who is a native born Italian, conducted grand opera and symphonic orchestras in Milan, Italy. Fred C. Whitney then secured his services to direct the initial production of "The Chocolate Soldier" in New York city, and, after a season's run, he joined hands with Arthur Hammerstein and made a pronounced success with Emma Trentini in "The Firefly," for whom he composed and interpolated the little song, "I Am the Firefly." His more recent work has been with Henry W. Savage, under whose management he conducted the engagements in the Eastern cities of Mizzi Hajos in "Sari."

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) PRESS
OCT. 3, 1915

FF

NIXON.

"The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth week last week of its successful run at the Nixon theater tomorrow afternoon, is a bright beacon-light which illumines the most important period of American history. It is a brilliant faithful and vivid historical romance which tells the story of the war between the states and of the reconstruction era of the south. This mighty masterpiece is now filling the following theaters to their utmost capacity: the Liberty and the Brighton in New York; the Tremont in Boston; the Illinois in Chicago and the Davidson in Milwaukee, besides theaters in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other large cities of the west. It has pulled high-class amusements out of the slough of despond. The two-dollar picture has come to stay and "The Birth of a Nation" will always be remembered as the first to merit and win success in the best theaters at a scale of prices the same as had been obtained by the most costly dramatic productions. As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close it is well to see this great production at the earliest possible time as there will be no other engagement played either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburg.

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) GAZETTE-TIMES
OCT. 3, 1915

world of the theatre.

CINCINNATI (O.) ENQUIRER
OCT. 3, 1915

of business each season, just as "The Sign of the Cross" and "Way Down East" and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" [illegible] to be.

XXX

There has been a great deal of disappointment experienced throughout the state of Ohio on account of the inability of the sensational picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," to pass the Censorship Board. Though the action of the officials is being widely mourned by the theater managers, and also by some of the curious public, the decision was not a very great surprise to those who are directly concerned with theatricals. In fact, it would have been a genuine surprise if the picture had passed. Governor Willis was quoted as saying early last summer that the picture would never be allowed to play in Ohio as long as he was Governor of the state.

There does not seem to be much doubt but that political expediency has been served by the censorship decision. It would have been a serious error to have opposed the negro vote. The opposition of the negro element to the picture has been most pronounced. In those states where the picture is being shown there have been no serious race riots. But none of them are as close to the South as the southern part of Ohio. There may be no danger even here, but it is the part of wisdom not to incense the public.

Whatever the disappointment may be as to the decision, it provoked a rather foolish statement from one of the picture men last week who said that the big film companies would soon be compelled to give Ohio the go-by. That sounds very much like a bluff.

There is a rich field in Ohio for the moving picture concerns, and no producer is going to boycott the state just because he cannot get all he thinks he ought to have. Censorship of pictures is a necessity. The necessity has been brought about by the producers themselves. The situation is entirely in their hands. If they had not created the need for a judicious exercise of censorship they would not be confronted with so much opposition to-day. Now, if the censorship is primarily due to them, then it is the height of folly for them to claim that they will abandon the state rather than submit to it. The truth is, they will submit to it. And it is well that they should. The Ohio Board of Censors is far from infallible. There may be differences of opinion, and there may be times when the film producers have a just cause for complaint. But, on the whole, the contrary is the case. Many an objectionable film is kept out of the state by this board, whose very existence warns producers with questionable pictures. Producers who are continually crying out against censorship must fall under suspicion.

Whether the decision with regard to "The Birth of a Nation" was a just one or not is a question. But, the decision having been made, there is nothing to do but acquiesce. Threats are of no avail.

J. H. T.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MORN.
OCT. 3, 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Not to Be Shown.

West Springfield's Board of Selectmen is to be commended for cancelling the permit for the film "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown in that town. The only course, and the only proper one in the circumstances, was to reverse its hasty step, and put itself in accord with the official attitude of Springfield and the sentiment of the people as commonly expressed. The Union has already indicated the reasons why it deems this film unfit for exhibition, and this without any attempt to disparage the merit it may possess as a spectacle.

In our judgment, the bating of any race in a nation constituted like this is anything but safe business, to say nothing about the question of justice. We have had some startling reminders in recent times, in North and South alike, of the dynamic force of race prejudice. There is no virtue in the argument that no harm is evident from the showing of this film in other cities, that no serious riots have been provoked and no Negroes lynched. Prejudice, antipathy and hatred represent a silent force, and may seem as unobtrusive and harmless, from an outward viewpoint, as a stick of dynamite until something happens to produce a concussion. The silent forces are none the less effective because they are silent and their work is gradual. In the end such forces count, be they good or evil. Springfield, and our other valley communities as well, can afford to forego this kind of amusement.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
OCT. 3, 1915

Chicopee Falls.—[Advertisement.

THE WISEST THING TO DO

West Springfield's Action on "Birth of a Nation" Disappoints Many, But Saves Bad Situation

From Our Special Correspondent.

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Saturday, October 2

"The Birth of a Nation" is sure of large and crowded houses if it ever does come to this section of the state. So West Springfield has not fought and bled entirely in vain, although the action of the selectmen in their meeting last night came as a blow to a large section of the town's population. That a majority of the citizens of the town would like to see the film in the town hall or anywhere else cannot be denied. Nevertheless, the action of the selectmen was the wisest thing that could have been done under the circumstances.

Springfield and West Springfield were not drawn any closer together as a result of the struggle against the sensational screen drama. Many of the townspeople resented the holier than thou attitude assumed by some of the notables in the big city. The semijocular statements of the selectmen in the beginning that the colored vote had influenced Springfield's action in banning the film seemed to increase the friction. The statement credited to a Springfield man, in which he asked what town officials were going to divide the $2000 that he asserted had been offered to get the play on his side of the river did not help the situation. Other Springfield remarks of a similar nature only made the West-siders wonder why Springfield was casting the first stone.

The town is taking the safe course in not allowing the picture to be shown. The combination of a controversial film to be shown in the town hall after the other cities and towns in this vicinity had refused to sanction the production within their own limits puts the town in a delicate situation. West Springfield's record in the past has not been of the best along similar lines, and to take chances for the sake of a few hundred dollars, would not have been wise. The sooner the whole affair is forgotten the better.

Six clergymen by their protest delivered Wednesday evening are responsible for the action of the selectmen in refusing "The Birth of a Nation" entrance to the town. Their protest to the film was made on two grounds, the nature of the film itself and the undesirable notoriety that the town would win by allowing it to be presented. The ministers who signed the protest are Warren L. Atherton, George E. Sanderson, Oliver B. Loud, Dempster D. Gorton, Henry E. Leech and [illegible]

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) REPUBLICAN
OCT. 3, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" AT HOLYOKE

FILM LIKELY TO BE SHOWN

Use of Central Athletic Field—Political Affairs

From Our Special Correspondent.

HOLYOKE, Saturday, October 2

There were a number of things to occupy the interest of Holyokers the past week, although no very exciting happenings were included. After considerable backing and filling on the project of producing "The Birth of a Nation" in motion picture films, work was actively taken up toward the latter part of the week to stage this photoplay in the city hall. As it is viewed in Holyoke, the objection to this entertainment are largely the work of enthusiastic press agents who by creating a stir get a larger number to attend the production than would ordinarily be the case. If it were not for the storm of protest which has arisen from time to time, it is doubtful if the play would draw any very large attendance in the Paper city.

If a lease of the city hall can be secured for a long enough time the play will be brought to the city. As there are very few colored people in Holyoke there will naturally not be the objection to its appearance here, as has been the case in some other cities, and there is little danger of race riots resulting from its appearance any more than there is of riots from the production of films which deal with other nationalities.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) HOMESTEAD
OCT. 4, 1915

"The Birth Of A Nation"

Manager Miller Is Out to Create Currosity for His Film and Mayor Stacy Is the Court of Last Resort

Mayor Stacy had no comment to make yesterday on the plan of George B. Miller, former manager of the Bijou, to secure his consent to the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Springfield by presenting to the mayor a petition signed by prominent citizens. The mayor declared that he had already made clear his attitude towards the exhibition of this film when he barred it some months ago, and suggested that it would take a lot of argument to convince him that it should be shown here.

However, Mayor Stacy would not comment definitely on the proposition, but said that he might have some interesting statements to make after such a petition as that suggested by Mr. Miller actually came into his hands.

Aroused by this second attempt to have the picture shown in Springfield several local organizations of colored people are getting ready to renew their protests against the exhibition of the film and are quite frank in denouncing the action of Mr. Miller in planning to send out canvassers for names for a gigantic petition to the mayor. They assert that such a petition would not necessarily signify approval of the film, but simply show that the agitation over it has created much curiosity about it. They are confident that the mayor will once more forbid its production here. Mayor Stacy is the court of last resort in this matter, and the film cannot be shown in any local theater without his express consent.

REPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM 101
OCT 4 1915

MAE MARSH FAVORITE IN "BIRTH OF NATION"

Takes Part of Flora Cameron, Younger Daughter in Southern Household.

It is a well-known fact that lovers of photo plays have their favorites among the actors in the cast and rave over their cleverness and personal charm as if they were before them on the legitimate stage in actual flesh and blood.

Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron the younger daughter in the Southern household in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Poli theatre this week, by her successful appearance in many photo plays during her three years' career, has attracted by her elf like charm and naive personality, many admirers who greet with pleasure her appearance on the screen.

Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of the brother back from the Civil war; the making of "southern ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black; the scene in the cellar with Miriam Cooper; the garden making that follows the return from the war; the southern banquet; and the pretty scene where she rains kisses on her brother Ben's mouth to console him for temporary loss of his sweetheart Elsie. There is always a touch of comedy or of pathos where Miss Marsh appears. Her personality lends itself to fine temperamental treatment of any part she plays. Her expressive, ever changing, mood-adapting face, is one of the most valuable in all the list of film favorites.

She was discovered by David W. Griffith, the producer of many film successes, long before he made "The Birth of a Nation."

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) STANDARD
OCT. 4, 1915

[illegible] are admitted as can be handled to good advantage by the instructor.

MAYOR WILSON 'O. Ks.' 'THE BIRTH OF A NATION'

Mayor Clifford B. Wilson today put his official "O. K." on "The Birth of a Nation," concerning the presentation of which at Poli's, this week, there has been considerable comment. In company with S. Z. Poli, the mayor reviewed the production at a private showing in Poli's theater this morning.

At its conclusion, the mayor announced that the production had met with his satisfaction. He offered a few suggestions to Mr. Poli, regarding the presentation of the production, to which Mr. Poli readily acceded.

"It is the most wonderful production of its kind I have ever seen," the mayor said, this noon.

CHATTANOOGA (Tenn.) TIMES
OCT. 3, 1915

Chattanooga awaits with interest the presentation of D. W. Griffith's wonderful and spectacular photo drama, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Bijou theater Oct. 14-16 inclusive. Among the features of this remarkable pictures are noted: Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the civil war reenacted.

Ford's theater, Washington, reproduced for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild Ku-Klux "rides" that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku-Klux costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"war as it actually is."

* * *

A musical score of forty piece synchronized to the scene.

* * *

Patrons of the Bijou theater are much pleased with the improved music at that house. Prof. Hastings is in charge of the orchestra. The several excellently rendered numbers were enthusiastically applauded at the performance of "Daddy Long Legs" on last Thursday night.

PITTSBURG (Pa.) POST
OCT. 3, 1915

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation" in Sixth Week.

D. W. Griffith's marvelous photo masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," which enters upon the sixth and last week of its run at the Nixon Theater tomorrow afternoon, is the most impressive picture spectacle.

Thrilling battle scenes, romantic situations and episodes of historical interest are parts of the most lavish production ever presented to the public. It is vital, throbbing with virility, of educational value and withal a love story.

The stirring events of the Civil war and the period of reconstruction are show in striking detail. The fighting in the trenches at Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and the saying of the South are faithfully reproduced. Months of research by historians preceded the work of production. Engineers from West Point and veterans of the North and South assisted in laying out the great battlegrounds. The actual work of assembling and rehearsing the armies took months. Director Griffith used 30 batteries of cameras, which he directed from a central tower by underground telephone. Such perfection of detail insured the success which this spectacle has achieved, not only in Pittsburgh, but in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Milwaukee.

As the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is to be brought to a close it is well to see this production at the earliest possible time, as there will be no other exhibition of it either in this city or within 100 miles of Pittsburgh.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) POST
OCT. 4, 1915

MAYOR WILSON APPROVES "BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE

View Special Run of Film at Poli's Today—Declares It Is Wonderful Production.

Mayor Clifford B. Wilson today put his official O. K. on "The Birth of a Nation," concerning the presentation of which at Poli's, this week, there has been considerable comment. In company with S. Z. Poli, the mayor reviewed the production at a private showing in Poli's theatre, this morning.

At its conclusion, the mayor announced that the production had met with his satisfaction. He offered a few suggestions to Mr. Poli, regarding the presentation of the production, to which Mr. Poli readily acceded.

"It is the most wonderful production of its kind I have ever seen," the mayor said this noon.

FITCHBURG (Mass.) NEWS
OCT. 4, 1915

[illegible] one was a white woan.

Knew What It Was.

Even the children have the "Birth of a Nation" fever. This morning in Main street, when a groom was leading through the city a racing horse which was conventionally concealed in all his fancy trappings, a little blue-jeans announced to his mother in specific and to all that part of the city in general that "There was a Kloo Kux! Look!"

OCT. 4, 1915
QUA (O.) CALL

NEGOTIATION FOR NEW SERVICE

MANAGER KRESS MAY HAVE TRIANGLE PRODUCTION HERE

Harry W. Kress, manager of May's Opera House, will leave for Chicago tonight as the guest of C. C. Hite, of Cincinnati, Ohio, manager for the Triangle film corporation, and will attend "The Birth of a Nation," the opening production at the Studebaker theater.

Though the Triangle productions are showing in the larger cities for as high as $2 and $3 a seat, Manager Kress, with his characteristic determination to give Piqua audiences the best in motion pictures, is negotiating for the service at his house in this city in addition to the Paramount [illegible]

BURLINGTON (Vt.) FREE PRESS
OCT. 4, 1915

AMUSEMENTS

"The Birth of a Nation" at The Strong To-day.

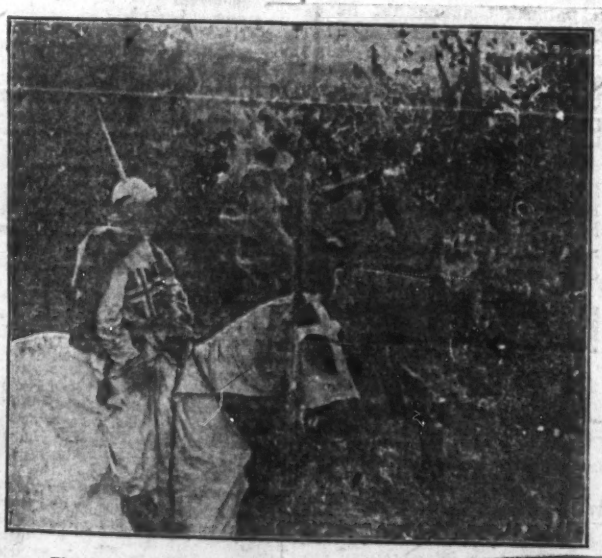
"The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable attraction of recent years in American stage annals. It uses 18,000 people to tell its story and 3,000 horses add their quota to its bigness. The epic links history and romance in a way never attempted before. Its basic scenes are founded in some of the most stirring events in the nation's development and these are contracted with human appeals and family interests which are after all the essentials of true drama. Great battles of the Civil War are fought before your eyes. Lee surrenders to Grant at Appommatox. Lincoln is assassinated as actually as the scene took place fifty years ago in Ford's theatre, Washington. The South before and after the war is pictured in its most interesting phases. Wild rides of the Klansmen lend a dash and spirit to the performances. All remains exactly as it was given originally in New York city and Boston when this marvelous picture astounded all and created more comment than all the plays that have been seen in a decade.

It is a picture in a life time; one that will in all probability never be duplicated and for that reason should be viewed by every man, woman and child in this city. Once seen it is never to be forgotten and since The Strong will undoubtedly be crowded daily during its engagement of this remarkable spectacle, which commences to-day for a period of four days, it would be wise for all to engage seats at the earliest possible moment.

There will be two performances daily, the matinees starting promptly at 2:15 o'clock, while the evening sessions will start at 8:00 o'clock. The patrons are requested to reach the theatre in plenty of season to be seated before the opening of the mighty production. (Adv.)

Dancing at the Van Ness.

The main dining room of the Van Ness



The Ride of Ku-Klux, a Big Scene in "The Birth of a Nation."

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) STANDARD
OCT. 4, 1915

'BITRH OF A NATION' OPENS AT POLI'S THEATER TODAY

Spectacle Film Play of American History Appeals to Large Gathering at Matinee Performance.

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at Poli's all this week. Bargain matinees are announced daily. This afternoon the theater was crowded.

It is brought here in exact reproduction of the grand attraction which is now in New York where is has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation" leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict. Eighteen thousand people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the customes worn by the people. Ten thousand yards of cloth of white muslin were used up in the regalia of the Ku Klux Klansmen. And yet with all this a simple, human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

The Little Colonel Charging th Enemy in 'The Birth of a Nation

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" CONTINUES ITS TRIUMPH

Wonderful Motion Picture Spectacle is Theatrical Sensation of the Season

It was a wise managerial provision that arranged for a seat sale two weeks in advance for the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Forrest.

The lobby of the theatre is thronged during the entire day by persons who are eager to purchase seats, and those who are turned away have opportunity to make reservations in advance so that dissatisfaction is thereby averted.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a marvel of theatrical managers all over the country, for the same sort of sweeping success which the production has had here is the record of the film achievement in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities.

It is a big theme that has been handled by Griffith and his effort measured up in every respect to the stupendous historical romance.

There is no one who will not declare that this Griffith achievement is the greatest yet made known to the stage.

Actual participation in a battle on a European field would give the onlooker no more complete idea of the conflict of armies than may be had by viewing contending Union and Confederate troops in "The Birth of a Nation."

In this picture one sees the South of ante-bellum days and there is a suggestion of the causes leading to the War of the Rebellion, with Abraham Lincoln as a central figure.

Remarkably true to life is the impersonation given of that great Emancipator and it is a moment of poignant tragedy when he is seen to droop as he falls a victim to the assassin's bullet.

The stirring scenes depicting the night rides of the Ku-Klux Klan are night rides of the Ku-Klux Klan are and there is, by the same token, as lasting an impression made by the romantic tale which adorns this historic creation.

The musical score prepared by Joseph Carl Briel, played by a symphony orchestra, is of great value in a dramatic way.

As for the cast, it should be said that its superior[illegible] not to be found in any other motio[illegible]icture production.

Who wonders [illegible]hen, that "The Bir[illegible] of a Nation" is epoch-making in the world of the teatre.

LYRIC.

Everything is in readiness for the presentation of "Love's Model," a thrilling detective play of life and love in Paris, at the Lyric theater this week. Miss Cecil Sponer and her dramatic stock company will appear in this play, and judging from the advance sale of seats for the production it wil be one of the big successes of the season at the Lyric.

The main events of the story concerning this latest of melodramatic comedies, deals with the very boldly serious as well as humorous adventures of Peggy Moore, a beautiful young girl from New Orleans, in Paris, France, where she has been sent on a highly important mission.

She becomes involved in some hazardous adventures with Mons. Ettiene, chief of the Paris detective bureau, and meets with further exploits when Kirk Fields, a young American artist studying in the French capitol, appears on the scene.

Pel Trenton, Robert Lawrence and the other members of the Cecil Spooner company will appear in "Love's Model" and it should prove to be one of the best plays offered by the Cecil Spooner players at the Lyric theater so far this season.

Dallas Daily Times Herald

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The assassination of Abraham Lincoln is one of the stirring features of "The Birth of a Nation," which opens its first Texas engagement at the Dallas Opera House tonight.

D. W. Griffith, producer of the spectacle of Civil war and reconstruction days, built, for this scene, the entire interior of Ford's theater as it was on the night of the saddest tragedy in American history. The auditorium, crowded to its capacity; the stage on which Laura Keene and her company were playing "Our American Cousin," and the president's box, set in its tier of boxes, are all reproduced from photographs and contemporary description.

The exact manner of the assassination of Lincoln is not certainly known. Mr. Griffith, in his researches, found eighteen distinct accounts, all of them differing in minor details. From these accounts he selected what he considered the most probable chain of events, and every movement made by the actors in the scene will be found by the student of history to be authenticated by one or another of the accounts. University professors, who have seen the production, have given it as their opinion that Mr. Griffith has admirably performed a difficult feat, and it is probable that his interpretation will be the one that will live in history.

The care shown in the staging of the assassination of Lincoln was exercised throughout the production, and the spectacle is considered a masterpiece of history as well as romance. For three months a corps of history experts worked under the direction of Mr. Griffith, examining no less than five thousand volumes, besides countless official records, pamphlets and newspaper files. This data was compiled and digested and then submitted to Mr. Griffith for a final verdict and selection of picturesque facts.

VOL. XXXIII. NO. 222. ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 3, 1915. PRICE FIVE CENTS

This Picture Cost Half a Million Dollars

Rupert Hughes Describes "The Birth of a Nation," Here in December, for Journal Readers

THESE are the first scenes printed here from "The Birth of a Nation," the half million dollar picture play, which will be shown at regular theatrical prices at the Atlanta theater, December 6 to 11, six nights and five matinee performances.

This pictorial drama, based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," shows the rich south before the Civil war; pictures the battlefields of the sixties with southern and northern armies at death grip; and, finally, displays the south rising from the ashes of defeat.

"It is the epic of a proud people beaten into the dust and refusing to stay there," some one has said.

"The biggest things the theaters can do are reduced to childishness when compared to it," another has added.

The most complete description of this picture, however, was written by Rupert Hughes, the novelist, in the following article, which The Journal has secured permission to reprint:

"Here," writes Mr. Hughes, "are hundreds of scenes in place of four or five. Armies in landscape, instead of squads of supers. Here is the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here are social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here is a whole gallery of scenery, of humanity, of still life, and of life in wildest career.

"Here are the southerners in their wealth. Here is the ballroom with the seethe of dancers, here are the soldiers riding away to war, and the soldiers trudging home defeated with poverty ahead of them and new and ghastly difficulties arising on every hand.

"The leagues of film uncoil and pour forth beauty of scene and face and expression, beauty of fabric and attitude and motion.

Symphony of Light

"'The Birth of a Nation' is a symphony of light, light in all its magic; the sun flashing through a bit of blown black lace and giving immortal beauty to its pattern, or quivering in a pair of eyes, or a snow-drift of bridal veil, or on a moonlit brook or mountainside;

At the top Lee's army makes its last stand. The small oval shows the klu klux gathering. Miriam Cooper as Margaret Cameron is seen at left. At right refugees fleeing from Atlanta before Sherman's men.

eyes, or a snow-drift of bridal veil, or on a moonlit brook or mountainside.

"Superb horses plunge or rear or gallop with a heart-quickening glory of speed down road and lane and through flying waters. Now comes the thrill of a charge or of a plunging steed caught back on its haunches in a sudden arrest. Now follows the terror of a bestial mob, the hurrah of a rescue, streets filled with panic and with carnival. Life is motion and here is the beautiful moving monument of motion.

"What can the stage give to rival all this? What can the novel or the epic poem? The stage can publish the voice and the actual flesh; yet from the film these faces were eloquent enough without speech. And after all when we see people we are merely receiving in our eyes the light that beats back from their surfaces; we are seeing merely photographs and moving pictures.

"I have witnessed numberless photoplays, pictures of every sort and condition of interest and value. I have seen elaborate 'feature-films' occupying much time and covering many scenes. But none of them approaches the unbroken fascination of 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

"The realism of this work is amazing. The grandeur of mass and the minuteness of detail are unequaled in my experience. My first impression of this picture was that it is something new and wonderful in dramatic composition and in artistic achievement.

"In his novel, 'The Clansman,' the Rev. Thomas Dixon had made a fervid defense of his people from the harsh judgments and condemnations of unsympathetic historians. With this book as a foundation, a structure of national scope and of heroic proportions has been built.

"Of course, size has little to do with art. A perfect statuette like one of the exquisite figurines of Tanagra is as great in a sense as the cathedral of Rheims. A flawless sonnet of Milton's need not yield place to his 'Paradise Lost.' A short story of Poe's has nothing to fear from a cycle of Dumas novels, nor has 'The Suwanee River' anything to fear from the Wagnerian tetralogy. And yet we can not but feel that a higher power has created the larger work; since the larger work includes the problems of the smaller.

"Lest We Forget"

"Hardly anybody can be found today who is not glad that slavery was wrenched out of our national life, but it is not well to forget how and why it was defended, and by whom; what it cost to tear it loose, or what suffering and bewilderment were left with the bleeding wounds. The north was not altogether blameless for the existence of slavery, nor was the south altogether blameworthy for it or for its aftermath. "The Birth of a Nation" is a peculiarly human presentation of a vast racial tragedy.

"It is a chronicle of human passion. It is true to fact and thoroughly documented. It is in no sense an appeal to lynch-law. The suppression of the picture would be a dangerous precedent in American dramatic art.

"If the authors are never to make use of plots which might offend certain sects, sections, professions, trades, races or political parties, then creative art is indeed in a sad plight.

"I saw the play first in a small projecting room with only half a dozen spectators present. We sat mute and spellbound for three hours. When I learned that it had to be materially condensed it seemed a pity to destroy one moment of it. The next time I saw it was in a crowded theater and it was accompanied by an almost incessant murmur of approval and comment, roars of laughter, gasps of anxiety and outbursts of applause. It was not silent drama so far as the audience was concerned.

"The scene changed with the velocity of lightning, of thought. One moment we saw a vast battlefield with the enemies like midgets in the big world, the next we saw some small group filling the whole space with its personal drama; then just one or two faces big with emotion. And always a story was being told with every device of suspense, preparation, relief, development and crisis.

"I can not imagine a human emotion that is not included somewhere in this story from the biggest national parchol ogy to the littlest whim of a petulant girl; from the lowest depths of ruthless villainy to the utmost grandeur of patriotic ideal.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is a work of epochal importance in a large and fruitful field of social endeavor. In paying it this tribute of profound homage, I feel that I am doing only my duty by American art, merely rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

LEWISTON (Maine) JOURNAL
OCT. 4, 1915
467

AMUSE

The Message and Purpose of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Empire All This Week, Commencing This Afternoon at 2 O'clock.

Printed on the program of "The Birth of A Nation," that massive photoplay spectacle conceived by D. W. Griffith, presented at the Empire theater all of this week, commencing at two o'clock this afternoon, is the explanation and purpose and message of "The Birth of a Nation," which covers the entire picture as follows:

Among our fathers lived a poet-leader who dreamed a new vision of humanity—that out of the conflicting interests and character of 13 American states, stretching their territory from the frosts of the North to the tropic jungles of Florida, there could be built one mighty people. For 80 years this vision remained a dream—sectionalism and disunity the grimmest realities of our life. Thru 75 years of growth and conflict these 13 original states clung to their individual sovereignty, feeling with jealous alarm the slow but resistless development of a national spirit within the body of the Federal Union. This new being was stirred at last into conscious life by Daniel Webster's immortal words—"Liberty and Union, one and inseparable, now and forever."

The issue which our fathers had not dared to face—whether the State or the Union should ultimately have supreme rule—was joined in 1861 over the problem of the negro.

The South held with passionate conviction that we were a Republic of Republics, each state free and sovereign. The North, under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln, held that the Union was indestructible, and its sovereignty supreme.

Until Lincoln's day, the right of each state to peaceful secession was scarcely disputed, North or South. New England had more than once threatened to withdraw before South Carolina in her blind rage led the way.

And yet, unconsciously, the new being within had grown into a living soul, and in the mortal agony of four years of Civil War, and eight years of more horrible Reconstruction, a Nation was born.

THE RIDE OF THE KU-KLUX, A BIG SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE EMPIRE THIS WEEK.

BRIDGEPORT (Ct.) FARMER
OCT. 4, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS AT POLI'S TO CAPACITY AUDIENCES

No other industry is the same given time ever grew as rapidly in America as the business enterprises that are commonly classified as motion pictures industries. In capital invested and financial returns from these inventions the moving picture is now the fifth greatest combination in America.

The thing began as a five cent enterprise. In ten years time it has steadily grown until today great institutions all over the land are devoted to the manufacture of moving pictures. Millions are invested in some of the finest theatres in the world.

LILLIAN GISH In "The Birth of a Nation."

Hundreds of thousands find employment in the different branches of the work. Even high finance has taken notice of the once lowly "movie" and films are now a common stock for dealings on the great exchanges of the country. The one man who has done more than all others to dignify the new form of art is David Ward Griffith, whose tireless energy and art are responsible for the first $2 moving picture "The Birth of a Nation." It is estimated that before this great production has exhausted its earning capacity it will be seen by ten million people in America. Later on it will exceed these figures in the other countries of the world. It is conservatively estimated the big attraction will ultimately earn over eight million dollars. Not a bad income on an original investment of $500,000. This prospect stamps "The Birth of a Nation" the greatest piece of theatrical property the current century has brought forth if not the greatest winner of all ages.

It is safe to predict that Poli's big playhouse here will be packed to the doors at every performance this week. The advance sale for this wonderful attraction is enormous. Matinees will be given daily at 2:15 p. m.

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM
OCT. 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" A WONDERFUL FILM

Takes Big Audience at Poli's by Storm as Thrilling Scenes are Thrown on Screen.

UNPARALLELED PRODUCT

Portrays Historical Facts in Gripping Fashion—Effects Plainly Brought Out.

The first day's showing of D. W. Griffith's stupendous motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of A Nation," at Poli's Main street theatre afforded pleasure to hundreds of people who witnessed the mighty historical drama in its premier showing in this city. There is nothing to excite passion in the production.

The despicable "Carpet Baggers"—unprincipled politicians from the North who went South after the war and stirred up the ignorant blacks to commit deeds of outlawry and rapine are held up in as unfavorable a light as the renegade negro who causes a beautiful young white girl to jump from a high precipice to her death rather than submit to his advances. The good side of the negro character is shown as well as the other side in the depiction of the old colored "mammy" who rescues her master from death at the hands of negro soldiers.

Great Historical Drama.

The play justifies itself on the score that it is without question the greatest historical drama ever produced. The North sees the great war through the viewpoint of a Southerner and the South sees it through the viewpoint of a Northerner. "The Birth of A Nation" on this score alone should prove to be the greatest force for enabling the North to understand the South and vice versa, that has ever been conceived.

Sit Spell-Bound.

The people who sat spell-bound yesterday afternoon and last evening as the wonderful panoramas were unfolded before their eyes, seeing climax pile itself upon climax, were agreed on one point, whether their sympathies were with the North or the South. That point was that the play was historically perfect and the production the greatest ever seen on a motion picture screen in Bridgeport.

To appreciate the great battle scenes, battles in which thousands of men and horses take part; the riots in the Southern cities; the scenes attending the assassination of President Lincoln; the rides of the Ku Klux Klan; the burning of cities, and hundreds of other thrilling scenes, one must see the great photo drama for himself.

War Plainly Shown.

The struggle between the South under Lee, "Stonewall" Jackson, and its other intrepid leaders on one hand, and the North under Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, and the rest, on the other, is faithfully shown in a manner which causes the most blase theatregoer to lean forward in his seat, his attention held by the awe-inspiring scenes before him.

One sees the great struggle between the North and the South start in the fight for abolition of slavery in a land which promises freedom and equality to all men. Home ties are broken as fathers and sons rally to the call to arms. Boyhood friends meet as enemies on the field of battle and one of the most touching scenes in the entire specatcle is shown when Duke Cameron, youngest son of old Dr. Cameron meets in battle his school day chum, Tod Stoneman, son of Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader in the House of Representatives. Stoneman is wearing the blue and Cameron is clothed in the grey. In a terrific charge the young Northerner falls, mortally wounded. As he drops to the ground the young Southern youth runs up and is about to jab his bayonet through the blue-clad figure when the dying youth opens his eyes. The two friends recognize each other and as the Southern lad halts his bayonet in midair a bullet crashes through his breast and he falls at the side of his friend. The lad in blue and the lad in grey die, locked in each other's embrace. This is but one of the many incidents of a similar character which run through the play.

Assassination Shown.

The assassination of Lincoln is shown exactly as it occurred, every detail of the great tragedy being depicted. The invasion of the South, after the war, by the "Carpet Baggers;" the excesses which the negroes were encouraged in by the Radical leaders of the country; and the salvation of the whites in the South by the band of crusaders known as the Klu Klux Klan, thrilled all who saw, and brought spectators to their feet clapping their hands in appreciation of the dramatic scene.

Wonderful Spectacle.

It is a wonderful spectacle throughout, and one which is certain to go down as one of the greatest things of its kind ever seen in Bridgeport. The management of the Poli Theatre made special arrangements for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" and the innovations will obtain for the rest of the week. Men garbed as Union and Confederate soldiers stand on guard at the entrance to the playhouse, young women in the costume of the South distribute programs in the foyer, and ushers are clad in the knee trousers, ruffs and satins of 50 years ago. Nothing has been left undone in the effort to make the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in Bridgeport an unparalled event in local theatrical history.

HENRY WALTHALL as "The Little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Colonial, week of September 27.

"BIRTH OF A NATION COMING TO COLONIAL

Still at the height of its triumph in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis and other metropolitan centers, David W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle of the reconstruction, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Colonial theatre for a week's engagement beginning Monday night, September 27. Daily matinees will be given after the opening.

The coming of the spectacle will be notable event aside from its own importance as a theatrical offering. It will give Norfolk the distinction of being the first city of the South to witness a mighty dramatic narrative which, although distinctly Southern in atmosphere and theme, has been shown only in the larger cities of the North. There has been a nation-wide demand for the spectacle from the smaller cities, but only a few will be fortunate enough to witness it within the next three years. Norfolk will mark the opening of a Southern tour, embracing only the larger cities below the Mason and Dixon line.

The company coming to the Colonial consists of a symphony orchestra of thirty and a corps of electricians and mechanics. With the dozen supernumeraries on the stage which the audience does not see, there are upwards of fifty people employed in the presentation. Extensive changes will be made in the auditorium and stage of the Colonial to receive the two carloads of electrical and other equipment carried by the company. The very scope of the production precludes its being presented in any but the larger theatres.

For eight months the Liberty theatre has been packed twice daily by "The Birth of a Nation," and it will probably remain in the metropolis the rest of the winter. It is also scheduled as an all-winter attraction at the Forrest theatre, where it is now in its second month, with seats selling ten weeks ahead.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theatre April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

Dallas Daily Times Herald Oct 5

WONDERFUL PICTURE—A MARVELOUS ACHIEVEMENT IS "BIRTH OF A NATION"

(Criticism)

A wonderful picture—a marvelous achievement—is "The Birth of a Nation," David Griffith's masterpiece of motion photography. It was given at the Dallas Opera House Monday night, opening a ten days' engagement here, before a large audience, which was from tears to cheers and from laughter to throat-choking tenseness throughout three hours of closest-held attention that seemed more like fifteen minutes.

Man's masterpieces of every age are superseded by the masterpieces of some succeeding age. So, perhaps, will Griffith's masterpiece be outdone by the achievement of later genius. But it is safe indeed to declare that in this particular age there has been nor will be any greater motion picture. It is historically true. It is magnificently complete.

Words, save when spoken or written by a master verbalist, are at best poor things, and for a description that the picture justifies some such gifted one would himself be put to the test of expression. As we have been told, the picture was made from Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." When that book was published it caused all sorts of comment. There were efforts at suppression. It was charged that it was conducive to racial prejudice. Just so it has been charged that "The Birth of a Nation" is prejudicial.

But history has been written, and history is nothing save the chronicle of actual happenings. The story first and the picture now told and tells these happenings just as they occurred in those stirring days following the greatest civil strife the world has ever known. Prejudice must be laid aside. What people suffered and to what ends justice may have been perverted in the days of reconstruction must be realized.

In the making of "The Birth of a Nation," the producer has utilized the best actors known to the motion picture world. He utilized whole armies of men; he has photographed magnificent scenes at magnificent distances. There are any number of scenes which are the exact reproductions of the mind's-eye pictures one formed when studying the history of the nation—the assassination of Lincoln, with the wild-eyed Booth jumping from the president's box after the fatal shot was fired; the benign leader rebuking the radical secretary of state with the words, "I shall treat them (the seceding states) just as if they had never been away;" the long snake-like line of men, seen miles away, depicting the world-famous "march to the sea," and dozens of others told in pictures heretofore, but now given in real pictures—a thing—and it is a wonderful thought—that would have been impossible only a few short years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation," of course, appeals more to those of us who have been born south of Mason and Dixon's line. We in some measure realize what our forbears contended with. But those who come from north of that imaginary demarkation should not permit prejudice to stand in the way of opportunity. In the picture there is the strongest sort of sermon against war—any war at any time, and who knows but what it will have its effect in the making of history to come?

But what further can be said—it is a wonderful picture — a marvelous achievement, and its offering locally is perfect, even to the not-needed accompaniment of stirring and appropriate music by a large orchestra of talented musicians under an equally capable leader.

Seen, one loses all wonder that it ran for months in the big cities of the East as a motion picture at prices commensurate with the greatest dramatic attractions of this or any other age. It will be given during the Dallas engagement each afternoon beginning at 2:15 o'clock, with evening offerings beginning at 8:15 o'clock.

MOVIES SUPREME IN POETRY, ART AND ACTING

SAYS DAVID W. GRIFFITH

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

MOST remarkable of recent changes in the theatre has been the appearance of "kings that knew not Joseph"; of sceptres seized from dying dynasties and wielded by new hands; of rulers with Aladdin - like fortunes who dash from coast to coast, build transitory cities, engage and dissolve armies overnight and create epherneral enterprises—all to make an American holiday—beside the magnitude of which much historical pioneering and concoction of actual events seem but child's play.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement kings—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Wark Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision animating Griffith undoubtedly comes from some obscure Welsh bardic strain.

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The Birth of a Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the plot. In this case there was a previous stage play. If we are wise, we forget that as much as we can, for the motion picture is a novelising or story-telling form, not strictly a stage form; it is epic rather than dramatic; much of the work is of the great indoors, but the real thing is the out-of-doors. Take the Reconstruction story to revivify. Therefore, we must explore the locale as well as the actors—the tasks of the landscape artist and, in some sense, of the civil engineer are before us. For a month without the camera nation. By the way, twenty-four 'Lincoln actors' were rehearsed before the right Lincoln was found! The Blue and the Gray, and the Southern white gentry all have been drilled under their respective leaders. And then film making begins.

"At an early stage of the work—after the rough outlines have been filled in—the scenario is thrown away. The building and rebuilding of the story, the piecing of intimate bits and the discarding of the useless go right on while we are living the history, so to speak, from day to day. Nearly twenty-eight miles of pictures—160,000 feet of film—are taken. And how much of these are used? At the finale we discover that we have thrown away eight-tenths of our product—we have remaining 26,000 feet, or, say, five miles of consecutive story. But that is twice too long. We condense, condense, condense. At the end of two months more of hard labor we have edited 'The Birth of a Nation' to 12,000 or 13,000 feet—two and a half miles —or, in theatre wise, two hours and forty-five minutes' stage entertainment."

"How about the cavalry and war effects?"

"We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked up everywhere.

"Our thousands and thousands of cavalry, man-to-man, the present production we used 18,000 people almost field flung over many miles of mountain and valley, show the opposing intrenchments and the artillery fire, display the riflemen forming for advance, the charges over broken ground, the bayonet rush right up to the trenches, the deadly handgrips of individual enemies in physical struggle and the single acts of heroism or chivalry at close range—and all on a screen a few feet wide and a few feet high! This will give some slight idea of the tremendous technical difficulties involved."

"Will the motion picture ever develop into a true work of art?" was the next question, somewhat rudely asked of this wizard of the nature theatre.

David Griffith laughed—not a laugh of offended vanity or condescending superiority, but the easy, natural mirth of a master who expects to encounter many skeptics and doubting Thomases in the day's work.

"Why," he said, "the makers of pictures have already surpassed in many ways the art of the speaking stage. The old school are coming to us, are they not? And appropriating such of our devices as the 'cut-back' and the parallel action. And I could name one actress with a tremendous New York hit of two years to her credit who built up her justly famous part from close study of the methods of our Los Angeles picture actresses.

"Already it is admitted that as to poetic beauty the motion picture entertainment is far ahead of the stage. Its of today may similarly seem unnatural or impossible to the people two hundred years hence. But the immortal stories will be there, the world's legacy of great characters and great scenes, to be picturized according to the changed ideals of the succeeding generations."

"What is your principal requirement as to motion picture actors?"

"Actors with souls!" was the emphatic response. "I know there is much talk of picture types, blonde types and all that, but over and above technical requirements, so called, is the demand for people of great personalities, of sincere, true emotion and the untheatrical expression thereof.

"Somehow, most of the stars who come to us from the regular stage lack the sincerity, at least in their earlier efforts before the camera. Mrs. Fiske, in 'Tess,' was a notable exception. I know she drew from me the tribute of tears. The Comedie Francaise actors, notably Coquelin and Le Bargy, who appeared in some of the French pictures, were wonderful in the breadth and strength of their exquisite character portrayals. On the other hand, some of the most widely advertised and most admired spectacular pictures from abroad suffered from the defect of mediocre acting. Of what use are magnificent scenes with only puppet-like actors? Here in America we are creating a school of silent actors who bid fair to surpass the finest efforts of the stage in pantomime.

picture play was laid out in facts, strict unity of time and place being always observed, the same sized figures shown in an unvarying

"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg.

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards, and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER the Most Stupendendous, Dramatic and Spectacular Enterprise that the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Realized!

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

the actors' lineaments conveys intimate latest drama four actions are represented

BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) POST
OCT. 5, 1915

MORNING SHOW OF THE POPULAR BIRTH OF A NATION

Will Be Given at 10:30 A. M. Thursday at Poli's Theatre by Request.

SomeThing new in local theatricals will be introduced by Manager Matt Saunders at Poli's theatre, Thursday, when a matinee performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given at 10:30 o'clock in the morning.

The special performance has been arranged in response to a petition from night workers of the city who want to see the big Griffith spectacle, but who are prevented from seeing the regular performance by reason of their hours of labor. A committee of workers from the Arms factories waited on Mr. Saunders last week and presented him a petition bearing several hundreds of names, asking for the special performance. Another petition, also voluntary from the night workers, came from the employes of the Locomobile company.

The morning performance will begin promptly at 10:30 o'clock and the complete production with the big symphonic orchestra will be given.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MORN. UNIO
OCT. 5, 1915

...ngfield, Oct. 4, 1915.

AWFULNESS OF WAR.

Thinks "The Birth of a Nation" Teaches That Lesson.

To the Editor of ...

Sir: I wish to say, like B. O. A. N., that I have had the pleasure of seeing "The Birth of a Nation" twice in Boston, and would certainly see it again if it came here. To show how it was appreciated in Boston, I know one woman of good education—not a habitual frequenter of the movies—who witnessed the picture a dozen times, usually taking a friend with her. She says that every time she saw it something new appealed to her. It seems to me that if this fine picture is to be barred there should be a general overhauling of the "movies," which would result in the elimination of a few really objectionable films.

No more suitable time than the present could be chosen for the presentation of this picture, as it shows the utter futility and terrible waste of war, also the effect it has on the populace. As to causing any feeling of animosity toward the Negro, such an idea never occurred to me. Not for a moment did I connect the colored race of today with the poor, unfortunate and uneducated people of that period.

If the sole reason for objecting to this film is that it stirs up unpleasant ancient history, may I ask why the city authorities allowed so many Irish lecturers, just at the beginning of the present war, to speak from the best platforms on the atrocities and persecutions inflicted on their compatriots over half a century ago by the English? Why wasn't this a plan to alienate the sympathy of American people from the Allies, and propagate pro-Germanism?

SCOTIA.

Springfield, Oct. 4, 1915.

LOWELL (Mass.) COUR.-CITIZEN
OCT. 5, 1915

...whether the staple is to be ... fabrics or explosives.

West Springfield selectmen rented the town hall for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." Then they were sorry they did it. The entire community, as it were, arose in protest and the selectmen recanted and cancelled. Their repentance is pleasing to the folks on this side of the Connecticut, as the mayor of Springfield forbads the exhibition. The great objection to the picture is that it is untrue to history and unjust to the Negro.

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) MORN. UNION
OCT. 5, 1915

The People's Forum

CRITICISES SELECTMEN.

Says West Springfield Board Has Shown Lack of Backbone.

To the Editor of The Union.

Sir: I should like very much to express my opinion of our Selectmen and the muddle and excitement they have had in granting and withdrawing a permit for "The Birth of a Nation."

In the first place, they should not have given any word that this film could be shown if they didn't have the courage to go through with it. Why don't they cater to the whole town, instead of listening to a certain few? If you notice, there are no Catholic clergymen on that petition to suppress this movie. Perhaps they object to this picture just as strenuously, but they have a faculty of attending to their own business, and this is a fine example for a good many other citizens to follow.

At the five and ten cent movies you find pictures more demoralizing to the human mind than "The Birth of a Nation." If one goes to a theater looking for demoralization, he will probably think he has found what he went after. When I go to the theater I go for entertainment, and not any afterthought. But all this is getting away from our beloved selectmen.

We have a number of important issues at hand, among them a bridge. At a town meeting the voters unanimously voted for a bridge at Bridge Street. Afterward a body called the Chamber of Commerce voted to leave the matter to some one or other, to conform to the wishes of a few Springfield people to have a commission appointed to tell the people the proper place for the bridge. Here again our Selectmen showed that their wishbones are where their backbones ought to be.

I know that West Springfield will not have to pay as much for the bridge as Springfield, but we have to live here and it will cost as much for a good approach on this side as the bridge itself.

There are numerous other things in this town that are not according to "Hoyle," but there is one consolation—we can have a new Board of Selectmen next spring, and it is a certainty that whoever is elected will be the equal of, and probably an improvement over, the present incumbents. I could write all night on the present administration's shortcomings, but if you will find space for this much I think a few more West Side taxpayers will wake up and write you a line or two.

A WEST SIDE TAXPAYER.

West Springfield, Oct. 4, 1915.

THE PEOPLE WANT IT.

Therefore the Mayor Should Let "The Birth of a Nation" Be Shown.

To the Editor of The Union.

Sir: I am very sorry to learn that the people of Springfield will be deprived of the opportunity to see that beautiful picture, "The Birth of a Nation," because of the backing down of the West Side Selectmen. They have yielded to the pressure of a small minority that does not represent the people and which really knows nothing about the picture. They have been duped by a few, who, having seen it, were not broad enough to understand its fine points.

I dare say that if a vote were taken in this city to decide whether the people want to see this film, the opposition would be swamped. Why then should we be prevented from seeing it? Of course we can go to Holyoke when it is put on there, but that would be inconvenient for many of us.

If Mr. Miller is sincere about circulating a petition in behalf of the picture he can count on generous assistance. I myself will guarantee to get several hundred signatures. Surely such a petition should have influence with Mayor Stacy, who in this matter does not voice the sentiments of the majority. The press also has misrepresented the prevailing sentiment.

I send you herewith extracts from a number of newspapers commenting favorably on "The Birth of a Nation." You will note that the New York Journal of Commerce says: "As pictures of history in the making, 'The Birth of a Nation,' is of great value to old and young. It places before the eyes of the present generation events of which they had only been able to read hitherto, and shows them in such a way that no spectator can fail to be impressed."

Surely, Mr. Editor, such opinions are worth heeding. They clearly show that the opponents of the picture have not a leg to stand on. Most of the opposition appears to come from Protestant clergymen. Is it to be inferred that the ministers of the Catholice church do not view the picture with any such alarm?

B. O. A. N.

Springfield, Oct. ...

PHILADELPHIA, PA. BULLETIN
OCT 5

"The Birth of a Nation" ... capacity houses at the Forrest, and ... seems destined to make a record for this class of entertainment. The films, judged solely as artistic productions, exceed anything of the kind ever shown here, and are unquestionably remarkable, while the spectacular portions, involving great masses of men and horses, reveal the genius of David W. Griffith for direction. Although it requires three hours to unwind the reels, interest never lags for a moment.

DGEPORT (Conn.) TELEGRAM
OCT. 5, 1915

MORNING SHOW FOR NIGHT MEN AT POLI'S

"Birth of a Nation" to be Shown in A. M., for Benefit of Those Working Evenings.

Responding to a lengthy petition from night workers in the city, Manager Matt Saunders of Poli's theatre, has arranged for a real innovation in the local amusement world. He's going to put on a morning matinee of "The Birth of A Nation" on Thursday at 10:30 o'clock.

On Friday morning last, a committee of night workers at the Remington Arms company called on Manager Saunders and told him that there were just rafts of workmen who wanted to see the big Griffith spectacle, but could not because of their hours of labor. They asked that he arrange a morning show. The local manager took it up immediately with Louis B. Mayer, general manager of the American Feature Film company controlling the production.

On Saturday, the committee brought a petition containing several hundred names to the theatre. The petition was signed voluntarily by workers at the ammunition plant and asked for the morning show. Another petition from night workers at the Locomobile company followed Saturday afternoon.

The morning performance Thursday will begin promptly at 10:30. The complete show with the symphonic orchestra will be given.

elphia, (Pa.) North American
OCT 5 - 1915

...ybrook, ...

STIRRING STORY OF '61-'65 TOLD IN FILM AT FORREST

Period of Reconstruction Also Depicted in 'Birth of a Nation'

The stirring adventures of the Camerons and the Stonemans and scenes from the history of the civil war and the period of reconstruction continue to attract audiences to the Forrest Theater for D. W. Griffith's photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation."

The plot of the piece is probably as old as the oldest novel on civil war. Its situations are largely conventionalized. But it has the ancient tug at the heartstrings of good melodrama and seems to experience no loss of power.

Mae Marsh contributes the most skillful histrionic bit of the film, though the work of Miriam Cooper, Henry Walthall and Lillian Gish is decidedly meritorious.

...David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation"

...picture play was laid out in facts, strict unity ...of time and place being always observed, the ...same sized figures shown in an unvarying ...time sequence of a single action.

"I remember what a sensation I caused ...d, 'but will the ...in the old Biograph studios, in Fourteenth ...Street, when I invented the 'close-up' figures. ...th immortal art ...e a Shakespeare ...ith reflectively, ...e is acting, and ...e with each age. ...had my way, though it was alleged that the ...Macready, Kean ...audiences always knocked disapproval with ...it could be ac... their feet whenever the 'close-ups' were ex... hibited. Today the 'close-up' is essential to ...l appear crude, ...oday. The acting every motion picture, for the near view of

"STAGE CAREFULLY SET FOR A MOVIE DRAMA"

"And now South Carolina in Reconstruction days is measurably before our eyes. Elsewhere the battlegrounds of the Civil War are springing into being, helped by expert advice of old 'vets' and modern West Pointers. The costumes, settings and documents laboriously prepared for the facsimile historical scenes like those of the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Lincoln assassi... the actors' lineaments convey intimate ...thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the 'story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my ...latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point is that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvelous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young, may be entirely revolutionized by its struggle ...by new processes."

ROANOKE (Va.) NEWS
OCT. 5, 1915

AMUSEME

GREAT PICTURE OF THRILLS AUDIENCE

For almost three hours last evening at the Academy of Music a large audience was thrilled by the presentation of D. W. Griffith's mammoth spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which opened a three-day engagement here.

Never before has the Roanoke public been afforded the opportunity of witnessing a picture of such stupendous proportions. The producer has accomplished a feat in mounting the drama, which surpasses anything yet attempted. In every detail the picture comes up to what has been said for it and no one who witnessed the performance last night was disappointed, but on the other hand many were amazed at its magnitude and delighted with it.

Mr. Griffith, in presenting "The Birth of a Nation," has sent out a large orchestra to handle the special incidental music. No feature of the production is more telling than the musical numbers, and they add to the Engineer Com'l Oct 5

STATEMENT

Made By General Managers of the Forbidden Film.

J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the financial interests controlling the D. W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," arrived from New York yesterday to look into the Ohio situation relative to the recent action of the Ohio State Board of Censors. Last week at a preliminary hearing the Censor Board decided by a vote of two to one to prohibit the exhibition of the great spectacle in this state.

"I am not able to fathom the reasons for the action of the Ohio Board of Censors regarding our production," said Mr. McCarthy at the Sinton yesterday.

"You must understand the success of this spectacle to estimate our surprise at the local action.

"'The Birth of a Nation' has been seen by over 5,000,000 people in the large centers of this country. We have been running for over 600 performances in New York City, 300 performances in Chicago, 254 performances in Boston and are also directing indefinite runs at the leading theaters of Philadelphia, Pittsburg, St. Louis and the principal Virginia and Texas cities. In addition we presented this production before President Wilson in the White House and before members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives under the auspices of the National Press Club at Washington. There has never been a bit of trouble stirred up by the presentation of the picture in any of these localities. The production has been received with the unqualified indorsement of the press and public.

"We come to Ohio with this record behind us. You can understand what I mean by saying we have been surprised by the attitude of the Ohio board in the face of this record.

"I earnestly want to make it clear that we have overwhelmingly established that 'The Birth of a Nation' is a work of art deserving of the same consideration that is vouchsafed a great play that has been enthusiastically approved by the public at large. Mr. Griffith has done more to elevate the art of motion-picture drama than all the censor boards in the world. He is responsible for every great advancement in that art in the last six or seven years. He has put his greatest endeavors into 'The Birth of a Nation,' and it does seem strange in the face of all the wonderful things that have been said in its favor that his efforts should be suppressed or hampered at this late date. It is not harmful, immoral or indecent nor calculated to hurt anybody. The protests of a few negroes are not based upon facts. Of course, if the negro is to be given special privileges over all other citizens then we are face to face with a strikingly new state of affairs in our political conditions.

"There is nothing in 'The Birth of a Nation' that has not been openly discussed in every magazine and newspaper in this country.

"Let me assure you that, in addition to coming to Ohio with every seal of official approval upon it," added Mr. McCarthy in a summary of the situation, "that we come here with the individual indorsement of the picture by over 50 members of the present Congress and with the approval of such eminent citizens as Richard Harding Davis, Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Booth Tarkington, Rev. Father John Talbot Smith, Rupert Hughes, Dr. Thomas B. Gregory, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Mrs. Simon Baruch, Major General John F. O'Ryan, Paul West, Dorothy Dix, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, all the recognized critics of the big daily papers and the magazines in New York, Boston and Chicago, also King George of England and members of the royal family, who were present at the initial performance at the Scala Theater, in London, last Monday night."

Dallas M. News Oct 5

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HISTORY IN MOTION

GREAT FILM DRAMA PRESENTED IN DALLAS FIRST TIME.

Brings Thrills and Tears to Audience at Opera House—Accompanied by Symphony Orchestra.

As the Iliad of Homer is to an acrostic by a jokesmith, so is "The Birth of a Nation" to the ordinary run of one-reel screen dramas.

And just as the immortal epic of the Trojan war moves majestically through the regal splendors of the ancient poet's imagination, so the vivid imagery of the film artists threw its soul-wringing concepts upon the visualized consciousness of the large audiences at the Dallas Opera House last night. There were thrills and tears and pulsing pride mingled at a score of climactic moments with smiles and sighs and unclassified emotions. The press agents told us much in advance concerning this major effort of the photographic dramatists, but they could not convey to us a complete appreciation of the picture's obvious fidelity; nor the dash and spirit of the spectacle. Indeed, perhaps they failed to impress us with the magnitude of the portraiture, or with the astonishing realism in which were set as in a frame the most tragic episodes of our national life.

"The Birth of a Nation" is history in motion—a wonderful counterfeit presentment of those tempestuous years when this Union of States was being reborn, in unfathomed pain, into an indivisible unity of nationalistic purpose. Possibly there are incidents here and there upon the moving page which do not accord with our personal traditions or preferences, whether we be of the South or of the North by nativity. Also there are glimpses into a black inferno which we would in free choice avoid, but back of each incident, and all of them, is substantial historic justification, and it may be that we should not flinch at the sight in pictures of that which our forbears felt in every fiber of their hearts.

Best Order of Americanism.

But if there are scenes we would edit out, there are besides granite-thick basreliefs of sweet sentiment and martial splendors. Throughout the whole rolling panorama there are opportunities to indulge the most intense satisfaction, for into it is woven with every thread that order of Americanism which is best interpreted by those Americans who experienced in fact those tragedies which we of a later generation experience only in pictures.

It is impossible quickly to render a critical judgment of this offering as a theatrical performance. That may come later, for there are to be many presentations of this production here. It will suffice for the present to say that the lavish expenditure of money necessary to produce this master film comprehended not only great crowds of miscellaneous actors, but also a cast of principals of the highest quality. These gave to the more intimate scenes a personality and a charm which seemed almost to reach out and grasp the heartstrings of those who sat in witness.

A massive and virile play it is, and one to see over and over again. D. W. Griffiths is the central spirit in the making of the piece and the second part is founded upon Thomas Dixon's well-known novel, "The Clansman."

Strong Musical Accompaniment.

The entire play is worked out with great care as to historical detail, and the parts are taken by actors of experience both in photodrama and on the stage. Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Robert Harroun, Miriam Cooper and other well-known stars of the motion picture screen have parts in the vast production.

The musical accompaniment of the film drama is deserving of particular commendation. It is furnished by an excellent symphony orchestra of forty pieces, specially trained and equipped to furnish appropriate and natural accompaniments of incidental sounds and music with the silent drama of the screen.

"The Birth of a Nation" will appear all of this week and next twice daily at the Dallas Opera House.

"Birthof a Nation" Moves To the Garrick Next Week

Same Production That Has Been Showing at Olympic, Including Orchestra, Will Be Presented.

Arrangements have been completed by which D. W. Griffith's master spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will move from the Olympic Theater to the Garrick, beginning with a matinee on next Sunday. The Garrick was recently selected after a conference with the Shuberts. This theater is on Chestnut street, between Broadway and Sixth street.

"The Birth of a Nation" will have been seen by more than 100,000 persons when its engagement is completed at the Olympic Saturday night. It has had a most remarkable five weeks run at that house and is being moved only for the reason that the regular Olympic season's dramatic and musical bookings interfere with the picture's continuance there.

The Garrick presentation of the picture will include the same high class orchestra of 30 pieces, all the accessories and effects and the same management as that of the Olympic screening.

With the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Garrick, this attractive playhouse will again take its place with the two-dollar theaters of St. Louis. In preparation for the opening, the theater is being entirely renovated, redecorated and refurbished. In order that it may present to its patrons an appearance worthy of the attraction that will inaugurate its reopening, the Messrs. Shubert have authorized their St. Louis representative to restore the theater to its former beautiful appearance and to spare no expense to that end.

The front elevation of the building is now undergoing a sand-blast treatment and it will be outlined in a blaze of electric lights. New and attractive display signs and "white way" lamps will be employed to illuminate the exterior. A handsome marquee will adorn the entrance doors. The interior of the theater will be treated in tapestry effects and decorations to harmonize. Lobbies, foyer and retiring rooms will also be appropriately decorated. Every chair in the theater, including the gallery, which contains standard opera seats, will be reserved. The same scale of prices as at the Olympic will prevail and two performances will be given daily at 2:20 and 8:20.

D. W. Griffith, author and producer of "The Birth of a Nation."

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 5

"BIRTH OF A NATION" REMAINS ANOTHER WEEK

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon.

That the big historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon theater, has aroused the interest and enthusiasm of the people of Pittsburg as well as the people of the surrounding towns, as no other theatrical offering of years was evidenced by the storm of protests against closing the engagement which followed the announcement that the present week would end local opportunity to see D. W. Griffith's masterpiece.

Aroused by the unprecedented demand for seats for this week's performances, J. J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation," as agent of Samuel F. Nixon, of the Nixon theater, got together in New York and rearranged bookings so as to make it possible for this sensation of the amusement world to stay one more week at the Nixon. As extended the engagement will now run all next week ending with the matinee and night performances, Saturday, Oct. 16.

Never before has American's greatest war been thus comprehensively put on stage, film, panorama or canvas. It is the biggest patriotic entertainment ever devised. The fascination of the beautiful love romance, the excellent acting and perfect photography, the emotional appeal of the music and the compelling art of the mechanical effects combine to make an offering satisfyingly delightful to all classes of theatergoers.

Ev. Journal Dallas, Oct 5

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" HOLDS DALLAS SPECTATORS IN EMOTIONAL GRIP

Extravagant Moving Picture Offered at Opera House

First you are thrilled, then chilled. Your heart seems to rise within you and your blood begins to boil with anger, big tears start to your eyes only to be drawn back by a tiny touch of comedy. Finally you have to hold to your seat to keep from rising and shouting.

That's the gamut of sensations produced by D. W. Griffith's brilliant, vivid, stirring masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." The famous picture was shown at the Dallas Opera House for the first time last night. In the crowd were many members of Camp Sterling Price, United Confederate Veterans, of Dallas, and amid the applause could be heard the old battle yells given by the men who were along the firing line in 1861 at the exact spots shown in Griffith's masterpiece.

In three hours the audience sees, hears and feels the throes of war and reconstruction covering a period of fifteen years.

The marvelous picture consists of 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses, the cost of production, it is said, was over $500,000. The scenes show the biggest battle of the Civil War, Ford's Theater, where Lincoln was assassinated, the building up of the famous Ku-Klux Klan. It is perhaps the most stupendous, dramatic and spectacular production ever offered the American public.

First comes a beautiful scene in Piedmont, S. C., the home of Dr. Cameron, a well-to-do Southerner. The typical Southern atmosphere can be felt almost, as the reels slide by showing the Cameron home, the cotton fields and the negro slaves attending to their duties and later gathering for a general jollification in which the old-time square dance is given.

Historic Conference.

The scene changes to the capital where President Lincoln is in consultation with members of the House regarding the declaration of the South that it will secede if any attempt is made to force them to obey the dictations of the House or the President. The House leader, Stoneman, makes his appearance and demands secession. Stoneman's two boys are friends of Dr. Cameron's sons and at that time are visiting in Piedmont. President Lincoln signs the declaration of war and issues a call for 75,000 volunteers.

A wonderful scene is then enacted. The Stoneman boys are called home for service. The Cameron boys are called to fight for the Southland and Ben Cameron, the oldest son, goes as a Colonel. The audience is thrilled to the limit as Dr. Cameron and his wife and two daughin their eyes, bid their three sons goodters, smiling, yet with big teardrops bye.

Realistic Battle Scene.

The war has begun. Two of the Cameron boys are killed and Ben Cameron is in charge of thousands of men when the battle of Atlanta begins. Known as "The Little Colonel," Ben Cameron leads the way in this battle. In producing this scene Griffith secured a most wonderful stage effect. The first scene is at night. A panoramic view shows several villages afire as the Confederate march on Atlanta. The night scene shows the bursting of huge shells and finally the two armies come with a few yards of each other. Here is where Ben Cameron won everlasting fame. Outnumbered he led his gallant men on and on until a final rush was made and the Confederates climbed into the Federal trenches and men battled hand to hand for several hours. As the last of his brave little command was falling behind him the Little Colonel grabs the flag of the Southland, and though badly wounded, he rushes to the mouth of the enemy's cannon and rams the flag stick into the big gun. Cameron fell beneath the fire and beside a comrade. Turning his canteen to the parched lips of his dying soldier he made him drink.

Strange as it were, Stoneman's oldest son, who had, when the war broke out, declared "we will meet again," was leading the charge. He recognized Cameron and his bravery so thrilled the Federal Colonel that he rushed to Cameron's side and carried the injured Confederate to the hospital.

Cupid Relieves Tension.

Just as the audience is ready to burst into tears the first love scene is enacted. Cameron is sent to Washington to a hospital where Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the House leader, is a nurse. Cameron had seen Elsie's picture and carried it with him during the war, but he had never seen her face. She was assigned to care for him during the time he was in the hospital and he recognized her as the sister of the Stoneman boys who had visited his home.

Time goes on until he is almost well and word comes that he is to be executed as a guerilla. Miss Stoneman and Cameron's aged mother's pleas to President Lincoln save him and when the war is over Cameron is permitted to return home, but this doesn't come until after the last gray days of the Confederacy are shown, where men almost die for the lack of something to eat. How they relish hard baked beans and parched corn, yet the last hope of getting food was lost when the Federals captured their supply train. Then comes the surrender of Gen. Lee and the closing of the great war.

Lincoln's Assassination.

This is only half of Griffith's marvelous production. The Southland could have lived over this with ease, but April 14, 1865, came and President Lincoln and his family went to Ford's Theater to see "Our American Cousins."

Griffith in his production has secured what is said to be an exact reproduction of the theater and the picture shows the play as it goes along with the President viewing the audience and the players. The body guard for Mr. Lincoln becomes enthused and leaves his post. John Wilkes Booth enters and with a small derringer placed against the President's back fires and then jumps from the box to the stage. It is a wonderful reproduction of the assassination.

Then the scene shifts back to the little town of Piedmont for a second, where Dr. Cameron and the "Little Colonel" are reading an account of the assassination.

"My God, we have lost our best friend, what will happen to us now?" is the words used by the "Little Colonel" to his father as tears roll down his cheek.

The picture is completed with a realistic reproduction of the scenes in "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel of reconstruction days.

Dallas Dentn Times Herald Oct 5 11

WONDERFUL PICTURE—A MARVELOUS ACHIEVEMENT IS "BIRTH OF A NATION"

(Criticism)

A wonderful picture—a marvelous achievement—is "The Birth of a Nation," David Griffith's masterpiece of motion photography. It was given at the Dallas Opera House Monday night, opening a ten days' engagement here, before a large audience, which was from tears to cheers and from laughter to throat-choking tenseness throughout three hours of closest-held attention that seemed more like fifteen minutes.

Man's masterpieces of every age are superseded by the masterpieces of some succeeding age. So, perhaps, will Griffith's masterpiece be outdone by the achievement of later genius. But it is safe indeed to declare that in this particular age there has been nor will be any greater motion picture. It is historically true. It is magnificently complete.

Words, save when spoken or written by a master verbalist, are at best poor things, and for a description that the picture justifies some such gifted one would himself be put to the test of expression. As we have been told, the picture was made from Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman." When that book was published it caused all sorts of comment. There were efforts at suppression. It was charged that it was conducive to racial prejudice. Just so it has been charged that "The Birth of a Nation" is prejudicial.

But history has been written, and history is nothing save the chronicle of actual happenings. The story first and the picture now told and tells these happenings just as they occurred in those stirring days following the greatest civil strife the world has ever known. Prejudice must be laid aside. What people suffered and to what ends justice may have been perverted in the days of reconstruction must be realized.

In the making of "The Birth of a Nation," the producer has utilized the best actors known to the motion picture world. He utilized whole armies of men; he has photographed magnificent scenes at magnificent distances. There are any number of scenes which are the exact reproductions of the mind's-eye pictures one formed when studying the history of the nation—the assassination of Lincoln, with the wild-eyed Booth jumping from the president's box after the fatal shot was fired; the benign leader rebuking the radical secretary of state with the words, "I shall treat them (the seceding states) just as if they had never been away;" the long snake-like line of men, seen miles away, depicting the world-famous "march to the sea," and dozens of others told in pictures heretofore, but now given in real pictures—a thing—and it is a wonderful thought—that would have been impossible only a few short years ago.

"The Birth of a Nation," of course, appeals more to those of us who have been born south of Mason and Dixon's line. We in some measure realize what our forbears contended with. But those who come from north of that imaginary demarkation should not permit prejudice to stand in the way of opportunity. In the picture there is the strongest sort of sermon against war—any war at any time, and who knows but what it will have its effect in the making of history to come?

But what further can be said—it is a wonderful picture—a marvelous achievement, and its offering locally is perfect, even to the not-needed accompaniment of stirring and appropriate music by a large orchestra of talented musicians under an equally capable leader.

Seen, one loses all wonder that it ran for months in the big cities of the East as a motion picture at prices commensurate with the greatest dramatic attractions of this or any other age. It will be given during the Dallas engagement each afternoon beginning at 2:15 o'clock, with evening offerings beginning at 8:15 o'clock.

Ross and Rita Abbott, as Ebeneezer and Samanthy; Grover Webb and Edna Reming as Snuffles, and Toots and Howard F. MacDonald as Col. Goldtop, old beau.

The development of the story told in the play is left mainly in the hands of Charles Fulton, as Dick Marvel; Miss Irene Langford, as the telephone girl, and Dorothy Phillips, as Beauty Fairfax, the music hall favorite. Each principal sings one or more song hits.

"The Telephone Girl" will continue through this week, with the next matinees on Thursday and Saturday.

Dallas Morning Oct 5

"BIRTH OF A NATION" HISTORY IN MOTION

GREAT FILM DRAMA PRESENTED IN DALLAS FIRST TIME.

Brings Thrills and Tears to Audience at Opera House—Accompanied by Symphony Orchestra.

As the Iliad of Homer is to an acrostic by a jokesmith, so is "The Birth of a Nation" to the ordinary run of one-reel screen dramas.

And just as the immortal epic of the Trojan war moves majestically through the regal splendors of the ancient poet's imagination, so the vivid imagery of the film artists threw its soul-wringing concepts upon the visualized consciousness of the large audiences at the Dallas Opera House last night. There were thrills and tears and pulsing pride mingled at a score of climactic moments with smiles and sighs and unclassified emotions. The press agents told as much in advance concerning this major effort of the photographic dramatists, but they could not convey to us a complete appreciation of the picture's obvious fidelity; nor the dash and spirit of the spectacle. Indeed, perhaps they failed to impress us with the magnitude of the portraiture, or with the astonishing realism in which were set as in a frame the most tragic episodes of our national life.

"The Birth of a Nation" is history in motion—a wonderful counterfeit presentment of those tempestuous years when this Union of States was being reborn, in unfathomed pain, into an indivisible unity of nationalistic purpose. Possibly there are incidents here and there upon the moving page which do not accord with our personal traditions or preferences, whether we be of the South or of the North by nativity. Also there are glimpses into a black inferno which we would in free choice avoid, but back of each incident, and all of them, is substantial historic justification, and it may be that we should not flinch at the sight in pictures of that which our forbears felt in every fiber of their hearts.

Best Order of Americanism.

But if there are scenes we would edit out, there are besides granite-thick basreliefs of sweet sentiment and martial splendors. Throughout the whole rolling panorama there are opportunities to indulge the most intense satisfaction, for into it is woven with every thread that order of Americanism which is best interpreted by those Americans who experienced in fact those tragedies which we of a later generation experience only in pictures.

It is impossible quickly to render a critical judgment of this offering as a theatrical performance. That may come later, for there are to be many presentations of this production here. It will suffice for the present to say that the lavish expenditure of money necessary to produce this master film comprehended not only great crowds of miscellaneous actors, but also a cast of principals of the highest quality. These gave to the more intimate scenes a personality and a charm which seemed almost to reach out and grasp the heart-strings of those who sat in witness.

A massive and virile play it is, and one to see over and over again. D. W. Griffiths is the central spirit in the making of the piece and the second part is founded upon Thomas Dixon's well-known novel, "The Clansman."

Strong Musical Accompaniment.

The entire play is worked out with great care as to historical detail, and the parts are taken by actors of experience both in photodrama and on the stage. Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Robert Harroun, Miriam Cooper and other well-known stars of the motion picture screen have parts in the vast production.

The musical accompaniment of the film drama is deserving of particular commendation. It is furnished by an excellent symphony orchestra of forty pieces, specially trained and equipped to furnish appropriate and natural accompaniments of incidental sounds and music with the silent drama of the screen.

"The Birth of a Nation" will appear all of this week and next twice daily at the Dallas Opera House.

Bluefield Daily Telegraph Oct 6

7

...at gathering of the Clans, one of the 3,000 big scenes in the Griffith specatacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a three days' engagement at the Elks Oper a House tomorrow night.

Journal & Tribune Huntington W. Va. Oct 7

At Staub's

In "The Birth of a Nation," the mighty spectacle which comes to Staub's theater for three days beginning next Monday night, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday, D. W. Griffith has touched the high peaks of American historythe war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the reconciliation of the north and the south.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. According to experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indor" theater, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-fashioned history or historical novel. A very eminent public man has nicknamed it "history by lightning." Eighteen thousand people were employed in taking the historical pictures. Advt.

PEACE ALLEGORY IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT STAUB'S THEATRE, NEXT MONDAY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY.

"BIRTH OF NATION" TO MOVE TO GARRICK FOR EXTENDED RUN

Republican Oct 7

Contracts have been signed whereby D. W. Griffith's photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be enabled to continue its record-breaking run in St. Louis. During the six weeks' engagement at the Olympic it will have been witnessed by over 100,000 people. Each week has shown a big increase in attendance over the preceding one. This phenomenal business is gratifying evidence of business prosperity in St. Louis.

As a result the Garrick Theater will again take its place with the $2 theaters. Beginning with a matinee next Sunday, "The Birth of a Nation" production will be moved intact from the Olympic to the Garrick Theater, with the same symphony orchestra of 30, accessories and effects.

In preparation for the reception of "The Birth of a Nation" the Garrick, Chestnut and Sixth streets, is being entirely renovated, redecorated and refurnished. In order that it may present to its patrons an appearance worthy of the attraction it will house, the Messrs. Shubert have wired to their representative here to restore the little theater to its former beautiful appearance and to spare no expense to that end.

The front elevation of the building is now undergoing a sand-blast treatment and it will be outlined in a blaze of electric lights. New and attractive electric display signs and white way lamps will be employed to illuminate the exterior. A handsome marquee will adorn the entrance doors. The interior of the theater will be treated in tapestry effect and decorations to harmonize. Lobbys, foyer and retiring rooms will be appropriately decorated.

Every chair in the theater, including the gallery, which contains standard opera seats, will be reserved. The same scale of prices as at the Olympic will prevail. The sale of seats will open at the box office of the Garrick this morning.

CLIPPING FROM

Herald & Star Motion

Date ..... 10 6 13 .....

...the Ambassadors. C. B. ...ill film it.

...the nown Hog- He is ons.

...ROOMING SPECTACLE ...bout films, Griffith's ...Nation," film is being ...nd is starting a big ...n movi- ...nd dead in At- ...the Scala Theatre, ...nome of Kinemacolor

Dallas Daily News Oct 6

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Five states and one foreign country contributed to the scenery of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Dallas Opera House. The greater part of the film spectacle was made in California, where the clear, pure atmosphere eclipses even the softness of the tones under Italian skies for the production of photographic effects.

But, in order to make his photodrama exactly accurate, Mr. Griffith took a number of his players overland from California to the Carolinas and Virginia. This was particularly the case for some of the woodland effects and for the scenes in the cotton field, that win enthusiastic applause from Texas audiences. Never before in film drama has the beautiful, silky texture of the cotton blossom been so poetically treated.

One big scene was taken in Mexico, where the wild ruggedness of the land was better adapted to Griffith's purpose than the California landscape. Another big scene extended through the California border into Nevada.

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Continue at Nixon

Mae Marsh in the "Birth of a Nation."

That the big historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theater, has aroused the interest and enthusiasm of the people of Pittsburgh, as well as the people of the surrounding towns, as no other theatrical offering of years was evidenced by the storm of protests against closing the engagement which followed the announcement that the present week would end local opportunity to see D. W. Griffith's masterpiece. Aroused by the unprecedented demand for seats for this week's performances, J. J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation," and Samuel F. Nixon of the Nixon Theater got together in New York and rearranged bookings so as to make it possible for this sensation of the amusement world to stay one more week at the Nixon. As extended the engagement will now run all next week, ending with the matinee and night performances Saturday, October 16. The seat sale for this week has already broken the record of the big spectacle's record-breaking local engagement and since the opening of the box office last Monday the long line of eager seat purchasers, which has extended half way down the block on Sixth avenue, has been unbroken from morning until night. This spectacle of the American military era is eminently suited to the present with the great war in the minds of all.

Knoxville Tenn. Journal & Tribune Oct 7

At Staub's

"The Birth of a Nation," the mighty spectacle which many Knoxville people witnessed this summer on visits to New York, Philadelphia and Boston, and which they have commended to their friends as the greatest theatrical offering of the present generation, will begin a three days' engagement at Staub's theater on Monday night, October 11. There will be five performances in all, matinees being scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday.

"The Birth of a Nation" typifies a new art of the theater and in producing it, David W. Griffith has established himself solidly in the world's hall of fame. By means of music, marvelous electrical and other stage effects, together with motion photography, Mr. Griffith has given the American public the greatest thrill it has ever known. He employed 18,000 people, and 3,000 horses in making the production, and the total cost of his undertaking reached half a million dollars.

The story, founded upon Thomas Dixon's successful novel and play, "The Clansman," is one of romance and adventure linked to one of the most vital periods of American history—the Reconstruction. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of forty travels with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation. Advt.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph Oct 7

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" CONTINUES WEEK LONGER

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon, is to remain another week, the engagement closing October 16. Seats for this final week go on sale today. The story of this historical and romantic offering begins in the seventeenth century, with the coming of African slaves to America.

Bluefield Daily Tele Oct 7

NO ONE DISAPPOINTED

Birth of a Nation Fully up to Expectations, Roanoke Times Says.

The Roanoke Times, commenting on the appearance there of "The Birth of a Nation" says that "never before has the Roanoke public been afforded the opportunity of witnessing a picture of such stupendous proportions. In every detail the picture comes up to what has been said for it, and no one who witnessed the performance last night was disappointed, but on the other hand many were amazed at its magnitude and delighted with it." The Times reviews the events that are covered by the picture and stated that large crowds were attending every performance. "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Elks opera house here tonight and both matinee and night Friday and Saturday.

Pittsburgh Post Oct 6/15

MARY ALDEN pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle which is to continue another week in the Nixon Theater.

That the big historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theater, has aroused interest as no other motion picture, was shown by the importunities against closing the engagement which followed the announcement that the present week would end local opportunity to see D. W. Griffith's masterpiece.

J. J. McCarthy, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation," and Samuel F. Nixon of the Nixon Theater have arranged to make it possible for this film to be shown one more week at the Nixon, twice daily till October 16. Lines of ticket buyers extend down the block in Sixth avenue.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Tele. Oct 6

"Birth of a Nation" Extends Nixon Engagement

LILLIAN GISH APPEARING ON THE NIXON SCREEN

That "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theater, has aroused interest in Pittsburgh, was evidenced by the requests not to close the engagement, which followed the announcement that the present week ended the run. The film will stay one more week at the Nixon. As extended, the engagement will now run all next week. Civil strife, battles, the loving heart of the President, and the men who, after his death, thwarted his plans, the victory of the North and the reconstruction—these furnish a succession of themes handled by the photo play.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 7

NIXON.

Owing to the unprecedented demand for seats for D. W. Griffith's superb spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon, bookings were so arranged as to enable it to remain for another week, the engagement closing Saturday evening, Oct. 16 Seats for the final week go on sale today. The story of this wonderful historical and romantic offering begins in the seventeenth century with the coming of African slaves to America. Its progress is closely related to phases of the slavery question and its bearing upon the history of the United States.

Star Oct 7th/15

"The Birth of a Nation."

While "The Birth of a Nation" has already achieved the longest run that any dramatic attraction has ever enjoyed at the Olympic in its six weeks' engagement there, the end is apparently not in sight, for the management has arranged to transfer the production to the Garrick Theater, Chestnut at Sixth, beginning with a matinee next Sunday. The presentation will be identical with the Olympic performances, with the original symphony orchestra of thirty, accessories and effects. Elaborate preparations are under way at the Garrick for the entire redecoration of the theater, which will be completed in time for its reopening with the Griffith masterpiece next Sunday. Incidentally it will become a $2 playhouse since the same prices will be charged for "The Birth of a Nation" as have prevailed during the Olympic engagements.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT!!

Do not be misled by announcements concerning future engagements of "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" unless made by this company.

It has been brought to our notice that numerous managers of motion picture theatres have been assuring their patrons that this wonderful spectacle would be seen in the near future in theatres under their control.

We feel sure that these managers have been innocent of any wrong intent to deceive their patrons but have earnestly hoped that they could secure the gigantic production.

It is impossible to present "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" as it is given under the direction of this company in the so-called picture houses.

To present

Practically means to re-build the theatre. A corps of experts make a complete readjustment of the theatre. This is done to meet the focal requirements of this mammoth work.

Further, it requires an enlargement of the orchestra space to accommodate an augmented musical force and there are very few motion picture theatres with sufficient stage space to take care of the enormous number of people carried by the production to get the proper effects.

As it is stipulated that the first class scale of theatre prices must be maintained this item also enters into consideration.

In fact, without worrying you with too much detail, it must be apparent that very few theatres can be utilized for Mr. Griffith's enormous production until the house has been made over from the orchestra pit to the rear wall.

You can also bear in mind that "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" lasts for nearly three hours of continuous performance with one short intermission. This program is entirely too long for an ordinary picture theatre.

OWING TO THE MARVELOUS INTEREST THAT ATTACHES TO THE GREAT DRAMATIC SPECTACLE ARRANGEMENTS HAVE BEEN COMPLETED FOR THE CONTINUANCE OF ITS NEW YORK RUN AT THE LIBERTY THEATRE FOR THE REMAINDER OF THE PRESENT THEATRICAL SEASON.

Gt. Journal Dallas - Oct 5/14

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" HOLDS DALLAS SPECTATORS IN EMOTIONAL GRIP

Extravagant Moving Picture Offered at Opera House

First you are thrilled, then chilled. Your heart seems to rise within you and your blood begins to boil with anger, big tears start to your eyes only to be drawn back by a tiny touch of comedy. Finally you have to hold to your seat to keep from rising and shouting.

That's the gamut of sensations produced by D. W. Griffith's brilliant, vivid, stirring masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." The famous picture was shown at the Dallas Opera House for the first time last night. In the crowd were many members of Camp Sterling Price, United Confederate Veterans, of Dallas, and amid the applause could be heard the old battle yells given by the men who were along the firing line in 1861 at the exact spots shown in Griffith's masterpiece.

In three hours the audience sees, hears and feels the throes of war and reconstruction covering a period of fifteen years.

The marvelous picture consists of 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses, the cost of production, it is said, was over $500,000. The scenes show the biggest battle of the Civil War. Ford's Theater, where Lincoln was assassinated, the building up of the famous Ku-Klux Klan. It is perhaps the most stupendous, dramatic and spectacular production ever offered the American public.

First comes a beautiful scene in Piedmont, S. C., the home of Dr. Cameron, a well-to-do Southerner. The typical Southern atmosphere can be felt almost, as the reels slide by showing the Cameron home, the cotton fields and the negro slaves attending to their duties and later gathering for a general jollification in which the old-time square dance is given.

Historic Conference.

The scene changes to the capital where President Lincoln is in consultation with members of the House regarding the declaration of the South that it will secede if any attempt is made to force them to obey the dictations of the House or the President. The House leader, Stoneman, makes his appearance and demands secession. Stoneman's two boys are friends of Dr. Cameron's sons and at that time are visiting in Piedmont. President Lincoln signs the declaration of war and issues a call for 75,000 volunteers.

A wonderful scene is then enacted. The Stoneman boys are called home for service. The Cameron boys are called to fight for the Southland and Ben Cameron, the oldest son, goes as a Colonel. The audience is thrilled to the limit as Dr. Cameron and his wife and two daughters in their eyes, bid their three sons goodbyes, smiling, yet with big teardrops in bye.

Realistic Battle Scene.

The war has begun. Two of the Cameron boys are killed and Ben Cameron is in charge of thousands of men when the battle of Atlanta begins. Known as "The Little Colonel," Ben Cameron leads the way in this battle. In producing this scene Griffith secured a most wonderful stage effect. The first scene is at night. A panoramic view shows several villages afire as the Confederate march on Atlanta. The night scene shows the bursting of huge shells and finally the two armies come with a few yards of each other. Here is where Ben Cameron won everlasting fame. Outnumbered he led his gallant men on and on until a final rush was made and the Confederates climbed into the Federal trenches and men battled hand to hand for several hours. As the last of his brave little command was falling behind him the Little Colonel grabs the flag of the Southland, and though badly wounded, he rushes to the mouth of the enemy's cannon and rams the flag stick into the big gun. Cameron fell beneath the fire and beside a comrade. Turning his canteen to the parched lips of his dying soldier he made him drink.

Strange as it were, Stoneman's oldest son, who had, when the war broke out, declared "we will meet again," was leading the charge. He recognized Cameron and his bravery so thrilled the Federal Colonel that he rushed to Cameron's side and carried the injured Confederate to the hospital.

Cupid Relieves Tension.

Just as the audience is ready to burst into tears the first love scene is enacted. Cameron is sent to Washington to a hospital where Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the House leader, is a nurse. Cameron had seen Elsie's picture and carried it with him during the war, but he had never seen her face. She was assigned to care for him during the time he was in the hospital and he recognized her as the sister of the Stoneman boys who had visited his home.

Time goes on until he is almost well and word comes that he is to be executed as a guerilla. Miss Stoneman and Cameron's aged mother's pleas to President Lincoln save him and when the war is over Cameron is permitted to return home, but this doesn't come until after the last gray days of the Confederacy are shown, where men almost die for the lack of something to eat. How they relish hard baked beans and parched corn, yet the last hope of getting food was lost when the Federals captured their supply train. Then comes the surrender of Gen. Lee and the closing of the great war.

Lincoln's Assassination.

This is only [illegible] of Griffith's marvelous productions. The Southland could have lived over this with ease, but April 14, 1865, came and President Lincoln and his family went to Ford's Theater to see "Our American Cousins."

Griffith in his production has secured what is said to be an exact reproduction of the theater and the picture shows the play as it goes along with the President viewing the audience and the players. The body guard for Mr. Lincoln becomes enthused and leaves his post. John Wilkes Booth enters and with a small derringer placed against the President's back fires and then jumps from the box to the stage. It is a wonderful reproduction of the assassination.

Then the scene shifts back to the little town of Piedmont for a second, where Dr. Cameron and the "Little Colonel" are reading an account of the assassination.

"My God, we have lost our best friend, what will happen to us now?" is the words used by the "Little Colonel" to his father as tears roll down his cheek.

The picture is completed with a realistic reproduction of the scenes in "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's novel of reconstruction days.

Gt. Journal Dallas Oct 6

OPERA HOUSE.

The South held, with passionate conviction, that we were a Republic of Republics, each State free and sovereign. The North, under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln, held that the Union was indestructible and its sovereignty supreme.

That was what started the great Civil War. Until Lincoln's day the right of each State to peaceful secession was scarcely disputed, North or South. New England had more than once threatened to withdraw long before South Carolina, in her rage, led the way.

And that is what "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's wonderful picture, which is being shown at the Dallas Opera House, depicts in detail.

The story is wrapped around the happenings of one family—the family of Dr. Cameron of Piedmont, S. C., and the troubles of this family through the Civil War, the reconstruction and the life of Ben Cameron, "The Little Colonel," whose daring during the war and who conceived the idea of starting the famous Ku-Klux Klan won him fame.

Griffith has produced a wonderful picture—a picture which stirs and thrills from start to finish. The picture was made at an enormous expense, but it is classed as the world's greatest motion picture production, and it is deserving of the title.

Out of the four years of civil strife and the eight years of more horrible reconstruction, a nation was born. The picture will be shown each afternoon and night during the remainder of this week and all of next week.

Dallas Mr. News Oct 6/14

AMUSEMENTS.

Dallas Opera House.

Even more than realizing all expectations created by its success in other cities, "The Birth of a Nation," described as the "epic of motion pictures," thrilled and pleased two audiences at the Dallas Opera House yesterday, following its opening performance Monday night.

Massive in its conception and in its execution "The Birth of a Nation" is the sort of play that will be remembered for a lifetime. It represents probably the climax of the modern photo drama, both in its spectacular and in its dramatic phases. It is a story of the South just before, during and just after the Civil War, with two thrilling love stories woven into it. Dealing with the most stirring period of American history, D. W. Griffith, the producer, has worked out the entire scheme of his epic with careful attention to detail that only adds to instead of detracts from the romance of the story, based in part on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

So complete is the art of the picture film that the spectator sits through the three hours of the production scarcely realizing that he is not actually participating in instead of watching its exciting scenes. From beginning to end it grips, holds and even electrifies, so realistic and forceful is the film play.

The picture itself would hold any audience, but the realism of it is increased and the excitement of it is enhanced greatly by a most excellent symphony orchestra playing specially adapted and selected incidental music and also supplying the sounds of battle, portraying musically the rushing of horses' hoofs, the rear of the battle, the cries of the participants in the startling drama on the silent screen. There are forty pieces in the orchestra and time after time the building actually trembles with the crashing accompaniment to the picture.

The cast is very superior. Henry Walthall, Dorothy Gish and other capable and well-known actors have the principal parts.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be repeated at the opera house twice daily during the remainder of this week and all of next week.

may have the plain facts before you.

When any claims are made regarding future engagements bear this announcement in mind.

Now that "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" is established for its run at the Liberty Theatre we will keep it there until everybody in New York has had an opportunity to see this perfect presentation of D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASTERPIECE.

THE EPOCH PRODUCING CORPORATION
Owners of
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Dallas Dispatch Oct 6/15

Pretty Star in World's Biggest History Movie at Opera House

Miss Mae Marsh, as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," is charming Dallas folks at the Opera House this week. Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. She has several fine scenes and her personality lends itself to effective temperamental treatment in any part she plays.

Dallas Morning News Oct 7

Dallas Opera House.

The painstaking accuracy with which D. W. Griffith staged "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Dallas Opera House, is illustrated in the meeting of Generals Lee and Grant at Appomattox. Careful observers will note the appearance of Grant as contrasted with the immaculateness of Lee. It will also be noted that Grant and several of his officers are in their private uniforms—their "every-day clothes," as it were—instead of uniforms of state befitting such an occasion as the surrender of one great army to another.

The explanation of the appearance of Grant and his staff is that the great Federal leader was not expecting the final culmination of the negotiations for peace at Appomattox. There had been strong intimation and even practical assurance that Lee was unwilling to prolong the struggle—that the end was so near was not guessed. Grant and his staff were in their "business" clothes and had just come in from a hard ride, with their uniforms and their boots all splashed with mud. Grant, who had all the instincts of a gentleman and who never willfully violated the "proprieties" of good society, was very much ashamed of his own appearance when he saw Lee in the full military regalia of his rank, clothes carefully pressed and even his boots polished to perfection. In the losing struggle, half-starved along with his men and with his mighty heart broken, General Lee had yet found time and means to prepare himself properly for the last bitter moment of the Confederacy. Grant never quite forgave himself for his appearance on that memorable day.

Ev. Journal Oct 7

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

When D. W. Griffith planned his vivid motion picture production of the Civil War and the Reconstruction of the States, which is known as "The Birth of a Nation," he had in mind a lesson of peace. The picture is being shown at the Dallas Opera House each night to large audiences. The following words were penned by the famous producer to express the peace message:

"If this graphic presentment serves no other purpose, its message of universal peace marks it of great importance. Morally and educationally it established the futility of armed conflict."

A member of the United States Senate, after viewing the remarkable picture, said: "Anyone contemplating war should see this picture. I sincerely believe it will do more to deter people from engaging in war than anything written or spoken on the subject in years."

"The Birth of a Nation," the most elaborate picture ever offered in Texas, is a play written by a Southerner and is a Southern play in every sense of the word. It can be seen each afternoon and night during the present and coming week.

Oct 7

Dallas Daily Times 12

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The incident of the young Confederates release by President Lincoln's order, which gets a round of enthusiastic handclapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Dallas Opera House, was verified as an actual historical event by one of the spectators, G. L. Mordecai of 174 West Eighty-sixth street, New York, is the man to whom it happened. During the New York run of the play he visited D. W. Griffith's offices and told this remarkable story.

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive blockade running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. I had served in the Confederate army but had been honorably discharged on account of sickness. My father then wanted me to go as his agent to Nassau. The only channel of intercourse was closed, however, when the federals captured Fort Fisher, so father suggested that I should try to slip through the northern lines and thence take steamer from New York.

"In civilian dress I managed to elude the union pickets in Virginia, crossed the Potomac, took stage for Washington, but in the latter place I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. It was feared that I would be court-martialed and executed, or at best held prisoner until the close of the war. My fiancee's father, Alderman Samuel Lewis of New York, later acting mayor, came to Washington and worked in my behalf. Notwithstanding Secretary Stanton's opposition, he succeeded in convincing President Lincoln that I was not a spy. "I will release the young man," said Mr. Lincoln, "on one condition, that he takes oath not to return to the southern states during the war."

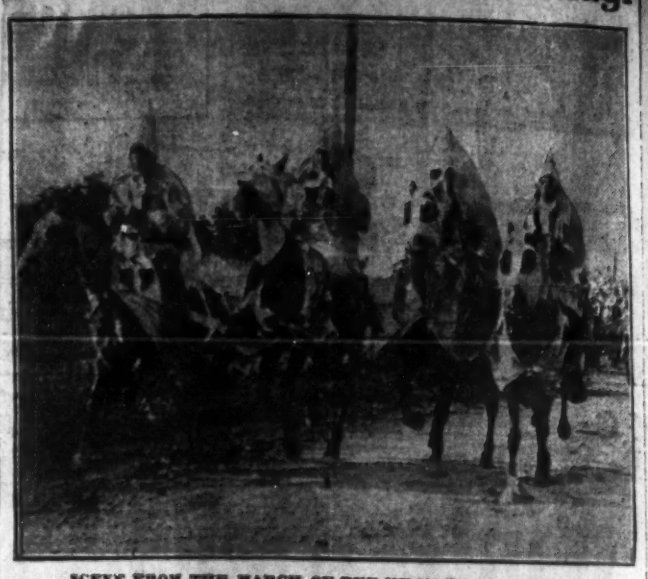
"I gladly took this oath and was released. Before leaving for the north, for my marriage and residence in Alderman Lewis's family, I desired to thank President Lincoln. I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.' I have never forgotten the great president's generosity and kindheartedness to a foe, and when I saw the picture that early experience was vividly unearthed."

Bluefield Daily Telegraph Oct 8

MAE MARSH
winsome actress who has won a great following by her work in "The Birth of a Nation," playing at the Elks' Opera House.

St Louis Times Oct 8

Story of Ku Klux Klan's Cyclops, Wizards and Magi



SCENE FROM THE MARCH OF THE KU KLUX KLAN.

Probably the most thrilling scenes in David W. Griffith's spectacular production, "The Birth of a Nation," which opens at the Garrick Theater Sunday, are those in which the ghostly garbed ghouls of the Ku Klux Klan ride madly to the rescue of the women and children of the South.

Secret societies organized for political ends are no novelty in history. There were the Jacobins in France, the Carbonieri in Italy and the Nihilists in Russia. In America there were those who made their creed "America for Americans."

The Ku Klux Klan was organized as an institution of "Chivalry, Humanity and Patriotism." In its original form it was merely a social club and the name was taken from the Greek word "kuklos," meaning circle. This society was formed in Pulaski, Tenn., in May, 1866. The president of the circle was known as the grand cyclops; his assistant was the grand magi; the marshal was the grand turk; the treasurer was the grand exchequer and the guards were termed lictors.

As the scorrows of the South, under the baneful reconstruction laws, began to get unbearable the organization changed its character and the name became popularized as Ku Klux Klan, the Klan having been added because most of the original members were descendants of Scotch clansmen. The fiery cross of the Scotch Highlanders was again used as a call to arms. A great gathering of the Klan at Nashville, Tenn., in 1867, passed the following resolutions, which were then kept secret.

"We organize our relations to the United States Government, the supremacy of the Constitution."

LOFTY PURPOSES.

The aims of the organization were set forth as follows:

1. "To protect the weak, the innocent and the defenseless from the indignities, wrongs and outrages of the lawless, the violent and the brutal; to relieve the injured and oppressed; to succor the suffering and unfortunate and especially the widows and orphans of the Confederate soldiers.

2. "To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States and all laws passed in conformity thereto and to protect the States from all invasion from any source whatever.

3. "To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws in conformity to the laws of the land."

The Empire, as the Klan was known, was ruled by the grand wizard, Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest, the gallant and dashing Confederate cavalry leader. Each State was known as a realm. The grand dragon was assisted by eight hydras. A group of counties was called a dominion, ruled by a grand titan and six furies.

DISSOLVED IN 1869.

Each county was a province under a grand giant and four goblins. The unit of the organization was the den and the members were known as ghouls. The membership at one time numbered over 500,000. Their mysteries and rituals were never written until after the grand wizard dissolved the order in March, 1869.

A similar order was started in Louisiana known as the Knights of the White Camelia. At first the Ku Klux Klan devoted their efforts to putting down disorder among the misled negroes. Generally all that was necessary was to play upon the superstitition of that race. They would ride up to a negro's cabin in the dead of night and one of the riders would call for a bucket of water, which he would drain to the bottom using a concealed leather bag. He would then say that was the first drink he had had since he was killed at the Battle of Shilo. Another would wear a skeleton hand and another would take off his skull and ask the negro to hold it while he adjusted his backbone. Later they went after the Carpetbaggers and Scalawags.

Motion Picture World Oct 9

"BIRTH OF NATION" FILM AT CANADIAN EXPOSITION.

"The Birth of a Nation," the big picture, was witnessed in Ottawa last week by probably one hundred thousand people. It was used as the chief evening feature in front of the grandstand here at the Central Canada Exhibition, the directors for the first time departing from vaudeville and the other usual exhibition attractions, in favor of the moving picture.

B. C. WHITNEY BOOKS "BIRTH OF A NATION."

When is Detroit to see "The Birth of a Nation" and at what theater is it to be shown? These two questions have been uppermost in the minds of Detroit exhibitors and picture fans. Many rumors have been afloat and many local managers have tried to book the wonderful feature, but the correct "dope" (which was given exclusively to the World representative) is that B. C. Whitney, proprietor of the Detroit Opera House, holds the contract for the showing of this picture two weeks during the month of March. It will positively not be seen in Detroit previous to that time. Detroit is among the last of the larger cities to get a look at this three-hour film, which is somewhat surprising, for Detroit is considered one of the very best show towns in the country. It is understood that the producers of this picture were offered as high as $30,000 for the state rights. After playing the Detroit Opera House, it will be seen in a number of other Michigan cities, and will then return to the "BIRTH OF NATION" COMING TO LEWISTON.

The "Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the Empire theater, at Lewiston, the entire week of October 4, with a special orchestra of twenty pieces. On the first three days of the week special trains will be run from Norway, Livermore Falls and Farmington, to accommodate those who wish to see this production.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IN OHIO.

If the Ohio Board of Censors permit "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown in this state, the film will first be shown at Dayton, going to Columbus and finally reaching Cleveland in the early spring, motion picture exhibitors have been given to understand. An engagement of fifteen weeks has been booked at the Opera house, Cleveland, when censored and available.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)
Oct. 9, 1915

"CLANSMAN" ENTERS 21st WEEK AT SAN FRANCISCO

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

San Francisco, Sept. 27.

The Griffith film masterpiece, "The Clansman," has entered upon its twenty-first week at San Francisco, and from present indications will continue to be a leading drawing card for some time. It is now being shown at the Savoy theatre, on McAllister street, a house that has for some time been given over to burlesque and transient attractions, and is proving to be the best drawing card booked there in several years.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IN OHIO.

If the Ohio Board of Censors permit "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown in this state, the film will first be shown at Dayton, going to Columbus and finally reaching Cleveland in the early spring, motion picture exhibitors have been given to understand. An engagement of fifteen weeks has been booked at the Opera house, Cleveland, when censored and available.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

After Hearing Protests Mayor Mayo Let Film Be Shown.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHEN the big spectacle was advertised there was introduced into the Common Council an ordinance forbidding the production of any picture that tended to "incite race prejudice, race hatred, or race riot." There were many who appeared before the Council speaking for and against the enactment of the ordinance, which was finally passed by a vote of seven to four. The measure then went to the Board of Aldermen, and further argument ensued. By a vote of six to five the ordinance was referred to the ordinance committee of the Board of Aldermen for its recommendation. It had also been put up to Mayor Mayo to stop the production of "The Birth of a Nation," but after considering the matter he decided that he was without the power so to do.

As a result of the agitation against the film in both the Common Council and the Board of Aldermen there was a long line of people at the box office at the Colonial theater when the seat sale for this much-discussed production was opened. It is planned to show it during the entire week. Otto Wells is the manager of the Wells' interests here.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

New Club Dedicated to the Moving Pictures.

WELL, the Film Club has been launched, with a large charter membership, including men, it being the desire of the founder, Marion Howard Brazier that both sexes be represented, especially on the board of management, and it looks now as if that popular and genial manager, J. Arthur Eslow, of the Universal Film Exchange here, will be the treasurer. At the adjourned meeting Sunday the 19th by-laws will be adopted and all the officers elected. In addition the club will have as guests Mary Fuller and Irene Fenwick. The former is at Cape Ann rehearsing in "The Heart of a Mermaid," and Miss Fenwick is also here in the flesh in "The Song of Songs," at the Tremont, and better still is in the films at the Boston in "The Spendthrift." But to go back to the club. It has started auspiciously and its possibilities seem many. It is proposed to invite David W. Griffith to become an honorary member for his work in giving us "The Birth of a Nation," which happily is still here at another theater as a result of the purchase of the rights by a syndicate of producers.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (New York City)
OCT. 9, 1915

...ive wire stunt practised by the neighborhood theatres in St. Louis, deserves to be passed on. The big audiences the "Birth of a Nation" has been drawing at the Olympic theatre, resulted in many of the smaller houses advertising "Griffith" pictures, "Walthall" and "Lillian Gish" features, when a Griffith directed picture, or when Walthall or Lillian Gish appeared in pictures on the bill, and the plan never failed to draw crowded houses.

Journal of Commerce Oct 9

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its week at the Liberty Theatre to-morr... D. W. Griffith's wonderful photo-spect... has already beaten all records for ... runs and, from present indications, ... set a mark that will stand for all t... Many ticket purchasers admit they are ... peaters" and the audiences show no ... of diminishing.

Ev News Oct 9

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" begins its thirty-third week at the Liberty Theatre to-morrow afternoon.

ASTOR—George M. Cohan, whose happy knack of choosing characters from real life and transplanting them to the stage has been forcefully exampled in every play this genius of the theatre has so far offered, is again evidenced in his latest offering "Hit-the-Trail Holiday," a real American farce that is convulsing audiences at the Astor theatre.

Ev Mail Oct 9

"Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its thirty-third week at the Liberty Theatre to-morrow afternoon. David W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle has already beaten all records for long runs in recent years, and from present indications will set a mark that will stand. Many ticket purchasers assert that they have seen the spectacle before and are going again.

CHICAGO (Ill.) MOTOGRAPHY
OCT. 9, 1915

Circuit Judge Kinsy on September 21 at St. Louis, Mo., denied a temporary injunction of the Epoch Producing Company, which sought to restrain the Cherokee theater from producing a drama called the "The Birth of Our Nation." The Epoch Producing Company is producing the film play, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Olympic theater. The petition claims the play of the defendant company infringes on the copyright of the Epoch Company.

An injunction suit to restrain the picketing of the old Hippodrome theater, now known as the New Grand Duchess, a motion picture house, conducted by the Weimer Theater Company in St. Louis, Mo., was filed Wednesday in the circuit court. The defendants are the Motion Picture Operators Union No. 143, Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association, Local No. 2, and the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers' Union No. 1. Differences between the electrical workers and other unions regarding the nature of the work to be done by stage hands and by the electricians have caused the trouble.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

TWO BIG FEATURES COMING.

"The Birth of a Nation" is coming to Denver. This is a certainty, but it is not as yet known just when it will be here, although it will probably be in a couple of months. With the two big pictures coming, "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Battle Cry of Peace," Denver moving picture public has a treat in store.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

"BIRTH OF NATION" FILM AT CANADIAN EXPOSITION.

"The Birth of a Nation," the big picture, was witnessed in Ottawa last week by probably one hundred thousand people. It was used as the chief evening feature in front of the grandstand here at the Central Canada Exhibition, the directors for the first time departing from vaudeville and the other usual exhibition attractions, in favor of the moving picture.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS CANADIANS.

Censors Deleted Two Battle Scenes—Rest Went.

By David K. Billings, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

COMING over into Canada where considerable apathy was shown regarding its success, "The Birth of a Nation" has again shown its ability to draw top prices and big crowds in a first-class theatre. With war times and its American plot, fears were expressed that it would be a failure and Manager Solman of the Alexandra theater refused to book the film for more than one week until it had been tested.

To the astonishment of all, the picture created a record, and for the first time during the last year people were turned away from the theater on two consecutive nights and the criticisms given by the press were more laudatory than any stage star has received for many a day. The picture has scored a triumph in a city which boasted it never would accept two dollar pictures. The usual "kick" was registered by the negro population before the appearance of the picture, but with the exception of the elimination of one or two of the battle scenes, the picture was untouched by the censors.

TION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

Since the "Birth of a Nation" has attained such a wide popularity in St. Louis, many of the neighborhood houses take advantage of the fact and advertise a "Griffith" picture, or a "Walthall" or "Lillian Gish" feature, and from the packed houses heard of as the result, it would seem that the old adage "It pays to advertise" never rang truer.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD (N. Y. City)
OCT. 9, 1915

THE PRINCESS AT MONTREAL BURNED.

"Birth of a Nation" Was to Show There—Spectacle Will Be Seen at the Arena.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FIRE at the Princess theater, Montreal, about three days before D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was scheduled to open. Fire did damage to the house to the extent of about fifty thousand dollars.

Nothing is yet definitely known as to the origin of the fire, but from the fact that it started near the front of the top gallery, it is supposed to have been caused by defective insulation on one of the wires connected at this point with the limelight apparatus. Considerable gossip was caused by the coincidence of the fire with the opposition on the part of the colored population to the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." The fire occurred at a time when no audience was in the house. Following the lead taken by a local paper, we would like to suggest that Montreal exhibitors take more interest in their capability of coping with such a situation.

It was only decided at the eleventh hour to screen the Griffith picture at the Arena. The Arena, since it seats five thousand people, is devoted solely to athletic functions and such productions as musical concerts. Besides this, the town of Westmount, in which it is located, extorts a license fee of $200 per night. So it will be seen that, considering the delayed press campaign and the difficulties involved in screening such a pretentious offering, "The Birth of a Nation" has happened along in a very unlucky time. We wish it unbounded success, and extend our sympathy to Mr. Wright, the manager of the Princess.

Oct 9

THE NIXON.

Despite the fact that apparently everybody in Pittsburgh and vicinity wants to see "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theater, the end of the engagement is definitely scheduled to take place next Saturday evening. The fact that Frances Starr is announced for the following week disposes of all hope that the remarkable Griffith spectacle will remain beyond next week at the Nixon. It is estimated that about 150,000 people have attended the local presentation of this play in the six weeks it has been here. This is a marvelous record, one that even the most enthusiastic theatergoer wouldn't have dared to predict last August. All this week, from the opening of the Nixon box office until its closing, an unbroken line of intending seat purchasers has extended half way down the theater block in Sixth avenue. The record-breaking engagement here is typical of the success experienced by "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles and the other large cities where it is now playing. The popularity of the spectacle is the marvel of the theatrical business; week after week and month after month its wonderful runs continue to capacity audiences. The first half of the great production remains the same stirring series of exciting events, ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the inspiring period of the Civil war. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln, and the second half is devoted to the days of the Reconstruction period.

Pittsburgh Sun, Oct 9

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theater, will end the engagement, it is definitely announced, next Saturday night. The fact that Frances Starr is announced for the following week disposes of all hope that the Griffith spectacle will remain beyond next week at the Nixon. It is estimated that about 150,000 people have attended the local presentation of this play in the six weeks it has been here. The first half of the great production shows the series of events ranging from the days of the Old South to the period of the Civil War. Then comes the reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the second half is devoted to the days of the Reconstruction period. At the close is shown the new era of the negro race, giving scenes at Hampton, Va., which evidences the progress made by that people since the period of 50 years ago. "The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial story of the most momentous years in the history of the United States.

N.Y. Globe Oct 9

Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its thirty-third week in the Liberty Theatre to-morrow afternoon. This spectacle has already broken all records for long runs of this kind in recent years, and from present indications will set a mark that will stand for a long time before its engagement in the Liberty is ended.

Globe Oct 9

LIBERTY.—"The Birth of a Nation" begins its thirty-third week at the Liberty Theatre to-morrow afternoon. David W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle has already beaten all records for long runs in recent years and from present indications will set a mark that will stand for all time before its engagement at the Liberty is ended.

N.Y. Herald Oct 10

In the Liberty Theatre to-morrow "The Birth of a Nation" will enter upon its thirty-third week in New York. D. W. Griffith and his associates renew their statement that the spectacle is to remain in the Liberty throughout the season.

Journal Knoxville Tenn. Oct 9 Record Oct 9 [illegible]

At Staub's

Since the opening of the sale yesterday morning there has been a brisk demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" and the extent of public interest in the offering has been a surprise even to the management. The engagement is for three days beginning Monday night and with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a superb combination of music and film founded upon Thomas Dixon's successful novel and play, "The Clansman." It tells the story of the Reconstruction as it never has been told before, some of the realistic scenes being Abraham Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for troops, the battles of the conflict, Sherman's march, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the South in the throes of change, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the K. K. K. Parties of war veterans and sons of veterans are coming in great numbers to the Tremont. It is difficult for many of them to refrain from shouting the old war cries or from shuffling the feet to the rhythm of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the picture are so skillfully managed, the interest is so tensely maintained, that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour. Adv.

N.Y. Review

Lillian Gish assisting at "The Birth of a Nation."

M. Telegraph Oct 10

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its thirty-third week at the Liberty Theatre to-morrow afternoon. David W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle has already beaten all records for long runs in recent years, and from present indications will set a mark that will stand for all time before its engagement at the Liberty is ended. The longer the run the longer the line at the box office. Many ticket purchasers frankly assert that they have seen the spectacle before and are coming again.

Gazette-Times Oct 10

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

The particularly interesting news in connection with the remarkable engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon Theater, is the announcement that this sensational spectacle will remain at the Nixon all this week. Apparently everybody in Pittsburgh and vicinity is eager to see the Griffith masterpiece for, despite the fact that for the past six weeks the capacity of the theater has been tested twice daily, yet the demand for seats is greater than ever, the long line of intending seat purchasers which remained unbroken day after day of the past was so conspicuous a feature of the Nixon entrance that it became town talk.

The record-breaking engagement here is typical of the success experienced by "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles and the other large cities where it is now playing. The popularity of the spectacle is the marvel of the theatrical business; week after week, and month after month its wonderful runs continue to capacity audiences. Usually it is possible to estimate the length of time which a theatrical attraction will meet with success in any given city, but in the instance of the Griffith historical drama the appeal of the spectacle is so universal that managerial judgment counts for nothing—everybody apparently wants to see it, and so far no city has yet recorded the end of its popularity.

The first half of this great production remains the same stirring series of exciting events ranging from the picturesque days of the Old South to the inspiring period of the Civil War. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln and the second half is devoted to the baleful days of the Reconstruction period.

Pittsburgh Leader Oct 11

MARIAM COOPER.
As Margaret Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation."

In the opinion of Miss Mariam Cooper, who interprets the part of the southern belle, Margaret Cameron, in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon theater, the advice that really gave her the courage to do and dare was: "Don't be self-conscious."

Self-consciousness is the stumbling block of many careers. In fact, most people have too much of it for their own good. Of course many people in the public eye are afflicted with self-consciousness, though with some it is not of the super-coy variety.

"My self-consciousness," states Miss Cooper, "almost prevented me from having a career as an actress. I marvel now where I got the courage to ask Director D. W. Griffiths for the opportunity of working in his studio. That Mr. Griffiths knew of my weakness was evidenced in his first advice to me, 'don't be self-conscious. Forget yourself or you will never amount to anything anywhere.'

"Believe me, I fought hard in those days to acquire a sense of perspective, an understanding of human and material values in the world. Despit the 'blues' of those early days, when it seemed to me I was just a bundle of mistakes, all hands and feet, I refused to think I was of no significance in life. Self-deprecation does not make for success, but to one who really realizes what a long, long journey it is to where fame awaits, it is no easy matter to overcome the experience which makes one feel that someone else continually is noting one with disapproval.

"Since I have acquired a sense of proportion life has a new meaning for me. Now I am not afraid and I look upon every new character which I am scheduled to play as another opportunity, not a thing to be feared. And, best of all, I no longer despair that I will not achieve my ambition, though possibly that's a sign that I have reached that other extreme of self-consciousness—self-overestimation."

Mr. Griffiths regards Miss Cooper as one of his most important finds. "finds." "Some day," states the famous director, "I believe Miss Cooper will be the most talked of screen actress in the world."

Pittsburgh Press Oct 11

MAE MARSH,
At the Nixon.

MAE MARSH IS BIG FIND OF THE MOVIES.

Mae Marsh, who is seen as the captivating little Flora in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon, is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact, it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts who declare her to be the best "find" of the last 30 months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, decided one day to sneak behind her big sister to the motion picture studio, where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavery parts."

Pittsburgh Press Oct 10

NIXON.

The particularly interesting news in connection with the remarkable engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Nixon theater is the announcement that this sensational spectacle will remain at the Nixon all this week. Apparently everybody in Pittsburgh and vicinity is eager to see the Griffith masterpiece for, despite the fact that for the past six weeks the capacity of the theater has been tested twice daily yet the demand for seats is greater than ever, the long line of intending seat purchasers which remained unbroken day after day of the past week was so conspicuous a feature of the Nixon entrance that it became town talk.

The popularity of the spectacle is the marvel of the theatrical business; week after week, month after month its wonderful run continues to capacity audiences. Usually it is possible to estimate the length of time which a theatrical attraction will meet with success in any given city but in the instance of the Griffith historical drama the appeal of the spectacle is so universal that managerial judgment counts for nothing—everybody apparently wants to see it and so far no city has yet recorded the end of its popularity.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 10

Nixon—"Birth of a Nation" Photo Spectacle.

The remarkable engagement of the "Birth of a Nation" at the Nixon Theater is extended to include this week. Thousands are eager to see the Griffith masterpiece. For six weeks the capacity of the theater has been tested twice daily, yet the demand for seats is greater than ever, a long line appearing every day.

The engagement here is typical of the success experienced by "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles and other large cities where it is shown. Week after week, month after month, its wonderful runs continue to capacity audiences.

The first half of this production shows the stirring events ranging from the picturesque days of the old South to the period of the Civil war. Then comes the graphic reproduction of the assassination of President Lincoln. The second half is devoted to the days of the reconstruction period. At the close is shown the new era, the progress made since the period of 50 years ago. "The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial story of most momentous years in the history of the United States.

U. S. Tribune Oct 10

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its twenty-third week at the Liberty Theatre to-morrow afternoon. David W. Griffith's spectacle has already beaten all records for long runs in recent years.

Mr. Griffith and his associates renew their emphasis on the statement that the only place in New York to see "The Birth of a Nation" is at the Liberty Theatre, where it is expected to remain throughout the entire season.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" has reached its fifth week at the Vitagraph Theatre.

The appeal of the love story in the picture and the dramatic events through which it moves have caused great interest in the photo-play.

The picture deals with the country's unpreparedness in the face of possible foreign invasion. The bombardment of New York by a hostile squadron, the flight of the population by every conceivable means from the shattered city and the occupation of the city by a foreign army are told with dramatic vividness.

Bluefield Daily Telegraph Oct 10

Saw Birth of a Nation.

Among those who went to Bluefield to attend the "Birth of a Nation" were Mr. and Mrs. I. J. Partlow, Mrs. Graham Sale, Mrs. Sam G. Walker, Miss Alice Miller, Mrs. Tom Edwards, Mrs. Louis D. Wilmore, Miss Bess Watson and Miss Elizabeth Kittinger.

Ev. Ledger Oct 10

THE MORTAL FILMS
By D. W. GRIFFITH

Will the silent drama ever put forth immortal art products? No. The motion picture is acting, and the fashion of acting changes with each age. The stage work of Forrest, Macready, Kean or Kemble, if it could be accurately reproduced, would appear crude, stiff and awkward to us of today. The acting of today will similarly seem unnatural or impossible to the people 200 years hence.

But the immortal stories will be there, the world's legacy of great characters and great scenes, to be picturized according to the changed ideals of the succeeding generations.

and is ... booked t...

SEASON

"BIRTH OF A NOTION" OPENS AT NORFOLK

Great Motion Picture Exhibited In South For First Time —Large Audience.

Special to The Gazette-News:

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 28.—Simultaneous with its presentation at the Scala theater, London, England, before King George, and members of the Royal household, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," made its entry into the south last night at the Colonial theater, here. An audience typical of the Old Dominion greeted the first presentation. Mayor Wyndham R. Mayo, with members of the council and board of aldermen, Admiral Beattie, Commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard; Colonel Haynes in command at Fortress Monroe; representatives of the Daughters of the Confederacy and others prominent in the official and social life of eastern Virginia were in the audience.

Never in the history of a southern playhouse was such a triumph achieved by a dramatic presentment of a historic and romantic narrative as this production won. In the short space of three hours the impelling drama of the final welding of this nation in bonds of unity was enacted in all its fascinating detail.

Griffith being a southerner born, the son of Brigadier-General John Griffith, of Kentucky, has caught the psychology of this historic period of our national evolution. He begins by picturing the old glorious days when happiness reigned in the land of the cotton and the jasmine. Then he shows the development of the abolition movement; the threatening news of a presidential election in 1860 that was to disrupt the ties that held us together. Impelling pictures of the heroisms and sufferings of war as it actually is follow.

Press Oct 10

AT THE FORREST

There is no diminuition in attendance at the Forrest, where the Griffith photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be shown twice daily. It is not surprising that this picture is so successful, for underlying all the elements of a spectacular nature, so admirably accentuated by the orchestral score, is a romantic story of deepest heart interest. It was an inspiration to take as the theme of this masterpiece the building up of a nation, through war and through subsequent reconstruction.

Griffith has shown himself to be a creator and an originator. In photography he is supreme, setting a standard which many of his contemporaries have found difficult to follow. He has a wonderful grasp of detail and his sense of the dramatic is so sure that he grips attention and will not let it lag.

The battle scenes that are thrown upon the screen are thrilling. But the love scenes have relief in many intimate happenings, as, for instance, in Abraham Lincoln's kindly reception of an old woman who has come to plead for her son's life, or, in the happy meetings of gay young beaux and sweethearts.

The early days of slavery are placed in contrast with those times when the liberated race sought to dominate because of an unaccustomed liberty. Then there are those dashing night rides of the Ku Klux Klan. Each incident in the presentation serves its purpose in the unfolding of the story and over it all is the fascinating glamor of romance.

Record Oct 11

SURRENDER OF LEE

Griffith Reproduced With Realism a Scene of Great Moment.

Two old acquaintances who had served together in the Mexican war, met in the house of a Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, on April 9, 1865, when General Lee surrendered his Confederate forces to General Grant. The scene of his surrender is one of the many effective incidents reproduced with historical accuracy in the D. W. Griffith motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now showing at the Forrest Theatre.

General Grant, in his "Personal Memoirs," gives a graphic description of his meeting with General Lee. Grant did not suppose that Lee would recollect a much younger comrade of lower rank, who had served in another army years before. The Union general, not having expected so early a surrender, was not in ceremonial garb. When on horseback in the field Grant did not usually carry a sword and he was without that trapping on this occasion. His coat was a soldier's blouse with shoulder-straps alone to indicate his rank and his army. The two men shook hands cordially and soon began a conversation about old army times. Lee remarked that he had excellent remembrance of Grant in the old army and Grant responded that he had a perfect recollection of Lee. The conversation became so pleasant that Grant confesses he almost forgot the object of the meeting. But after a time General Lee, who was dressed in an entirely new uniform and was wearing a sword of considerable value, brought up the subject of the meeting. He declared that he had asked for the interview merely to find out what terms Grant proposed to give. When Grant responded that it was his desire to have Lee's army lay down its arms and not to resume fighting, Lee said that he had so understood a communication received from the Union commander.

Conversation again drifted into channels foreign to the course of the meeting, but General Lee again brought up the subject of terms and General Parker, secretary on Grant's staff, brought forward writing materials. Grant then wrote the following note:

Appomattox Courthouse, Va.,
April 9th, 1865.

General R. E. Lee,
Commanding C. S. A.:

General—In accordance with the substance of my letter to you of the 8th instant, I propose to receive the surrender of the Army of N. Va., on the following terms, to wit: Rolls of all the officers and men to be made in duplicate, one copy to be given to an officer designated by me, the other to be retained by such officer or officers as you may designate.

The officers to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged, and each company or regimental commander to sign a like parole for the men of their commands. The arms, artillery and public property to be parked and stacked and turned over to the officer appointed by me to receive them. This will not embrace the side-arms of the officers, nor their private horses or baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to their homes, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they observe their paroles and the laws in force where they may reside.

Very respectfully,
U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

The terms, after a short discussion, were accepted, and while duplicates of the letters of Grant and Lee, who had at once sat down to write a reply, were being made, the Union generals were presented individually to General Lee. The separation of Grant and Lee was as cordial as the first meeting had been and all went into bivouac for the night at Appomattox. It was an impressive occasion and this is fully realized by every on-looker who sees the visualization of the scene in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Forrest.

Inquirer Oct 10

FORREST—There is no diminution in attendance at the David Wark Griffith photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which continues to be shown twice daily. It is not surprising that this picture is so successful, for underlying all the elements of a spectacular nature, so admirably accentuated by the orchestral score, is a romantic story of deepest heart interest. It was an inspiration to take as the theme of this masterpiece the building up of a nation through war and subsequent reconstruction.

Griffith has shown himself to be a creator and an originator. In photography he is superb, setting a standard which many of his contemporaries have found difficult to follow. He has a wonderful grasp of detail and his sense of the dramatic is so sure that he grips attention and will not let it lag. The battle scenes that are thrown upon the screen are even more thrilling than are the actual conflicts to participants. Of course, the reason for this is that one stands aloof and sees the entire sweep of country with the contending armies in impressive panorama. But the big scenes have relief in many intimate happenings, as, for instance, in Abraham Lincoln's kindly reception of an old woman who has come to plead for her son's life, or in the happy meetings of gay young beaux and sweethearts. The early days of slavery are placed in contrast with those times when the liberated negro sought to dominate because of an unaccustomed liberty. Then there are those dashing night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, upholders of traditions of the South. Each incident in the presentation serves its purpose in the unfolding of the story, and over it all is the fascinating glamor of romance. "The Birth of a Nation" is splendidly enacted.

Record Oct 11

Lee Surrendering to Grant

Inquirer Oct 10

Lillian Gish In Film, FORREST

©BY HARTSOOK-S.R.&L.A.

O. Ledger Oct 10

SOMETHING in the nature of a reply to "The Birth of a Nation" will be found this week at People's Theatre, in the production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a new play concerning the South before the war, by the rising young playwright, Harriet Beecher Stowe. This was popularly supposed to be its first performance on any stage, but upon close inquiry it was discovered that it has been done before and by some very prominent players. Wilton Lackaye, J. H. Stoddard and W. J. Le Moyne have been some of the Uncle Toms; Lotta played Topsy when she was 18; Effie Ellsler was a Little Eva at the age of 5, while George Fox played Phineas before he began delighting the youngsters as Humpty Dumpty. J. H. Hackett, father of James K., was still another who used to shine in the play.

The work was given its first English production at the Manchester Theatre in 1853 and the same year it was seen in Paris at the Opera Comique—of all places. Translations into Italian, Portuguese and German followed. Only recently it has found its way into the "movies."

Press Oct 10

THE two-dollar picture show has at last reached Philadelphia to enter into direct competition with the legitimate theaters. To be sure we already had "The Birth of a Nation," filling the Forrest like Montgomery and Stone or the "Ziegfeld Follies." But that great photo-spectacle is different and apart from all other screen productions. The Triangle productions at the Chestnut Street Opera House give a variety of dramatic and comedy films produced in the highest style of the art. Some of the photography made under the direction of John H. Ince and David W. Griffith is the most beautiful I have seen.

P. Ledger Oct 10

AT THE PHOTOPLAY

FORREST—There is no diminution in attendance at this playhouse, where the David W. Griffith photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," continues to be shown twice daily. It is not surprising that this picture is so successful, for underlying all the elements of a spectacular nature, so admirably accentuated by the orchestral score, is a romantic story of deep heart interest. Mr. Griffith himself chose the players, and he was careful to have each one a type, while there has been as careful attention to costuming as to any other detail of the preliminary preparations. It required eight months to take this picture, an expenditure of much money and 18,000 persons.

N. American Oct 10

LILLIAN GISH-FORREST

179

N. American Oct 10

MOTION PICTURES

Forrest.—"The Birth of a Nation" will continue its long run. The realistic battle scenes of this piece, the historical spectacles, and the intimate love tale of this film seem to possess infinite power to hold the attention of audiences. The battle pictures, particularly in the scenes showing hidden batteries, and Sherman's march to the sea have a timely interest for all their voluminous black powder. The hand-to-hand fighting stands out strongly in contrast with the pictures showing the conditions and nature of trench fighting in Europe. Of all the capable members of the cast probably the most commendable work is done by Mae Marsh, in the role of "little pet sister." Henry B. Walthall and Miriam Cooper are also capable.

Press Oct 10

LILLIAN GISH'S RULES FOR FACIAL BEAUTY

During the run of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Forrest, the face of Lillian Gish, who appears as "Elsie Stoneman," the daughter of the stern and unyielding abolitionist, has become very familiar. In view of her beauty it does not seem strange that she should be giving talks out in California on how to be beautiful. In one of these talks she says:—

"In these days of faddy hair dressing a great many girls lose sight of one of the classic rules of beauty. It is said that in ancient Athens, when beauty was worshipped, a woman whose face was not oval could never expect to be called beautiful. It is easy enough to dress one's hair so that this effect can be obtained.

"Of course, the average girl does not have the chance to dress her hair in picturesque disorder that we of the 'movies' do, but a little care and thought bestowed upon one's coiffure and the dressing of one's neck will help much.

"If your chin is pointed, wear a full ruff, pull your hair forward in front of your ears and do not dress it over the middle of the forehead. Long earrings will help to make an oval face out of a thin one.

"Unless you have the pert features of a French woman do not pull your hair back from your face. If you do, you will achieve the effect that the little boy will describe as that of 'a drowned rat.'

"If you wish to 'ovalize' your face, don't make your chin too white when you powder, unless it is well rounded."

As Miss Gish has a beautiful oval face she does not have to practice any of her beauty hints in that direction.

P. Ledger Oct 10

LILLIAN GISH-FORREST

Asheville N.C. Sunday Citizen Oct 10

"BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL BE SHOWN HERE

Notable Film Production to Be Shown at the Auditorium Next Week—First Time In Carolinas.

(By the Press Agent.)

Just as it is being presented in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston and other large cities, where it has broken all theatrical records in the last eight months, "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Auditorium for the first three days of next week with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. The engagement is notable, first because Asheville will be the smallest city to date to witness the spectacle and secondly because it will mark the entry of the company into the Carolinas.

As most of the playgoing public knows, "The Birth of a Nation" is a mighty spectacular combination of music, motion pictures and realistic state effects founded upon Thomas Dixon's throbbing story of the reconstruction, "The Clansman." The story was used by D. W. Griffith because it links history with romance and gives opportunity for tremendous battle scenes of the Civil war, superb exhibitions of horsemanship in dashes of the Ku Klux Klan and withal unfolds a chapter of American history that has never found its way into textbooks. Only those Carolinians who lived through the trying days of the reconstruction can appreciate Mr. Dixon's story for its full worth and in "The Birth of a Nation" they see re-enacted events that could only be described heretofore.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated in the Civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshaled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3,000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts [illegible] fought again just as they were waged [illegible] 50 years ago.

[illegible] booked

FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT DALLAS OPERA HOUSE

The Little Colonel Leading the Last Charge

Evening Journal, Dallas, Texas Oct 9 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" SMASHING BOX RECORDS AT DALLAS OPERA HOUSE

D. W. Griffith and his associates have been particularly pleased over the success of the first week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Dallas Opera House, where it is smashing all boxoffice records. Dallas is the first city of the Southwest and the second city of the South in which this mighty spectacle of the Southland during Civil War and reconstruction days has been shown. Heretofore its astonishing career, which has eclipsed the careers of all other theatrical big successes, including "The Birth of a Nation" combined, has been confined to the Northland and the Pacific coast. Hurried preparations were made for the first time in a Southern city. Norfolk being the scene of the premier. A week later, the Dallas company opened its engagement here. Both the Southwest and the Southland have joined in the enthusiastic approval expressed everywhere in the North.

Mr. Griffith, who is a Kentuckian by birth, and whose father was a colonel in the Confederate army, produced "The Birth of a Nation" with a view to placing before the world a true picture of the Southland as it was during the stormiest period of American history. He has done his work so well that even a rock-ribbed abolitionist and anti-Southern sentiment like Boston has admitted that the appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" is universal. In that city it has contributed one of the brightest pages in the sensational history of the theatre. In Philadelphia, Chicago and other cities it has made equally good and what it realize what it has accomplished in the way of a spectacle. For the first time in history, Griffith has made the motion picture drama, in so far as the photoplay, in so far as tures are concerned. darkest page of New World history with the torch of truth.

Mr. Griffith did not doubt that the South would indorse his production as heartily as the North. Nevertheless, he is human, and the indorsement has expressed so audibly at the boxoffice, has not been without laborers, unappreciated in his own country.

"The Birth of a Nation," whose admission price does not adequately measure its degree of superiority over the ordinary moving picture, is more than a picture. Fifty people in flesh and blood are employed at every performance to supply the music and the sounds that are employed at every performance to supply the music and the sounds that are not a word is spoken from the screen. During the two hours and a half of the flashing of the [illegible] on the screen, the [illegible] are [illegible] duces for the stage [illegible] with time-honored methods. Griffith's photo-entertainment is the greatest pictorial survey of Civil War history and the Ku-Klux days with a story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, especially of combatants, are particularly effective. After seeing "The Birth of a Nation," some optimists are inclined to predict that the [illegible] of the future than in sensationally effective. [illegible] Birth of a Nation," [illegible] crash enough to [illegible] torical novels of [illegible] written. Certainly, [illegible] drama can not [illegible] photoplay, in so far as [illegible] concerned.

Daily Times Herald Oct 9

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Much of the tenderly poetic appeal of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Dallas Opera House is due to the subtle acting of Miss Lillian Gish in the part of Elsie Stonemann, the Northern heroine. Miss Gish is a little creature of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy. Her eyes before the camera are singularly expressive, and her acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm.

Perhaps the most poetical scene of the entire drama is the one in which she and Henry Walthall, as her Southern lover, pour out their hearts to each other through the agency of the ancient symbol of Venus, goddess of romance, the dove. Not daring, at this point in their courtship, to kiss each other, they lavish their affections alternately on the nestling bird. Another scene in which Miss Gish displays her exquisite charm is the one in which she plays with a kitten, with such grace and caressing meaning that the audience invariably experiences a delightful thrill of sympathy.

Miss Gish is sharply contrasted in "The Birth of a Nation," with the beautiful brunette, Miss Miriam Cooper, who plays the Southern heroine. The little Northern heroine is of Northern birth, just as Miss Cooper is a Southerner. For a time, in her early girlhood, she and her sister, Dorothy, also famous in the moving picture world, lived in Missouri with their mother.

Miss Gish, when a mere child, won fame on the stage as a dancer, and became a member of the ballet in one of Sarah Bernhart's productions. She was introduced to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Mary Pickford. Mr. Griffith instantly recognized her talent, and rapidly promoted her in picture after picture, until finally he cast her in her present role of the Northern heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

Dallas M. News Oct 9, 10

Dallas Opera House.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which is being shown at the Dallas Opera House, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in a historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord" with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the County Commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of the old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick, but the producer thinks it was worth a lot cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

St. Louis Times Oct 9

"Birth of a Nation" Moves to Garrick.

The Garrick Theater, Chestnut at Sixth, will reopen tomorrow, commencing with a matinee, with D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which tonight completes its record-breaking run of six weeks at the Olympic Theater, during which time over 100,000 people have seen the spectacle. It is promised that St. Louis theater goers will find almost a new playhouse upon the reopening of the Garrick, which is now to be placed with the $2 theaters of the city. It may be said that "The Birth of a Nation" is making theatrical history here, as it is in the sensational runs that the great spectacle is having in the principal cities of the country. Viewing the record-breaking engagement at the Olympic, which is without precedent in local amusements, and the demand for its continuance at the Garrick, it is interesting to note the similar conditions that have required the extension of engagements elsewhere.

Deerfield Daily Telegraph Oct 9/15

DAVID W. GRIFFITH
producer of earth's mightiest spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which closes a successful engagement at the Elks' Opera House tonight.

Pittsburgh Gazette Times Oct 10

Some Figures About a Film Frenzy

TO CONTRAST the given patronage of "The Birth of a Nation" with that of any other histrionic presentation, past or present, would be unfair, for stage history fails to record the instance of any offering which ever reached, during its life, the gross patronage already played to by Mr. Griffith's masterwork, which is as yet in the infancy of its popularity.

The census of 1910 accords the United States a population of 92,038,717. The box office records of "The Birth of a Nation" show that the peice has already been seen by, in round numbers, 4,752,000 people. In other words, about one-eighteenth of the people in this land of the free have already viewed the stage representation. "The Birth of a Nation" was first shown to the public at the Liberty Theater, New York, March 3, of this year. After seven months of two capacity performances a day, seven days a week, the popularity of the piece at this theater is undiminished. In round numbers 600,000 people have seen the play in New York city. The Boston organization, which opened April 10, is still playing to crowded houses. It is estimated that about 500,000 New Englanders have attended the Hub engagement. The Chicago company, still playing, commenced its run June 5, and so far has rolled up a score of 320,000 visitors.

At Los Angeles the total attendance to date numbers 900,000 enthusiasts. The San Francisco business duplicates that of her sister city. Fourteen weeks in Milwaukee pleased 280,000 patrons; Portland, Ore., and Seattle each tied the Milwaukee patronage. A company at Brighton Beach this summer, in eight weeks, played to 168,000 people. The Atlantic City organization during the month of August registered a gross patronage of 100,000. The St. Louis company, now in its fifth week, has catered to 110,000 people, capacity attendance rules, and the length of the run is scheduled as indefinite.

The Philadelphia engagement, now four weeks of age, has been extended to the end of the year; 150,000 is the present total of the Quaker City following. A Southern company, organized to play the large cities of the Southland has, in two weeks, been viewed by 50,000 people. The success of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city is illustrative of its success everywhere. For six weeks the Nixon Theater has been crowded in a manner not thought possible by the management. So far as that goes we venture to say that Manager Kirk never even dreamed that his theater would ever earn with one attraction the amount of money already credited to the account of the reconstruction spectacle. So far nearly 114,000 people have seen this drama at the Nixon. Naturally a large percentage of this attendance has come from the surrounding towns. From present indications there is no reason why the local engagement could not be extended indefinitely the same as it has been in other large cities.

In the foregoing resume of the attendance of the various "Birth of a Nation" organizations no mention has been made of the fact that a company in Toronto, Canada, has been playing to immense receipts for many weeks, or that some of the far Western states are being covered by companies specially organized for this purpose.

OF COURSE it is now understood by most people that the backing and filling indulged in by the advertisers of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Nixon was the usual concession to theatrical publicity methods.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" BEGINS SECOND WEEK

PHOTOPLAY AT OPERA HOUSE TELLS WELL-CONNECTED STORY OF ROMANCE AND CHIVALRY.

From the comments of friends who have seen "The Birth of a Nation," which enters today upon its second week at the Dallas Opera House, the average person is apt to imagine that Griffith's stupendous spectacle of Civil War and reconstruction days is a series of detached scenes. The excitement runs high over the battle of Petersburg, the blood-stirring rides of the Ku-Klux Klansmen, the assassination of Lincoln, the session of the South Carolina Legislature, and Sherman's march to the sea.

But "The Birth of a Nation," as everybody who has seen it knows, tells a well connected story of romance and chivalry, which is seldom lost sight of for an instant amid the roar of battle or the clattering of horses' hoofs. At Petersburg the greatest thrill comes when Colonel Ben Cameron of the Confederate Army charges the Federal command of his old college friend, Captain Phil Stoneman. These two are the heroes of the double love story that runs through the drama, and each afterward marries the other's sister. The Stonemans are conspicuous in the Ford Theater audience at the assassination of Lincoln. One of the youthful Camerons falls a victim to war in Sherman's storming of Atlanta. The South Carolina Legislature passes a law for the intermarriage of blacks and whites, making possible two tragic climaxes in the story. The rides of the Klansmen are all the more exciting from the fact that their ultimate object is the rescue of persons in whom the audience is intensely interested.

Nowhere has Griffith lost sight of his story, and his spectacle, unlike many big productions in which the spectacular element predominates, is all the more dramatic in consequence.

This realistic picture of history in the making is of untold value to both old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle, the constant emotional throb of the romantic story thrills the hearts of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern histrionism in its new guise untrammeled by the limitations of the theater.

Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that Mr. Griffith has "put over" the "great American play" at last.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable feature of Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enterd into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, as truly interpretive as the music of Wagner and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great outof-doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

After the enthusiastic indorsement of Dallas playgoers the success of "The Birth of a Nation" is no longer doubtful in the Southwest. The North accepted long ago the Griffith spectacle as a true picture of the Southland, and the enormous success of the spectacle in such cities as Boston and Chicago wrote new chapters in American stage history. Norfolk was the first Southern city in which the production was exhibited and Dallas the second. The Southeast and the Southwest have been equally lavish in its praise.

Morning Telegraph Oct 10

187

"Birth of a Nation" Success.

The event of the week has been the production at D. W. Griffith's motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Scala Theatre. In describing it as "mighty" the advertisements have used an appropriate adjective. It is the mightiest film production that London has yet seen and it seems to be drawing the biggest attendances that have ever flocked to a London picture theatre. The Scala has a vast seating capacity, having been built originally for the staging of regular plays. It is by far the largest picture theatre in this city and at the same time the most beautiful as far as the interior decoration is concerned. Yet all its seats will need to be occupied for some time to come if the producers are to recoup the money they have spent on the advertisement of this picture alone. Full page and half page announcements in the papers and huge posters on the hoardings have caught the eye everywhere.

The Daily Telegraph has the following to say about the production:

"Altogether remarkable are the artistic beauty and the lifelike realism of the scenes in which this moving pictorial drama is unfolded. The pictures are quite wonderful in their way—superb in their lighting and in their suggestion of depth and atmosphere, fascinating in the naturalness with which they reproduce extensive landscapes, well-nigh gruesome in the nakedness with which they depict the elemental human passions at work. Probably the scenes that will appeal most strongly to the British public at the present time are those which reproduce the grim horrors of war—the shock of hostile forces in trench fighting and in the open field, the bursting of shells, the red glare of burning countrysides and so forth. These pictures, in the lurid impression they convey of the realities of war, are the most striking in the entire production. Whether the scenes dealing with the slavery question will prove quite so interesting is another

Louisville Journal, Knoxville, Tenn Oct 10

May Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at Staub's Theatre the first three days of this week.

Knoxville Journal Oct 11

At Staub's

After a night of steady toil on the part of a score of electricians and stage mechanics, Staub's theatre is in readiness for the first presentation tonight of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The finishing touches are being applied today and when the audience enters they will see little evidence of the long hours of preparation. Except for the removal of a large block of seats in the rear of the orchestra floor to provide space for the large asbestos booth carried by the company, the work was confined to the stage, where extensive changes were necessary for the installation of the two carloads of special equipment. This vast assortment of "props," requiring the services of twenty men during the performance, is used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects which have helped to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most talked about theatrical offering in the world.

LILLIAN GISH
Who Plays Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation."

While the mechanics are finishing their work today, the twenty musicians carried by the company, together with ten of Knoxville's best artists, will be rehearsing the long and very difficult score which is played without pause during the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle. This splendid symphonic organization of thirty pieces will be one of the finest that local people have ever heard.

Tonight's performance will begin at 8:15 and the sale of seats indicates that there will be a capacity audience. The spectacle will remain for three days with performances at the same hour Tuesday and Wednesday nights and matinees Tuesday and Wednesday at 2:30.

"The Yellow Ticket," which Manager A. H. Woods (who produced "Within the Law") will bring to Staub's theatre, Friday night, is a drama of life in St. Petersburg today, setting forth without prejudice the status of the Jew in the kingdom of the czar. "The Yellow Ticket" is in three acts, the first of which takes place in the Hotel d'Europe; the second occurs in the home of Baron Stephan Andrey, the chief of the "Okrana"—secret police of Russia. Act third occurs in the bureau of the "Okrana." Miss Frederica Going will appear in the role of the young Russian Jewish girl, Mayra Varenka, who is forced to ask for a Yellow Ticket in order to leave the pale of settlement to visit her father who is dying in a hospital.

See "The Yellow Ticket" and find out to what tragic purpose Mayra Varenka turned the refusal of the police to permit her to live decently. Every man and woman in Knoxville will want to see "The Yellow Ticket." Mr. A. H. Woods will produce "The Yellow Ticket" here with its all-star cast.—Adv.

Knoxville Sentinel Oct 11

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," which is David W. Griffith's pictorial presentation of "The Clansman," by Rev. Thomas Dixon, opens an engagement of five performances at Staub's theater tonight, which will continue through Wednesday night, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

The picture made its initial appearance in the south at Norfolk two weeks ago, and Knoxville therefore is one of the first of the southern cities to be visited by this splendid production. Commenting upon the picture, Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of Hope-Maury chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, of Norfolk, says in the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch:

"There were never such men as the Confederate soldiers! Never such women as those of the 60's! Never such a band of men as the Ku Klux Klan! Never such as the 'Black Mammy!' Her love for 'my chile,' as she termed the young ones of the family, was perfect love. She had the love, confidence and respect of every member of the home she was in.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is wonderful. There are things that are not agreeable, but to make history correct, this has to be with the pleasant. This is new to many, but the people of our beautiful Southland have gone through much which is seen in this play. Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a band of knights sent to make things work out as it was desired, and none but those men could have accomplished it. The black mammy, how faithful and loving she was. She feared no danger, and when her 'white people' suffered, she did.

"There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness. Tears and sunshine are well coupled. The hospital scene—so many have seen this and taken the part, that it will bring back to them memories of the past. That brave boy, mother and sweetheart! When it comes to the sweetheart, the North's heart felt for the South's heart, and we know what followed.

"War dreadful! It is presented to us in this picture with all its horrors. Wonderful production! 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation to many and history carried out."

Houston Chronicle Oct 10/15

"Birth of a Nation" Is Coming to Prince Week of October 18.

After mor extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a week's engagement October 18 at the Prince Theatre. The first-class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new work covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the president in Ford's Theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of part two, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered states. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

* * *

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3000 horses instead of the tiny "armies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of out-door nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art-form of drama-spectacle-with-music.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first-class scale of "two-dollar top" prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The facts that 1,500,000 people have already witnesed it, and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half a year in the simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition at various times, it should be added—"The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censor boards everywhere; upheld, when attacked, by decisions of courts of record; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the reconstruction story.

booked

Ev. Mail Oct 11

Western rights for the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" were sold Friday to the Elliot & Sherman Film Company, of Minneapolis, Minn. The price paid is understood to have been $250,000.

St. Louis Times Oct 11

Garrick Well Suited to "Birth of a Nation."

They've dusted out the cobwebs, turned the vacuum cleaner on the upholstery, laid out several thousand dollars in decorations and brought back to life a seemingly abandoned playhouse in St. Louis. The Garrick, after almost two years of lassitude, has bowed its way into the favor of the public again, this time as the realm of the movie of movies, D. W. Griffith's great picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

The management of this great photo drama, which has enjoyed an unprecedented run at the Olympic Theater, have made no mistake in removing their activities to the smaller and somewhat cozier little playhouse. For, if anything, the lessened perspective and the subjugation of the mammoth orchestra in the smaller auditorium lends an added charm to this marvelous action picture, based upon Dixon's "The Clansman."

That the Garrick is destined to its once great favor again is evidenced by the good attendance at the opening performance Sunday and the general consensus of opinion that "The Birth of a Nation" never had a more auspicious setting than is offered in the comfortable Shubert house. And there is none of its luster missing. The self-same powerful, even almost awe-inspiring orchestra is there, with the volume and tone that lends no small measure of perfection to the success of this war-time and reconstruction story. The location of the projection booth, directly at the rear of the orchestra floor, is a happy idea, and permits of the display of the production with fuller size than was possible in the Olympic, where a longer focus was necessitated.

Interest in "The Birth of a Nation" apparently shows little sign of abating. Its stay at the Chestnut street house is indefinite, but indications are it will enjoy a further run of many weeks. If it serves no more than to call back to favor this playhouse, it will have performed a memorable service for St. Louis.

Dallas Morning News Oct 11/15

Opera House.

The romance of war, as well as its spectacular horror, is depicted in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Dallas Opera House. Consciously or subconsciously, D. W. Griffith's mind ran in the same channels as Lord Byron's in working out his epic masterpiece. Even those to whose ears the name "Childe Harold" is only vaguely familiar, recall vividly the stirring lines in which the most red-blooded of all English poets describes the ball before Waterloo, that night of revelry which started so gayly and sweetly and ended so sadly and tragically.

In "The Birth of a Nation," Mr. Griffith has made use of the same thrilling contrast between the joy of life and the hollow emptiness of death that stirs in Lord Byron's immortal poem. On the eve of Bull Run, just before the soldiers are to leave for the front, a great ball is held in the little Carolina town where the scene of the story is laid. It is one of those brilliant, old-fashioned Southern functions, where the aristocracy of birth and breeding were as apparent as at the ball at Brussels. Mr. Griffith's staging of this gathering of "beauty and chivalry" is artistically perfect. The "shadow shapes" on the screen sway to the stately music of the audible orchestra, and the audience has no difficulty in imagining itself present at the ball, though somewhat in the character of "wall flowers," since participation in the festivities is impossible.

As in the case of the Brussels ball "a deep sound strikes like a rising knell." Tears spring to the soft eyes of that looked "love to eyes that spake again," for they can not mistake the distant roar of the cannon. There are hurried partings. "Chivalry" rides to the field of glory and of death, while beauty is left in the joy-deserted halls to weep.

Eve. Telegram Oct 10

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its thirty-third week at the Liberty Theatre. David W. Griffith's wonderful spectable already has beaten all records for long runs in recent years.

Pittsburgh Leader Oct 10

THE NIXON.

Despite the long run in Pittsburgh, "The Birth of a Nation" continues to draw crowded houses in the Nixon Theater. The story of the battlefields of the South, the creating of a new country from the conflict of brothers, and the welding of the shattered states into one land, is pictured vividly in the Griffith masterpiece.

In the scenario is shown the South of the ante-bellum days and the South in the midst of warfare. The North and the South are brought together in a charming romance of young lives. The daughter of the masterful leader of the House of Representatives is wooed by a Southern man, and a daughter of the South is courted by a Northern officer.

Realistic pictures show what war means to women and to homes. There is little that is picturesque in this part of the film spectacle, and war is pictured at its worst. The second part of the spectacle is based on "The Clansman," a novel by Rev. Thomas Dixon. The carpet-bag government and the indignities heaped on the South are revealed in startling scenes. The organization of the historic Ku-Klux Klan, to put an end to the insults that followed the occupation of the unscrupulous whites in the South, are shown with its methods of vengeance and its rituals.

The musical accompaniment to the pictures is one of the assets of the production.

White House Gives Recognition to Educational Value of Photo Drama

Even the White House has gone on record in recognizing the spirited influence and educational value of the photo drama, as was attested by the wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to which New Yorkers are giving such generous support and such cordial approval.

It is interesting to observe that the historic White House with its wealth of memories and of associations so dear to the real American should have been made the theatre for this remarkable and educational photoplay which has gripped public attention with such permanence and such vigor.

The lessons taught by this production of Mr. D. W. Griffith, based, as is well known, upon Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," have been reviewed so many times in the secular and religious press that it is hardly necessary to go into a complete description of the historical film drama at this time. Suffice it to say that one hundred years of American history are covered by Dixon's story, and thanks to the magic touch of the "movie" the making of this century of history can be seen from the comfortable vantage point of a cushioned theatre chair. There are many remarkable pictorial effects in this photo drama, among them faithful reproductions of Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta, Ga., and the night raiding of the Ku-Klux-Klan, but none is more vigorous or more lavish in detail than the picturization of the battle at Petersburg, which formed one of the closing chapters in the history of the Civil War.

Of the skill back of this artistic work in directing the movements of 12,000 men over twelve square miles of Civil War battle-ground columns could be written, likewise of the following so closely of the historical records in preparing for the battle pictures. For four months professors of history in several universities conducted extensive research to obtain the correct data and West Point engineers mapped out the battlefield in accordance with the official war records. The Ordnance Department of the United States Army furnished the rifles and artillery, the cannon used having seen service in the Civil War.

Under the supervision of army engineers a large force of men dug the trenches and prepared the breastworks. Roads were built for the artillery, mortar pits were provided for the heavier ordnance, and masked batteries, just as in the battle a half century ago, were placed behind the hills five miles distant from the center of the battlefield. To make the chance of injury to the actors as slight as possible special shells and projectiles were used which gave the pictorial effect of the missiles used in real war but were harmless.

Mr. Griffiths divided his army into sixteen battalions with a sub-director who reported direct to him at the head of each. A camera was detailed to each batallion, which had been carefully rehearsed and Griffith and his camera man overlooked all from the point of vantage afforded by the sixty-foot tower.

These details are worth chronicling, showing as they do the faithfulness and the enterprise of Mr. Griffith in his ambitions to show the millions vividly how the men under General Grant and General Lee fought at Petersburg, Va., fifty years ago.

The White House did well in giving space to the presentation of this wonderful chain of pictures which are doing such a useful and constructive educational work and with such fidelity.

Eve. Journal Dallas Oct 11

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

It is doubtful if any motion picture play ever will be given a more hearty reception than "The Birth of a Nation," which is being presented at the Dallas Opera House.

It has caused more enthusiasm than anything seen here. The management of the Opera House has received requests for tickets for residents of almost every town within 100 miles of Dallas, and a number of Dallas residents have declared their intention of seeing the play a second time. A number of Confederate Veterans have attended the play more than once. This week will end the engagement, and advance requests for seats indicate the second week will bring even larger crowds than attended during the first week. The theme of the picture is most wonderful, taken from actual happenings during the Civil War and during the eight years of reconstruction in the South. Then comes the added feature of the famous Ku-Klux Klan and then there are the two love stories which tend to soften the heart and take away the bitterness which a Southerner actually feels when he sees the wrongs which were so plainly depicted in the "Clansman," "Leopard Spots" and other writings of Thomas Dixon.

The photoplay is most wonderful. To miss seeing "The Birth of a Nation" means to miss one of the pleasures of a lifetime. It has a lasting impression. The picture can be seen each afternoon and night this week.

Dallas Daily Times Herald Oct 11

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

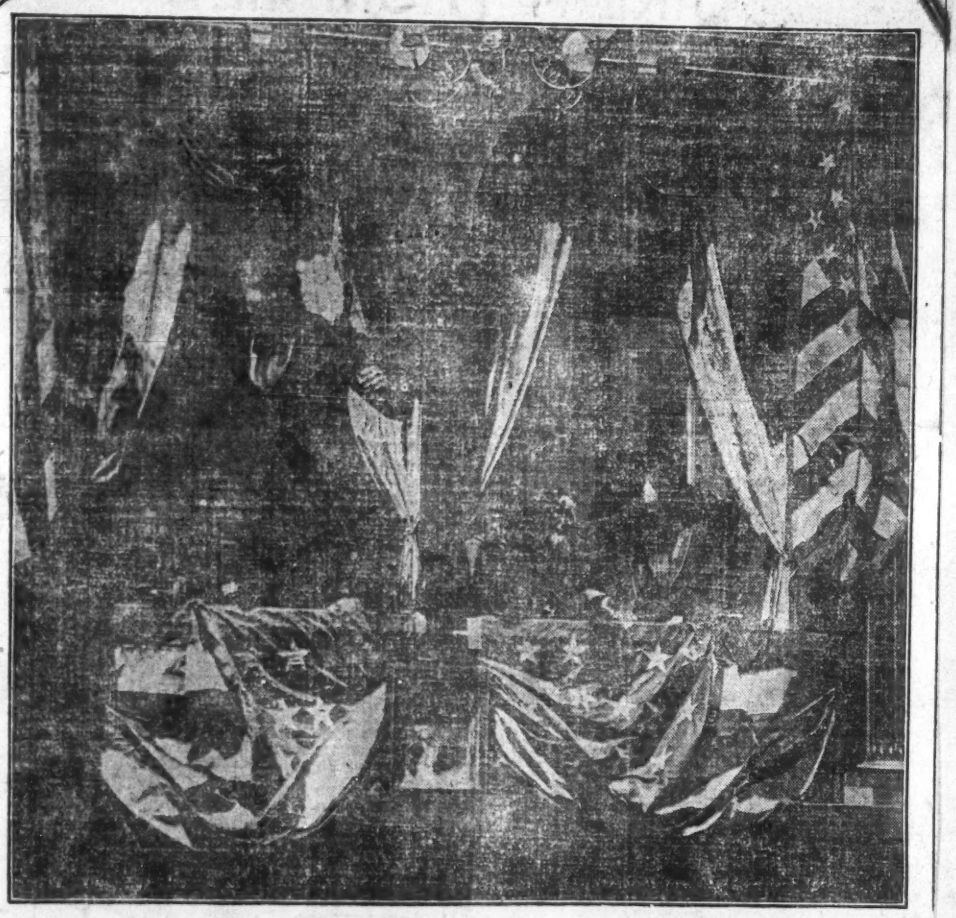
Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Dallas Opera House, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama, is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous notes of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the younger sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and aesthetic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her face is better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

Chattanooga News, Tenn. Oct 9/15

SCENE FROM "BIRTH OF A NATION"



One of the scenes in the great spectacle at the Bijou Thursday, Friday and Saturday shows the interior of Ford's theater, Washington, the night of April 14, 1865. John Wilkes Booth is seen in the act of leaping from the box after assassinating President Lincoln.

Still at the height of its success in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and other large centers, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Bijou theater for three days, beginning next Thursday night, with matinees Friday and Saturday. The company to appear here is the only one on tour, all the others being established in the cities mentioned for indefinite runs, and Chattanooga will enjoy the distinction of being one of the few outside of the largest cities to witness the spectacle up to this time. The seat sale opens Monday morning.

An idea of the importance of the engagement may be gained from the fact that there will be a symphony orchestra of thirty, twenty of whom are carried by the company, and that the services of fifty people are employed in each presentation. Two special cars are required to transport the company's equipment, and in order to make necessary alterations to the stage and auditorium of the Bijou the theater is being kept clear of other attractions for a week before the engagement.

Founded upon Thomas Dixon's successful novel and play, "The Clansman," the spectacle tells in music, motion pictures and wonderful stage realism, the story of the Reconstruction. D. W. Griffith used the great outdoors for his stage and employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in making the production, and the total cost was $500,000.

The first half of "The Birth of a Nation" exhibits the salient events of the Civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy at Ford's theater live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the south's "second uprising" this time against the regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of "The Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken south, are shown.

The great out of doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra. Somehow the old war-time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled, Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln, Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Gens. Grant and Lee, Mae Marsh as Flora Cameron; Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman, Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons, and Walter Seigmann as Lynch.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Times Oct 11

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

This is the seventh and last week of the big Griffith film spectacle at the Nixon Theater and the business continues to be phenomenal, breaking all Pittsburgh theatrical seasons. The surviving interest in the picture would seem to be sufficient to carry the engagement over several weeks yet, perhaps months. There has been no disorder or outspoken resentment of an exhibit that promised in the start to provoke much animosity. Announcement will be made later this week as to the future course of the present Pittsburgh engagement. In the meantime, the crowds continue to find in the vivid and dramatic photographic pictures of Reconstruction days a ceaseless source of wonder and interest, while it is conceded that no musical setting for a series of pictures has ever been conceived and executed than that fashioned by Joe Briel and played by Mr. Pesch's orchestra.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 11

NIXON.

Continuing its remarkable record of popularity, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its last week at the Nixon, yesterday drew large crowds. Their verdict was the same as those who before have seen the great film spectacle—it is the most wonderful piece of screen work ever produced. The thrilling war scenes and the no less thrilling klan raids, with the pretty love element that relieves the tenseness of the play, serve to hold interest from start to finish. In addition to the stupendous nature of the production, the finished art apparent in every scene assists in making "The Birth of a Nation," a masterpiece.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph Oct 11

Nixon—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," in its seventh and last week at the Nixon Theater, still continues to draw phenomenal crowds and the attendance this week promises to break all records for all Pittsburgh theatrical seasons. The drawing power of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, showing in graphic detail the period of reconstruction, seems sufficient to carry it over several weeks and perhaps longer. An announcement as to the future engagement of the picture in this city will be made later this week. In spite of the injunction proceedings instituted at the opening of the engagement [illegible] semblance of disorder or resentment has been apparent.

Houston Daily Post – Leyden, Oct 14/15

"Birth of a Nation" at the Prince

The Southern Ball on the Eve of Bull Run.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Prince theater

This work, partly from the nature of this new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Klu Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbag regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendship between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out of doors, where nature painted the backgrounds, and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Klu Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

The Confederate Charge at Petersburg.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historical connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; and Donald Crisp as Lincodn, Lee and Grant respectively. George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Neise and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of 50 people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture-machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theater projection and settings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

Pittsburgh Leader Oct 13

"The Birth of a Nation" Will Continue at Miles

To thousands of Pittsburghers the most important piece of local news is the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" will continue its phenomenal run in this city at the Miles Theater, commencing Monday next. Since it was officially stated that the big spectacle could not stay at the Nixon Theater after this week thousands of people have voiced their disappointment at the intended closing of the engagement. Such a demonstration of approval could not be ignored by the Griffith management even in the face of the fact that 150,000 people had, in the past six weeks, attended the performance at the Nixon.

Miriam Cooper,

As the Elder Cameron Sister in "The Birth of a Nation."

A quest was made for an available theater in which to continue the run, and the Miles was discovered. If, as it is apparent, everybody in Pittsburgh wants to see "The Birth of a Nation," they are going to have the opportunity at the attractive playhouse, corner of Seventh street and Penn avenue. In every respect the performances at the Miles will be the same as at the Nixon, including the splendid symphony orchestra of 30. The prices will remain the same as at the Nixon.

Bost. Transcript Oct 16

Fifteen hundred Methodist ministers saw "The Birth of a Nation" run at Christian Reisner's Grace M. E. Church Tuesday night, through the courtesy of D. W. Griffith and his executive staff.

Daily Times, Herald Oct 12

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Joseph Hamburg, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Dallas Opera House, was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the president reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation," showing the war president, is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln faithfully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of the states. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands, as if in prayer."

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously-uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the president. They then depart and he turns to a plain, middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been waiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

Women's Wear Oct 13

Liberty; 42d St., west of Broadway. Tel. Bryant 27. Matinee daily.—"The Birth of a Nation," the greatest motion picture ever shown in America. Produced by David W. Griffith, the world's greatest motion picture director. No one should miss it.

N.Y. World Oct 13

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IN CHURCH.

The American historical motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown last night in Grace M. E. Church, in One Hundred and Fourth Street. The Rev. C. F. Reisner arranged the performance and had as guests 1,500 Methodist ministers from cities of the State. The entire twelve reels were shown. The picture was exactly as it is given at the Liberty Theatre, with an orchestra to accompany it.

Journal of Commerce Oct 13

Through the courtesy of D. W. Griffith, a special presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" was given at Grace Church, in 104th street, last night. The Rev. C. F. Reisner had 1,500 ministers as his guest.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 13/15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TO CONTINUE RUN AT MILES.

To thousands of Pittsburgers today the most important piece of local news is the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" will continue its phenomenal run in this city at the Miles theater, commencing Monday next. Since it was officially stated that the big spectacle could not stay at the Nixon theater after this week, thousands of people have voiced their disappointment at the intended closing of the engagement. Such a demonstration of approval could not be ignored by the Griffith management, even in the face of the fact that 150,000 people had, in the past six weeks, attended the performances at the Nixon. A quest was made for an available theater in which to continue the run and the Miles was secured.

If, as it is apparent, everybody in Pittsburg wants to see "The Birth of a Nation," they are going to have the opportunity at the attractive playhouse, corner of Seventh st. and Penn ave. In every respect the performances at the Miles will be the same as at the Nixon, including the splendid symphony orchestra of 30. The prices will remain the same as at the Nixon, viz: Evenings and Saturday matinees, 25 cents to $1; all other matinees, 25 cents to $1. Seats for next week at the Miles will go on sale at that theater tomorrow.

Pittsburgh Gazette Times Oct 13

It is formally announced today that "The Birth of a Nation" will continue its phenomenal run in this city at the Miles Theater commencing Monday next. In every respect the performances at the Miles will be the same as at the Nixon, including the splendid symphony orchestra of 30. The prices will remain the same as at the Nixon. Seats for next week at the Miles will go on sale at that theater tomorrow. In view of the fact that this photo spectacle is definitely [illegible] for weeks to come and that [illegible] will not be seen in any other city within 100 miles of Pittsburgh, an out-of-town patronage may be expected that will roll up a new record attendance.

booked

N.Y. Times Oct 13

"The Birth of a Nation" in Church.

The moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown last night in the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church in 104th Street, before a vast audience of Methodist ministers from all over the State. The church performance was arranged by the Rev. Dr. C. F. Reisner, and was given through the courtesy of D. W. Griffith, who produced the picture. The picture was shown in every detail as at the Liberty Theatre, with orchestral accompaniment.

Eve. N.Y. World Oct 13/15

"NATION" FILM IN A CHURCH.

Through the courtesy of D. W. Griffith "The Birth of a Nation" was presented last night at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, in West One Hundred and Fourth Street. The exhibition was arranged by the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, who had 1,500 Methodist ministers as his guests.

Daily Post Oct 10/14

"Birth of a Nation" at the Prince

The Southern Ball on the Eve of Bull Run.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Prince theater

This work, partly from the nature of this new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Shermmn's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Klu Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbag regime—these great facts and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendship between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out of doors, where nature painted the backgrounds, and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Klu Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

The Confederate Charge at Petersburg.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historical connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisg as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively. George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of 50 people are carried on tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture-machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theater projection and settings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

Houston Chronicle Oct 10

Miss Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation," Rector's drama that will be seen at the Prince Theatre during week beginning October 18.

Houston Chronicle Oct 13

Wonderful Scenes in "Birth of a Nation"

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Prince Theatre next week, is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge servent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives.

Dallas Daily Times Herald Oct 14

What Manner of Man Is Griffith?

Is the Stage Dead? And if so, has he killed it?

His Moving Pictures are the most stupendous dramatic spectacles the brain of man has yet visioned and revealed

D. W. GRIFFITH

Who produced

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

The Eighth Wonder of the World. Acknowledged the Greatest Theatrical Production the world has ever known. Mr. Griffith is now producing exclusively for

TRIANGLE $2.00 MOVIES

To be shown in Dallas soon. Watch for theater and date. The New York Herald says DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN "THE LAMB," first release on THE TRIANGLE PROGRAM Surpasses 'The Birth of a Nation' in its thrills."

Pittsburgh Gazette Times Oct 16

Big Spectacle Will Move To the Miles Next Week

D. W. Griffith.

The moving next week, of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon Theater to the Miles Theater, affords today the unusual sight of two different theater box offices selling seats for the same attraction. At the Nixon a sale is in progress that indicates that this week's attendance will rival in size any one of the six record-breaking preceding ones.

Judging from the interest manifested by the public in the announcement that the historical romance would continue its run in this city the Miles box office today should equal in activity that of the Sixth avenue playhouse. It should be noted that Mr. Griffith never presents "The Birth of a Nation" at any but first-class theaters or at prices below what is customarily charged at such playhouses. In every city where this drama is being shown the prices range as they have at the Nixon and just as they will do at the Miles.

The infinite variety of the scenes in this spectacle are perhaps one of its chiefest charms. There are panoramic battle scenes, thrilling night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, historical episodes like the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of President Lincoln, the home-life of the South during and after the Civil War and a double love story of unusual appeal.

Evening Journal Dallas Oct 13

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

Only a few more days remain in which to see "The Birth of a Nation," the great historical drama, which is being shown at the Dallas Opera House. Matinees will be given each afternoon and night performances will be given through Saturday night.

It is a Southern play for Southern people, produced by D. W. Griffith at a cost of more than $500,000. It has been the talk of the country since first shown in the East three months ago and since the first appearance in Dallas last week it has stirred this city more than any other production ever offered here. According to the management of the opera house several hundred persons who saw the picture last week have either returned for a second visit or have signified their intention of seeing the great play again before the closing bill.

"The Birth of a Nation" is founded on Thomas Dixon's famous "Clansman" and "The Leopard Spots." It starts with the uprising of the people of South Carolina, who claim each State has a right to legislate and govern without outside interference by the United States Government. This forces President Lincoln to call for volunteers to enforce the Government demands and the Southland joins en masse to resist. Then the picture shows several big battles during the war and a spectacular night scene is shown of the battle of Atlanta. Later the assassination of President Lincoln is shown in minute detail, even an exact picture of Ford's Theater is shown. Then comes the reconstruction, the placing of negro soldiers in the South to enforce the laws of the Nation. This brings about a condition which is intolerable and the formation of the Ku Klux Klan is begun.

More than 18,000 characters take part in the play, and the grandeur of the production has never been equaled. No one should miss it.

The Assassination Scene!

This is the assassination scene from "The Birth of a Nation." The film started its second and concluding week at the opera house yesterday. These flnts are not written by a publicity man but by an observer of the film. It is without doubt the greatest film ever produced.

Griffith and — The Birth of a Nation

By Wil Rex

Eight years ago, a tall lanky actor strolled the streets of San Francisco, looking for work. Ill-clad, unkempt, badly in need of a barber's attention, he wandered scarce knowing where his next meal was to come from.

To-day this man is receiving a salary of $100,000 yearly, and is the premier motion-picture director in the world! His name is David W. Griffith. Those eight years are a story of genius, coupled with hard work. In 1907, after failing so dismally on the Coast, he drifted into New York, and finally obtained employment at the Biograph Company. He started as an extra at $5.00 a day, and three weeks later was advanced to director!

His methods of working were unique. For one thing, he introduced the "close-up" to the utter dismay of his employers. He was threatened with dismissal, but that great judge, "Public Opinion," stepped in and saved him. The picture was the greatest success of the day. Shortly after this, Mary Pickford came to Biograph. An elfin-like little girl, scarcely more than a child, with beautiful golden hair, she won the hearts of the Company. I know; I played with Biograph then. Griffith — "Larry" — as he was affectionately known to us, saw at once that he had a star, and worked patiently with her. But one thing he couldn't do, and that was make her cry! Remember, crying is a great asset for an actress — many scenes call for it. "Larry" finally devised a method; Owen Moore, now the husband of Mary, was engaged to her then, and at the same time played with Biograph. Griffith would turn to him, and with a wink, unseen by Mary, remark, "Moore, who ever told you you were an actor? Your work is terrible! You'd do better driving a truck — I'm ashamed of you!"

Miss Pickford, of course, would get angry, lose her temper, and start to cry. Nonchalantly the director would turn to his camera-man, and whisper, "All right — go ahead — camera!" This is just one insight of the way this master producer would get the desired effect.

Griffith is one of those strange combinations, a realist in action and a mystic in temperament, who sees clearly the beauty about him and can transfer his artistic impression to others, because of that side of him which is eminently practical. After being with Biograph for over six years, in which time he turned out over 300 pictures, he went with Mutual. They offered him more than twice the salary he had been receiving, and he left for their California Studios. Since being there, he has produced the most remarkable pictures yet seen. Among them may be mentioned "The Birth of a Nation," "The Escape," "Home Sweet Home," and "The Avenging Conscience."

Shortly less than a year ago, I had the pleasure of again meeting "Larry." He was filming "The F[illegible]n," and was doing it as calmly as though it were a picture. His head, covered with a huge, tat[illegible]red cap, a black cigar in his mouth, and a megaphone at his side, he was coaxing and joshing his actors up to dramatic heights. I did not believe themselves capable of. For this Griffith built three villages of the Civil War period. One was an aristocratic Southern village, correct in every detail. Another was the slave quarters. He was working on this set when I saw him. Negroes — real ones — of every class and condition were rehearsing. Mule carts were being driven back and forth. Old men, pickaninnies, slaves and slave-drivers, all were there. And Griffith's methods with these negroes are vastly different from those of the fly-by-night directors. He doesn't curse and scream at them. Instead, he brings a handful of coins from his pockets, and tosses a few at them.

"Scramble for 'em," he calls. "That er boy! Laugh, you fellows, cut up! Now there's another dime for each of you if you do it again; I might give you a quarter — hey, Walthall, give me some change — thanks! That er boy, and the megaphone Then he gazes three hundred feet away, and the megaphone is raised to his lips: "Hey, you, what's-your-name, out more back there, you! Hit it up, Billie! Hey, Jack and you, what's-your-name, start dancing. That's it!"

A few weeks later I had the pleasure of seeing his third village, this one a perfect reproduction of Atlanta during Sherman's march to the sea. It was night — 11 P.M. to be exact — and "Larry" had the entire village burnt down because it would look well in the picture! The expending of money is nothing to this wizard. Incidently, he gets $100,000 a year. The picture was the greatest success of the day. Shortly that this was absolutely the first time in the history of filmdom that a scene has been photographed at night. Several days later, I witnessed the Battle of Petersburg. Ten thousand soldiers were working in it, and the area covered by the camera was over three miles! Grifith gave most of his directions, via underground telephone, and they were carried out by numerous sub-directors.

Though he gets $100,000 a year, "Larry" takes advice and suggestions from anyone from office boy to star. Time and again, Mae Marsh, or Lillian Gish, or Bobby Harron were questioned concerning certain effects. One he even asked me questions at times. The most exacting during accounts for the fact that although he demands the hardest kind of work from his players and is most exacting during the making of a picture, the regard in which he is held by them amounts to almost worship. It is not unusual to hear his people claim that he is the greatest man this country has produced. And this is the way D. W. Griffith produced the world's greatest picture, "The Birth of a Nation."

Knoxville Journal Dallas Post

Spectacular Screen Success Is "The Birth Of A Nation"

BY LAURA THORNBURGH.

The awfulness of war and the wonders of modern photography were shown convincingly in the production of "The Birth of a Nation," seen Monday night at Staub's theater in the first of five local performances.

One had read that D. W. Griffith's film dramatization of Thomas Dixon's, "The Clansman," surpasses anything yet attempted by producers of the "silent drama," setting a new high standard and opening up possibilities hitherto undreamed. The couldn't present at "The Birth of a Nation," if there were such, unsoubtedly are convinced. The auditors who witnessed this picturization of some of the most momentous events in the history of this nation, produced with historical accuracy, saw stirring scenes pass with quick succession before their eyes. They were treated to thrill upon thrill, and moved to laughter and to tears, love of section and loyalty to country.

To put upon the screen the most crucial events of the Civil war, the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's opera house, the horrors perpetrated by reconstructionists in the name of freedom and the activities of the Ku Klux Klan, thousands strong, was an undertaking that might well have baffled any producer. But Mr. Griffith saw possibilities in such a film drama, yet untried, and the audiences who witness "The Birth of a Nation" behold effects of which the layman can scarcely conceive. The picture is a continuous series of surprises in subject and execution and accompaniments.

Mr. Griffith's "silent drama" is not silent. One hears the call of the bugle summoning to arms, the clatter of horses' hoofs, the roar of battle, the beating of drums, the strains of martial music. Numerous devices are utilized to produce very realistic effects and the result is a realism that startles the most phlegmatic of movie fans.

Throughout the entire performance the strains of the orchestra of thirty pieces, are heard, playing "Dixie," "Marching Through Georgia," "The Girl I Left Behind Me," "Auld Lang Syne," "My Country 'Tis of Thee" "Star Spangled Banner," and other equally appropriate and effective airs that aid in an interpretation of the picture. The work of the large orchestra is deserving of special mention, and a word should be said as to the splendid photographic effects obtained.

The pictorial activities of the Ku Klux Klan is one of the achievements in the performance, photographically, and one of the most thrilling. The scene at Ford's theater the night of the great national calamity, and the meeting of Grant and Lee are noteworthy for their historical and personal accuracy, being faithful even to minute detail.

The picture spans the entire war period. The opening scene shows the old south quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the great outbreak. Comes the first intimation of the national storm that is brewing. Then the war. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation follows and the gaunt specter of war shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. The great battle that determined the war is staged; then comes the peace of war—a sickly, miserable peace. The work of rebuilding the south commences under the guidance of Lincoln, then the assassination of the one man who could control the dissenting force. The dark days of negro supremacy in the south are pictured. Follows the rise of the Ku Klux Klan. A sweet, though sometimes sad, love strain surges through the land's miseres, and scenes relieving the high tension of the spirit of the drama are introduced.

With the coming of the Ku Klux the negro supremacy is put down through more bloodshed, following a guerilla warfare. The production shows the agony that the south endured that a nation might be born.

Winsome Mae Marsh, as Flora, the ill-fated youngest daughter of the South Carolina Cameron, handles the leading feminine role in a captivating style. Starry-eyed Lillian Gish is exceptionally good as Elsie Stoneman, the daughter of the leader of the radical party. Josephine Crowell acted the part of Mrs Cameron, a mother of many sorrows, and Miriam Cooper, as sweet and winsome Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the old south. The role of Colonel Ben Cameron was handled by Henry Walthall. Elmer Clifton was Phil Stoneman, George Seigmann was cast in the role of the ambitious negro, Lieutenant Governor Silas Lynch.

The work of all the actors is most satisfactory, particularly the principals who do some really splendid emotional acting.

Against the background of grim war and its ravages, stands forth the double love story, pure and fine and true. The intimate scenes of home life and the sorrow caused by the war, both to north and to south, are portrayed with equal vividness as was the faithfulness of the old family servants contrasted with the worthlessness and treachery of the renegade. The elements of human interest are never lacking.

Few plays that have been seen at Staub's have called forth more spontaneous applause than the thrilling episodes in "The Birth of the Nation," the last word in the film drama. It is announced for Knoxville again Tuesday evening and Wednesday matinee and night.

One goes away from the performance asking "What next?" for after this great achievement almost anything seems possible in moving pictures.

Houston Chronicle Oct 17

Story of South Is "Birth of a Nation"

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the states. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls," and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce, it is not a comedy, it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle—comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home—almost a boy den, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when, to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Fort Worth Journal Dallas Post

OPERA HOUSE.

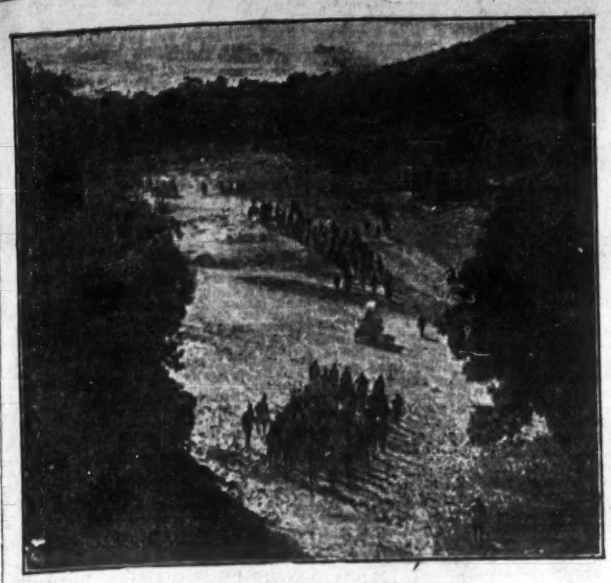
The slave mart, the demand of South Carolina that it be free and sovereign to rule itself independent, the Civil War following, then the assassination, "the fatal blow that robbed the South of its best friend," and finally the reconstruction and the new nation being born, are all shown with wonderful reality at the Dallas Opera House this week. All of these historical facts, including the famous rides of the Ku-Klux Klan, are shown in "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's world's greatest photo drama.

This is the last week the famous picture will be shown here, and ever since its introduction in the South it has been the most talked-of film ever brought to this section of the United States. Large crowds have seen each performance and large crowds are expected at the remaining performances each afternoon and night this week.

Most everyone who has seen the picture here has joined in the ranks of walking advertisers, the management of the Opera House says, and the attendance records are expected to be better than any other production offered at this theater.

Pittsburgh Post Oct 14

"BIRTH OF A NATION" photo spectacle transferred from Nixon to Miles Theater next week to meet popular demands for continuance of this foremost motion picture production.



The moving, next week, of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon to the Miles Theater affords today the unusual sight of two different box offices selling seats for the attraction. At the Nixon a sale is in progress that indicates that this week's attendance will rival in size any one of the six record-breaking ones preceding it. Judging from the interest manifested by the public in the announcement that the big historical romance would continue its run in this city, the Miles box office today is likely to equal in activity that of the Sixth avenue playhouse.

Spartanburg Herald Oct 13

For the first time upon any stage in South Carolina, D. W. Griffiths' mighty spectacle of the reconstruction, "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented at the Harris theatre, Spartanburg, for three days, beginning Thursday, October 21. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday, making five performances in all.

As most playgoers know, "The Birth of a Nation" is an elaborate picturization of "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's world-famous novel and play, but it is not to be compared with either. Both the book and the play have been dwarfed by Griffith, who used the great outdoors for his stage and employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses.

Spartanburg will enjoy a double distinction in the engagement of the spectacle. In the first place, it will be the first city in South Carolina—the state whose history was drawn upon by Mr. Dixon for his story—to see the big play, and, secondly, it will be the smallest city to date in which it has been presented. The company goes from here to Richmond for a week's engagement at the Academy of Music.

D. W. Griffith, whose genius made possible "The Birth of a Nation," the big spectacle which comes to the Harris theatre for three days, beginning Thursday, October 21.

The services of 50 people are employed in each presentation of the spectacle, so it is far more than a "picture show," as it is incorrectly characterized sometimes. During its engagement at the Harris there will be 30 men in the eorchestra and 20 more will be employed "back stage" working the realistic effects. The battle scenes, showing Petersburg at the crest of the invasion, Sherman's march to the sea, and other conflicts of the war between the states, make up the greatest lesson in history that the American stage has ever known. Other important scenes are the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theatre, Washington; Lee and Grant at Appomattox, and the burning of Atlanta.

Seats for the engagement will be placed on sale at the box office Saturday morning at 9 o'clock.—Advt.

Evening Mail. Oct 15

Riches and Fame First, Then She'll Get Married

Mae Marsh, Young, Beautiful, Beloved of Film Fandom, Says She'll Wait Till She's Thirty, Anyway, Before She Acquires a Husband.

By ZOE BECKLEY.

HOW do you like this idea for arranging your life: Get all your work done in your youth; grab fame firmly and hold onto it till you are middle-aged; then marry and rear a family, releasing fame from your grasp and finding joy in a quiet, secluded country home?

Not so bad, you say, for some bookish individual who isn't attractive anyhow and hasn't a chance at the sweets of life? But utterly preposterous for anybody the gods have favored with beauty and talents, vivacity and charm.

Very well. Now I give you three guesses as to who has laid out this life programme for herself. No, it's not a female professor of mathematics. Not a writer on "The Parallelism Between Morphology and Characterology." Not even a suffragette. But a very lovely young person by the name of Mae Marsh, star of the movies, idol of 2,000,000 screen fans—the girl who figures so thrillingly in "The Birth of a Nation," running for her life through the landscape and plunging off the cliff to escape her black pursuer!

Too Busy for Love Affairs.

Yes, sir! Little Mae Marsh, the blue-eyed, the golden-haired, the adored, the flattered, the pursued. The girl whom David Griffith calls the Bernhardt of the movies because she puts more electrical temperament into ten feet of film than lots of 'em do in ten thousand. The girl who has no "upstage" manner, no airs, no egotism, no fur-topped boots, no lip-rouge.

"Most people think love and marriage belong exclusively to youth," says she. "Now I know better. Youth is the time to work. You can't work when your mind is on love affairs.

"Of course, for some women marriage is a career. Then it's all right to go into it young and make a success of it just as a man makes a success of his business or an actor goes after fame in his profession.

"But for me—NOT! I've watched my sisters in their love affairs and marriages and, believe me, it fills their lives! There isn't room for any other career.

"Why isn't it better to put all your energy when you're young into work that will leave you free at thirty-five to take up something entirely different and use a whole new set of talents and interests? Won't I be a better wife and mother at 30 or 35 than I would be at 20?

Expects Wisdom Later.

"In order to be successful in any money-earning career you must have energy, youth, sparkle. You don't need wisdom especially. But you do need it to be a good wife and mother. Don't you see I'm right?"

Miss Marsh could make you see anything, she's that earnest and full of what Jimmie would call "punch."

It is to that quality she owes her quick rise to stardom from the humble position of "extra girl" on the coast. However little she had to do, she managed to put "pep" into it.

MISS MAE MARSH.

Her motto seems to have been "Whatever you do, do it with vim, no matter if you do have to lie down with the smelling salts under your nose and a wet towel on your head afterward."

That is also how she comes to act for the Triangle people in a 12-reeler called "The Mother and the Law," and a new play in five reels by Lloyd Ingraham which will be given at the Knickerbocker for eight or nine weeks.

"All my life I've realized that in order to put things over you've got to do them with spirit," goes on the little film lady. "I used to spank my dolls energetically. I used to do everything 'as hard as I could.' When I left school to be an 'extra girl' in Mr. Griffith's company five years ago, how my classmates sneered!

She'll Be Gay at Sixty.

"Now those very same girls, many of them married and the mothers of children, shower me with notes of admiration, inviting me to all sorts of social functions. But if there's anything on this earth I can't bear, it is society doings.

"Pink teas, dog shows, tango parties and receptions are my idea of nothing to do. Maybe when I'm sixty I'll devote myself to dress, dances and dinner parties. But for now, give me sensible togs, lots of work, and a typewriter to compose plays on—and I ask nothing more."

Is Mae Marsh an unusual sort of movie star?

Or am I dreaming?

Oct 14

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

Dallas, like all other cities where it has shown, has fully indorsed the two-dollar "Birth of a Nation," as manifested by the remarkable attendance at the opera house, where, in spite of sultry weather, all box office records, summer or winter, for several seasons are being broken. As in all other business transactions, the price is not considered when value is received. That "The Birth of a National" gives the spectator $2 worth of entertainment is evident from the comment in the lobby as the crowds pass out. The question naturally arises, "How much entertainment should one receive for $2." Take the average popular novel at $1.18. There are very few of these books from which the reader can get one-tenth the number of thrills and the amount of pleasure that he can draw from sitting through "The Birth of a Nation." For the Griffith spectacle not only tells as interesting a story, but it pictures it a thousand times more vividly, and throws in thousands of descriptive bits that would make the lightest novel dull, if told in words. Taking the price of the popular novel as a standard, the price of admission to "The Birth of a Nation" should be not less than $10 or $15. If, again, as philosophers say, the nourishment of the mind is of infintely more consequence than the nourishment of the body, how does "The Birth of a Nation," with its vivid historical portraiture of the period of the Civil War and reconstruction, compare with a sirloin steak at $1.25? Or, how about riding in a taxicab for the three hours' period of the unfolding of the Griffith spectacle?

Pittsburgh Press Oct 14

MILES.

The moving next week of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon theater to the Miles theater, affords today the unusual sight of two different theater box offices selling seats for the same attraction. At the Nixon a sale is in progress that indicates that this week's attendance will rival in size any one of the six record-breaking preceding ones. In every city where this drama is being shown the prices range from 25c to $2.00 just as they do at the Nixon and just as they will do at the Miles. It would be difficult to detemine what are the most pleasing points of this artistic achievement. The infinite variety of the scenes are perhaps one of its chiefest charms. There are panoramic battle scenes of grandeur, thrilling night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, historical episodes like the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of President Lincoln, the home-life of the South during and after the Civil war and a double love story of unusual appeal.

Spartanburg, South Carolina Herald, Oct 13

One of the wild dashes of the clansmen in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Harris theatre, three days beginning Thursday, October 21.

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," entered upon its eighth month last week at the Liberty theatre, New York. On Saturday night the 600th performance in Greater New York was registered, making the longest run since that of "Peg O' My Heart," which was seen for 604 consecutive performances. That record will be passed on Wednesday of next week.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Harris theatre on October 21, 22 and 23. Adv.

Much local interest is manifested in the announcement that "The Birth of a Nation" is to be shown in Spartanburg next week, for the first time in South Carolina. The coming of the big spectacle will give the City of Success real theatrical distinction because it deals with a throbbing chapter of state history and is being eagerly sought by managers in the larger cities.

"The Birth of a Nation" is sometimes referred to as the motion picture version of Thomas Dixon's story of the reconstruction, "The Clansman." While it is true that D. W. Griffith used the Dixon story as his scenario, he has far eclipsed "The Clansman," both as a story and as a play. He employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in staging the famous battle scenes of the spectacle and the leading artists of the American stage in reproducing the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in Ford's theatre, Washington; the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, and other historical events.

The company coming to the Harris carries an orchestra of twenty and it will be augmented by ten of the best local musicians. With an orchestra of thirty and a carload of special effects, local playgoers will witness the spectacle exactly as it is being shown at the Liberty theatre, New York, where it is now in its eighth month, as well as in Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston. The prices, too, will be the same as are prevailing in those cities, no increase having been made in the scale to cover the heavy cost of transportation, etc.

Seats for the five performances of "The Birth of a Nation" will go on sale Saturday morning and it is urged that those who are planning to see the spectacle—which probably includes every man, woman and child in the city—make their reservations as early as possible. The company is not booked for Greenville or in any tow within 100 miles of Spartanburg. —(Adv.)

Spartanburg Daily Herald Oct 13

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Prince.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Prince theater next week, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photo-play.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of statue and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand, and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

Dallas Daily News Oct 14

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Dallas Opera House, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "great commoner" who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded Confederate officer in the latent office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother, and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is the "golden aureole" type of blonde, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera, are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 15

THEATRICAL.

That the public welcomed the information that "The Birth of a Nation" would continue its run in this city by moving to the Miles Theater next week was gratifyingly demonstrated at the box office of that theater yesterday, when the seats for the engagement went on sale. Despite the announcement of the change, however, the sale of seats at the Nixon for today's and tomorrow's performances still goes on with apparently no abatement of interest. From all indications, this final week at the Nixon will be the banner one in attendance of the seven weeks' wonderful run.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 15

MILES SEAT SALE BIG FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION."

That the public welcomed the information that "The Birth of a Nation" would continue its run in this city by moving to the Miles theater next week, was gratifyingly demonstrated at the box office of that theater yesterday, when the seats for the engagement went on sale.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial representation of the most momentous years in the history of the United States. No historian has ever told so vividly and convincingly the story of the times that so tried men's souls—in fact no printed page could convey this important period of American history as does the Griffith masterpiece.

LILLIAN GISH,
At the Miles, Oct. 18.

Eve. Ledger, Phila. Oct 14

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SUCCESS IN LONDON

British Critics Like Griffith Masterpiece—Notes of the Film World

By the Photoplay Editor

"The Birth of a Nation" seems to have done well in London, where it was only recently shown. The London Daily Telegraph has the following to say about the production:

"Altogether remarkable are the artistic beauty and the lifelike realism of the scenes in which this moving pictorial drama is unfolded. The pictures are quite wonderful in their way—superb in their lighting and in their suggestion of depth and atmosphere, fascinating in the naturalness with which they reproduce extensive landscapes, well-nigh gruesome in the nakedness with which they depict the elemental human passions at work. Probably the scenes that will appeal most strongly to the British public at the present time are those which reproduce the grim horrors of war—the shouts of hostile forces in trench fighting and in the open field, the bursting of shells, the red glare of burning countrysides and so forth. These pictures, in the lurid impression they convey of the realities of war, are the most striking in the entire production. Whether the scenes dealing with the slavery question will prove quite so interesting is another matter."

The Daily Graphic says: "'The Birth of a Nation' is an emphatic and conspicuous credit to cinematography in general and to Western art and production in particular. . . . The illusion is so complete, the sense of personal participation in terrible events so keen that it is as if one were seeing the actual thing and hearing a great artist tell of it and its effects both at the same time. . . . A spectacle worthy of its theme, dignified and likely to inspire to high purposes."

The Daily News says: "It is certainly the most wonderful cinema show of its kind that has ever been presented in London."

HENRY B. WALTHALL
The central figure in "The Birth of a Nation," who is to impersonate Poe in a new Essanay feature, "The Raven."

Journal & Courier, Houston, Oct 15 - L.C.

"It Pays to Advertise."

Cohan & Harris are sponsors for another farce of the "Wallingford" type, which will be seen here at the Harris Theatre for one performance, on Tuesday night, October 19. "It Pays to Advertise" is its name, and Roi Cooper Megrue and Walter Hackett acknowledges its authorship. Wallingford, you remember, won out with carpet tacks. Rodney Martin, in this new descendant, delivers the goods through the medium of "Thirteen Soap, Unlucky for Dirt." Martin's contention is that advertising is good business, no matter what you happen to advertise. And with the help of a good press agent he proves it. Incidentally, young Martin bucks his father in the soap-boosting game and beats him, hands down.

"Mr. Megrue and Mr. Hackett are given the full credit for the writing of the piece on the program," says Louis De Foe, in the New York World, "and it is a well-known fact that programs never lie. But if George M. Cohan, who dressed up 'Wallingford' for the theatrical maker and also produced this new play, did not give it most of the tang both of dialogue and situation that will carry it to popularity, then one observer at least on Broadway's theatrical incidents has missed his guess. In fact, the Cohan stamp was as heavy to the piece as the 'Thirteen Soap' trademark itself."—(Adv.)

Daughters of Confederacy Indorse Griffith Spectacle.

When the company, which is to present "The Birth of a Nation" at the Harris theatre next Thursday, Friday and Saturday opened its tour at the Colonial theatre, Norfolk, ten days ago, Daughters of the Confederacy were conspicuous in the big audience. Leaders of other women's clubs, together with teachers, clergymen and men and women prominent in Norfolk's civic and social life united in praising the spectacle as a wonderful lesson in history, as well as a distinct art triumph, but the Daughters were most enthusiastic.

So strong, indeed, was the feeling of Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of the Hope-Maury chapter, U. D. C., that she wrote a letter the next day to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch commending the spectacle to all southerners. Her letter, in part, was as follows:

"'The Birth of a Nation' is wonderful! . . . Ku-Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a band of Knights sent to make things work out as it was desired and none but these men could have accomplished it. . . . There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for with resolutions adopted a short time previously the members of the John H. Reagan chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves that "in indorsing the splendid production of The Birth of a Nation, the John H. Reagan chapter, U. D. C. feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to northerners and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire union."

The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Isabella C. J. Davis, 1128 Logan St., Los Angeles, acting president of the John H. Reagan chapter.

It is expected that local Daughters and clubwomen generally will add their praises to what has already been registered when "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Harris theatre.

For the especial convenience of women and young people matinees will be given Thursday and Friday at 2 o'clock.—(Adv.)

Journal & Tribune, Portsmouth, Ohio Oct 14

[illegible] the presence of a packed house, matinee and night. "The Birth of a Nation" moving picture closed at Stamb's theater Wednesday. The picture will go down in the amusement annals of the city as the best drawing card and not only among the best but the best moving picture attraction ever exhibited in the city. It is recognized, wherever it has been shown, as the last word in the moving picture art.

The matinee crowd was composed mostly of women and children, and before the curtain arose the S. R. O. sign was hung out. Again at night all the seats were sold before the hour for the curtain to ries and all available standing room was taken.

The picture play improved as an attraction with each repetition and undoubtedly its run could have been profitably continued here for several more days at least.

At the performances Wednesday the same enthusiasm was manifested by the audience as the more stirring scenes developed in the play, climaxed when the clansmen were summoned for the final effort to disarm the negroes and restore white supremacy.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph Oct 18

"The Birth of a Nation" to Move Monday From Nixon to Miles

Photoplay Is to Be Succeeded by Frances Starr in the Convent Story "Marie-Odile."

SEATS SELLING FOR OPENING

The moving next week of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon Theater to the Miles Theater affords today the sight of two different theater box offices selling seats for the same attraction. At the Nixon a sale is in progress that indicates that this week's attendance will rival in size any one of the six preceding ones. The variety of the scenes in the photoplay are perhaps one of its chief features. There are panoramic battle scenes, night rides of the Ku Klux Klan, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of President Lincoln, the home life of the south during and after the Civil War and a double love story.

In order to facilitate the purchase of seats for Frances Starr's engagement at the Nixon next week, in "Marie-Odile," a special box office was this morning opened in the lobby of the Nixon in order that those wishing to purchase seats for Miss Starr's performances would not have to stand in the line of those desiring tickets for "The Birth of a Nation." The story of "Marie-Odile" treats of a young girl, a novice in a convent, and of her gradual awakening to a knowledge of life.

Pittsburgh Sun Oct 18

"The Birth of a Nation" Moves To the Miles Theater Next Week

MAE MARSH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The moving next week of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon Theater to the Miles Theater affords today the unusual sight of two different theater box offices selling seats for the same attraction. At the Nixon a sale is in progress that indicates that this week's attendance will rival in size any one of the six-record-breaking preceding ones. Judging from the intense interest manifested by the public in the announcement that the big historical romance would continue its run in this city, the Miles box office today should equal in activity that of the Sixth Avenue playhouse. It should be noted that Mr. Griffith never presented "The Birth of a Nation" at any but first-class theaters or at prices below what is customarily charged at such playhouses. In every city where this drama is being shown the prices range from 25 cents to $2, just as they do at the Nixon and just as they will do at the Miles.

It would be difficult to determine what are the most pleasing points of this artistic achievement. The infinite variety of the scenes are per[illegible] one of its chiefest charms. The [illegible] panoramic battle scenes of grand [illegible] thrilling night rides of the Ku-Klux [illegible] historical episodes like the surr[illegible] Lee to Grant, and the assassination [illegible] President Lincoln, the home-life of the South during and after the Civil war and a double love story of unusual appeal.

Dallas Morning News Oct 15

Opera House.

When a producer of theatrical entertainment finds that his work makes a strong appeal to women, he instantly draws a long, free breath, for he knows he has a financial success. Strange as it may seem to those who have only heard about "The Birth of a Nation" without seeing it, David W. Griffith's remarkable spectacle of the Civil War and reconstruction days makes just the appeal that spells millions. The superficial delver into the psychology of women reasons that scenes of war and such conflicts as the Ku Klux Klans engage in do not interest the feminine mind. This psychologist, of course, spent his college days in his garret poring over books and never went near a football field.

But the natural appeal of virility is not all there is to "The Birth of a Nation" to entice women away from their fancy work. Griffith has woven into his story of war and a conflict still sterner than war a gripping romance of the sort that animated the fine old stories of chivalry before the wicked Spaniard, Cervantes, laughed the valient knights and true into their graves. There never lived a woman who could resist the stirring stories of the knights of King Arthur's court and their fair ladies, and there does not exist today a woman who can resist the thrill of "The Birth of a Nation."

This accounts for the very noticeable fact that the matinees at the Dallas Opera House are as well attended as the night performances and that fully 70 per cent of the patrons of these matinees are women. Even at night women predominate in the audiences, the percentage being about 60 to 40.

By request, there will be a Sunday matinee at 2:15 o'clock, which is the last performance.

Spartanburg, S. C. Oct 15

"Birth of a Nation."

Seats will be placed on sale at the Harris theatre box office tomorrow morning for the three days' engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," beginning next Thursday night. Strong local interest is being shown in the coming of the big Griffith spectacle, for the reason that Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," from which it is taken, has long been popular with Spartanburg people, both as a play and as a novel. It is a story of love and strife, linked with a throbbing chapter of Carolina's history.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons, of South Carolina, and the Stonemans, of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where Nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this [illegible] ny times the amount of time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprizes had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.—(Adv.)

Syracuse Herald Nov 14

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IS HERCULEAN PRODUCTION

Stories of "The Clansman" Perpetuated in Marvelous Film Production of Detail

Production of the most remarkable theatrical creation that the world has ever seen has been due to D. W. Griffith.

Scenario for this history-embracing work was outlined by Griffith, and the entire production was made under his personal direction.

It took him eight months to complete the picture.

Its salient scenes were taken in five States and partly in Mexico.

The cost of the production was between $400,000 and $500,000.

As near as can be estimated, there were between 16,000 and 18,000 people utilized in the making of the entire picture.

It is estimated that not less than 200,000 feet of film was taken.

In condensing this to the direct narrative, Griffith has assembled 13,800 feet of story as the audience now sees it.

For his cavalry effects and artillery dashes, together with the stirring runs of the Ku-Klux Klan, nearly 3,000 horses were used.

These scenes were participated in by the crack riders of all the western territory that could be reached.

In the great battle scenes which are the tremendous features of the work, the eye scans a battlefield covering an area of twelve square miles.

With the selection of the theme finally agreed upon, came the primary work of research to establish the historical truth of the narrative.

Several professors of history from different universities worked three months compiling this data.

They examined no less than five thousand volumes of history and countless official records to get at the facts.

To show the difficulty encountered in this work it may be cited that there are eighteen distinct accounts of the assassination of President Lincoln.

Eye witnesses were sought to get at the facts and to determine their accuracy.

It was easier to establish the data regarding the great battle scenes.

The War Department archives at Washington furnished ample material for this work.

Actual measurements of the battlegrounds were made and surveyors and engineers of military experience laid out an exact reproduction of these scenes.

Once the suitable location for the enactment of this great mimic warfare was determined upon, the engineers went to work to establish a camp.

Wells were sunk to secure the needed water; camp was pitched as at the modern military rendezvous, a hospital corps was established and a fully equipped commissary department was organized to feed the participants in the big battles.

A fleet of over one hundred motor busses was utilized to transport the men to and from the camp to the studios, at which every detail of the battles had to be thoroughly rehearsed under Director Griffith's eye to get just the effect he sought.

While this was going on, engineers were throwing up the trenches, laying out roads for the artillery approaches and for the bringing forth of the reserve charges at the given signal; great batteries were masked behind the hills at least five miles distant from the foreground of the action and on the side lines mortar pits were built for the bomb-throwing ordnance which takes part so spectacularly in the actual scene of war's carnage.

Another corps of men was making the shells and explosives for these effects.

This work had to be carried out with great care to get the effect of bursting shells and these had to be so charged that there would be little danger of injury to the men in the battles.

Owing to the scenes being laid in the period of the Civil War it was difficult to get the same sort of rifles which were used in those conflicts and much time and care was needed in getting the real thing.

The artillery was loaned by the Ordnance Department of the U. S. Army, and every piece was in service at some time or other during the Civil War.

County Commissioners had to be seen and their consent obtained to occupy the roads and territory upon which the battles were fought.

This meant the blocking of traffic in that part of the country for several days at a time.

Every leader in the various battles was a trained motion picture actor, many of them well-known camera stars gathered from the forces of the nineteen different stock companies under Griffith's general direction.

The soldiers were men who had seen military service either in the regular army or in the State guards.

Griffith did not care to risk his work to the usual mobs that are utilized in big scenes for motion picture stories. These men were for actual field duty.

The soldiers were rehearsed in sixteen different groups under subdirectors, who had been trained by the general director himself. They were divided into battalions, each man taking orders from the battalion commander, who, in turn, looked to Griffith for the signal for the entry of his forces into this fight of the camera.

Griffith, with his chief photographer, G. W. Bitzer, took his station on a tower sixty feet high, and from that commanding position he had a view of the entire battlefield. Straight down from his viewpoint stretched the opposing trenches for a distance of nearly five miles.

At many points the rival trenches were less than forty yards apart.

This proximity was warranted by historical records of the fight at Petersburg.

Ten regiments of warriors were manœuvred without a hitch, except that on the first day the picture was a fizzle.

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, actual scenes of warfare at night were taken after dark.

The burning of Atlanta and the escape of the refugees from that city before Sherman's conquering advance are part of this.

This was one of the costliest features of the entire production.

These war effects and the stirring movements of the men were all laid out upon a gigantic scale by the general director.

The plans were completed at nightly conferences with his subordinates, where every detail was gone over thoroughly to be sure that nothing was missed.

The principals in the action were selected for their ability to appear like the famous generals and other personages of history.

After they were chosen, each had to "make up" and then go through a rigid rehearsal with Griffith.

Then they were photographed separately and in groups to test their appearance upon the film

It required infinite patience to get just the right players.

As an evidence of this, it is known that over twenty applicants were found wanting before the right man was selected to portray Lincoln.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" ATTRACTS BIG MATINEES

The daily matinees at the Forrest Theatre where the David W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is the sensationally successful attraction, vie with the evening performances in attendance.

The arrangement whereby it is possible to buy seats two weeks in advance has been very happy, inasmuch as persons who would otherwise find it difficult to obtain seats because of the crowds constantly at the box offices, are thereby enabled to secure reservations.

As the run continues, demand for seats grows instead of diminishes and this is taken as an indication of the widespread interest this epoch-making film has created.

Indeed there is promise that the run which "The Birth of a Nation" has had and is still having in New York and other cities will be duplicated here.

Important in the presentation of the picture is the musical score, which, played by a symphony orchestra, accentuates the dramatic effects so skillfully contrived by the producer, Griffith.

In addition there are "effects" behind the scenes with alert and competent men to imitate on specially constructed machines, the rumble of thunder, the roar of battle and the clatter of galloping horses.

Then, too, the play has been splendidly cast, with such eminent artists as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Spottiswoode Aiken and Miriam Cooper, to mention only a few, in leading roles.

As a matter of fact, however, there is not a person in the production who is not true to character and as there were required 18,000 persons to give verity to this historic and romantic play, the task which Griffith set himself and which he successfully completed seems the more astounding. Pictures such as "The Birth of a Nation" are inspirational and are truly educational.

That the public welcomed the information that "The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle would continue its run in this city by moving to the Miles Theater next week was demonstrated at the box office of this theater yesterday when the seats for the engagement went on sale. At the same time the sale of seats at the Nixon for today's and tomorrow's performances goes on with no abatement of interest.

That the public welcomed the information that "The Birth of a Nation" would continue its run in this city by moving to the Miles Theater next week was demonstrated at the box office of that theater yesterday when the seats for the engagement went on sale. Despite the announcement of the change, however, the sale of seats at the Nixon for today's and tomorrow's performances still goes on with apparently no abatement of interest. From all indications this final week at the Nixon will be the banner one in attendance of the seven weeks' wonderful run. "The Birth of a Nation" is a complete pictorial representation of the most momentous years in the history of the United States. No historian has ever told so vividly and convincingly the story of the times that so tried men's souls.

The five Florida beauty contest winners who are spending two weeks in New York at the expense of a Jacksonville newspaper were guests of D. W. Griffith to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre last night.

Five Florida Beauties.

Florida's five champion beauties who have been visiting New York for the past week were the guests last night of D. W. Griffith at "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre.

The occasion was especially significant to Mary Lee House, one of the quintette. Miss House is a great-great-granddaughter of General Robert E. Lee, whose figure is one of the dominant forces in the great battle scenes of the spectacle. Last evening Miss House had the first glimpse of her distinguished ancestor in action.

When he appeared on the screen she led the applause, in which she was joined vigorously by her companions.

THE five typical beauties of Florida who have been seeing New York this week at the expense of a Jacksonville newspaper were guests of D. W. Griffith at "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre last night.

The five typical beauties of Florida who have been seeing New York this week at the expense of a Jacksonville newspaper, were guests at "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty last night. Mary Lee House, one of the prettiest members of the quintette, is a great great granddaughter of General Robert E. Lee, whose figure is one of the dominant forces in the great battle scenes of the spectacle.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty where it turns into its ninth month with the performances on Sunday. The epic narrative has broken all records for the length of its run excepting the one held by Henry E. Dixey in "Adonis" which was made nearly twenty years ago.

In the audience that saw "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty last night was Miss Mary Lee House, a great-granddaughter of General Robert E. Lee, whose figure plays an important part in the battle scene of the picture.

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" continues at this theatre, where it turns into its ninth month with the performances on Sunday. Mr. Griffith's epic narrative has broken all records for the length of its run excepting the one held by Henry E. Dixey in "Adonis," which was made nearly thirty years ago. With the past week "The Birth of a Nation" registered 628 consecutive presentations of the great spectacle in New York. It will remain at the Liberty for an indefinite term and will positively not be seen at any other theatre in Manhattan during this engagement.

LIBERTY.—"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it turns into its ninth month with the performances on Sunday.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it turns into its ninth month with the performances on Sunday. Mr. Griffith's narrative has broken all records for the length of its run, excepting the one held by Henry E. Dixey in "Adonis," which was made nearly twenty years ago. With the past week "The Birth of a Nation" registered 628 consecutive presentations in New York. It will remain at the Liberty for an indefinite term and will positively not be seen at any other theatre in Manhattan during this engagement.

Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" begins on Monday afternoon its 33rd week at this theater, with business still capacity. "The Birth of a Nation" is the first attraction the stranger sees when he gets to town. It is the last word in motion pictures.

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

Monday next "The Birth of a Nation" will observe its eighth Pittsburgh week by continuing its local run at the Miles Theater. Never in the history of local theatricals has one attraction played so long in this city. The popularity of the piece in this city is representative of its success in every other large city where it has been presented. North, south, east, west and middle west are paying tribute to the human appeal of its story, its patriotic interest, its artistic excellence and the magnitude of its scale of production. Everyone who has seen it is saying something about it and that something is the very thing which excites the curiosity and interest of the person who hasn't seen it. No stage offering has been so widely discussed as "The Birth of a Nation," no one has met such national approval nor scored such a record of attendance. The long line of intending seat purchasers which has been a feature of the Miles entrance since the seats went on sale indicate that the run is going to be continued at this theater with the same enthusiasm that marked the Nixon engagement. In every way—prices, production, effects and the symphony orchestra of 30—the presentation at the Miles will be identical with that seen at the Nixon Theater.

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

LIBERTY THEATRE — NOW PLAYING TWICE DAILY, INC. SUNDAYS
42nd St. West of B'way, Night & Sat. Mat. 25c to $2.00, Other Mats. 25c to $1.50

D. W. GRIFFITH'S GIGANTIC SPECTACLE

18,000 People — THE BIRTH OF A NATION — 3,000 Horses

Cost $500,000 — Took 8 Months To Produce

Has been seen by thousands of Educators and endorsed as the Greatest Illustration of a Stirring Period of Our National Growth.

A Gripping Epic which Reveals History in the making by means of a new form of Artist Expression.

Many Teachers have written Mr. Griffin he has made their work easier.

THE MILES.

Monday next "The Birth of a Nation" will observe its eighth Pittsburgh week by continuing its phenomenal local run at the Miles Theater. Tonight's performance at the Nixon will fittingly close the drama's engagement at this theater by capping its largest week's receipts. Never in the history of local theatricals has one attraction played so long in this city, or earned the amount of money credited to the Griffith spectacle. And in addition "The Birth of a Nation" holds the Nixon weekly record for gross earnings. The popularity of the piece in this city is representative of its success in every other large city where it has been presented. In no one of the 16 other centers where it is now being presented is the end of its vogue in sight any more than it is here. North, South, East, West and Middle West are paying tribute to the human appeal of its story, its patriotic interest, its artistic excellence and the magnitude of its scale of production. Every one who has seen it is saying something which excites the curiosity and interest of the person who hasn't seen it. No stage offering has been so widely discussed as "The Birth of a Nation," no one has met such national approval nor scored such a record of attendance. The long line of intending seat purchasers which has been a feature of the Miles entrance since the seats went on sale indicate that the run is going to be continued at this theater with the same enthusiasm that marked the Nixon engagement. In every way the production at the Miles will be the same as at the Nixon.

Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation" Miles

The daily matinees at the Forrest, where the David W. Griffith photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is the attraction, vie with the evening performance in attendance. Important in the presentation of the picture is the musical score, which, played by a large orchestra, accentuates the dramatic effects contrived by the producer. In addition there are "effects" behind the screen with alert and competent men to imitate on specially constructed machines the rumble of thunder, the roar of battle, and the clatter of galloping horses. Then, too, the play has been splendidly cast with such artists as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Spottswoode Aiken and Miriam Cooper in leading roles. As there were required 18,000 persons to give verity to this historic and romantic play, the task which Mr. Griffith set himself, and which he successfully completed, seems the more astounding.

MAE MARSH—(MRS. FORREST)—B

HOW carefully D. W. Griffith planned his "The Birth of a Nation" is revealed in other ways than by the spectacular battle scenes and the stirring ride of the Ku Klux Klan. The care with which the individual characters are depicted is equally strong testimony to Mr. Griffith's apparent omniscience.

The Hon. Austin Stoneman, to take one character as an example, is a thoroughly consistent, well drawn sample of intelligent and purposeful character acting.

He first comes into prominence and his true character is indicated in an interview with Lincoln, when, as leader of the House, Stoneman objects to the President's policy of pacification of the rebel States and threatens to throw influence against such a policy.

Stoneman is next seen receiving the news of the assassination of Lincoln, and the actor's face expresses the sorrow that Stoneman, in common with the nation, feels at the tragedy—an expression that quickly changes to one of elation at the thought of the advance in his political prestige the death of the President means.

The next view of the Abolitionist shows him in the height of his power, in charge of reconstruction measures, having succeeded in making a mulatto Governor of South Carolina. But the natural result of Stoneman's policy comes to him in a way that is tensely dramatic. The mulatto Governor has fallen in love with Stoneman's daughter. She repulses the suitor, and he goes to her father. Is not sauce for the goose sauce for the gander? Stoneman has been preaching the equality of the races, but when the test comes, when his own daughter's happiness is involved, he sees things in a different light. The mulatto's true character is revealed to the father through violence of the man, and at the end Stoneman figures as a shattered man with ideals dissipated in stern realities.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the strongest possible refutation of the charge that motion picture technique is a thing of happy accident rather than well-schemed design.

Journal Dallas Oct 15

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

A well-known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition: "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Dallas Opera House. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage. Then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and vellings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many Nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Utopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment, in the "Birth of a Nation," of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wan, skeleton-like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and Nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean, emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled-up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs, arms and (as it were) shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

By request there will be a performance Sunday afternoon.

Dallas Times Herald Oct 15

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Owing to the fact that the period of "The Birth of a Nation" was an age of hoops and ruffles, D. W. Griffith, producer of the gigantic spectacle, now being presented at the Dallas Opera House, was compelled to buy 25,000 yards of cloth to go into the dresses of his female characters. A goodly percentage of this is used to clothe the women and girls who dance in the great ball just after Bull Run, on the eve of the departure of Confederate soldiers for the front, where it is realized that a long and bloody struggle has commenced. Every dress is accurate to the period, copied exactly from contemporary costumes preserved in old wardrobes and museums, and many of them, which had to be made of special texture to give a shimmery, silky effect on the screens, ran into a cost that the average woman would consider almost fabulous. It is after considering a thousand-and-one such items of expense as that that the careful spectator of "The Birth of a Nation" not only regards the claim that the photodrama was produced at a cost of no less than $500,000 as accurate, but wonders how Griffith economized so closely as to get clear with no greater expense.

By request, there will be a matine Sunday afternoon, beginning at 2:15.

Spartanburg S.C. Oct 15

Judging from the great great number of inquiries that have been received at the Harris theatre box office, there will be a rush for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" when the sale is opened tomorrow morning. The big Griffith spectacle comes to the Harris for three days beginning next Thursday, and as it has not heretofore been shown in South Carolina, it is expected to attract capacity business. The story of the spectacle is taken from "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional plays, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern states; the ball on the even of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Lillian Gish, a starry-eyed beauty who is seen as Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Harris theatre three days, beginning Thursday, October 21.

Spartanburg Herald Oct 16

When Spartanburg playgoers visit the Harris theatre box office this morning to purchase seats for "The Birth of a Nation," they will learn that a scale of prices new to this city has been adopted for the engagement of the spectacle. Ordinarily, the most expensive seats are those in the front rows of the orchestra, but not so with this attraction. Being a spectacle, the best seats are in t he middle of the orchestra floor and they are priced accordingly. The cheaper seats on the orchestra floor are those in the extreme front and the extreme rear. This price arrangement applies to the matinees Friday and Saturday as well, although the matinee scale is considerably "lighter" than the night scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is the mightiest of all spectacles, 18,000 people and 3,000 horses having been employed by D. W. Griffith in the making of the 5,000 scenes.

Mariam Cooper, who plays Margaret Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Harris theatre three days, beginning Thursday, October 31.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war; again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garmen. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisg as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann as t e mulatto lieutenant-governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus; Raul Walsh as John Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Neise and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

Houston Daily Post Oct 16

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Prince.

An advance notice issued by the management says:

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, opens an engagement of a week at the Prince theater Monday night. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the civil war, which came to a close at Appomattox just 50 years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theater live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the unionist captain, Phile Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout th story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South, are shown. The great out of doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5000 scenes in the spectacle and, it is estimated, no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old war time tunes, thus thematically treated, make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistibly real. Among the leading players in what was probably the largest theatric cast ever assembled may be mentioned Joseph Honabery as President Lincoln, Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye as Generals Grant and Lee, Mae March as Flora Cameron, Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton and Miriam Cooper as the quartet of lovers, Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman, Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as the elder Camerons and Walter Seigmann as Lynch. Matinees will be given daily throughout the engagement.

Dallas Times Oct 16

DALLAS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Dallas opera house, the scene in which Gen. Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from Gen. Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thoughts. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not a preliminary to a formal handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray, who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Court House is closed.

An extra performance will be given Sunday at 2:15 p. m.

Ev. Ledger Oct 10-15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SUCCESS IN LONDON

British Critics Like Griffith Masterpiece—Notes of the Film World

By the Photoplay Editor

"The Birth of a Nation" seems to have done well in London, where it was only recently shown. The London Daily Telegraph has the following to say about the production:

"Altogether remarkable are the artistic beauty and the lifelike realism of the scenes in which this moving pictorial drama is unfolded. The pictures are quite wonderful in their way—superb in their lighting and in their suggestion of depth and atmosphere, fascinating in the naturalness with which they reproduce extensive landscapes, well-nigh gruesome in the nakedness with which they depict the elemental human passions at work. Probably the scenes that will appeal most strongly to the British public at the present time are those which reproduce the grim horrors of war—the shouts of hostile forces in trench fighting and in the open field, the bursting of shells, the red glare of burning countrysides and so forth. These pictures, in the lurid impression they convey of the realities of war, are the most striking in the entire production. Whether the scenes dealing with the slavery question will prove quite so interesting is another matter."

HENRY B. WALTHALL

The central figure in "The Birth of a Nation," who is to impersonate Poe in a new Essanay feature, "The Raven."

Dallas Times Oct 16

Opera House.

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Dallas Opera House, is of necessity sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not a comedy; it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle. Comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy, nevertheless.

There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff.

Again, there is the scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing, "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw" and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the somber shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life.

Journal, Spartanburg, S.C. Oct 16

Mae March, Who Is "Beautiful Even In Tears" as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Harris Theatre, Three Days Beginning Thursday, October 21.

When the sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Harris theatre box office this morning there was a rush such as the theatre attaches have not experienced in a long, long time. It was a reminder of those palmy days of the drama when the "line" was seldom missing from the box office and the "S. R. O." sign was never allowed to accumulate dust.

But it is not surprising that strong local interest is being shown in the coming of the big Griffith spectacle. It has broken all records in New York, Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia and Spartanburg playgoers have a better reason for enthusing over it than have the residents of those great cities. It is a great combination of music, motion pitcures and stage effects evolved from "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, and where is the Carolinian who doesn't know that the Dixon story is one of the truest chapter of state history ever written? Spartanburg by the way, will be the first city in South Carolina to witness the sepctacle as it has not yet been seen in Charleston, Charlotte, Columbia and the larger cities. The engagement at the Harris will open with Thursday night's performance and will continue Friday and Saturday. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday, making five performances in all.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular states, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixons "The Leopardõs Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great out-of-doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music, and mechanical effects in a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation last two hours and 45 minutes, it epitonizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete socalled "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Mirian Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Jeseph Henabery, Raoul walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the bi gspectacle.

Dallas Dispatch Oct 16

'Birth of Nation' At Opera House For Last Time!

"The Birth of a Nation," greatest movie ever, will be shown for the last times this afternoon and tomorrow matinee at the Dallas opera house. Gov. Ferguson saw the production yesterday.

Spartanburg S.C. Oct 16

MOVIES SUPREME IN POETRY, ART AND ACTING

SAYS DAVID W. GRIFFITH

nation. By the way, twenty-four Lincoln actors were rehearsed before the right Lincoln was found! The Blue and the Gray, and the Southern white sentry all have been drilled under their respective leaders. And then film making begins.

"At an early stage of the work—after the rough outlines have been filled in—the scenario is thrown away. The building and rebuilding of the story, the piecing of last-field flung over many miles of mountain and valley, show the opposing intrenchments and the artillery fire, display the riflemen forming for advance, the charges over broken ground, the bayonet rush right up to the trenches, the deadly handgrips of individual enemies in physical struggle and the single acts of heroism or chivalry at close range—and all on a screen a few feet wide and a few feet high! This will give some slight

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards, and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER the Most Stupendous, Dramatic and Spectacular Enterprise that the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Realized!

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

Journal, Spartanburg, S.C. Oct 17

* * * *

HE SEEMED TO HAVE SOMETHING MORE ON HIS MIND, and he tarried for another period. "Do you know," he said, "that these fellows who put on 'The Birth of a Nation' are fast becoming millionaires.

Well, I have means of knowing and I have heard that profits now are sixty thousand dollars a week. Only about ten cities have been visited and the greater part of the United States is still open for exploitation. There isn't a place in which the picture has been shown that success has not come in overwhelming measure. You wouldn't have believed this if you hadn't seen the picture. Once you have seen it, you can understand. It is simply filled with exciting and thrilling episodes, touching upon the dramatic moments of our Nation's most critical period and is adorned with romance that is held together by a strong story. It gets you and you advise your friends by all means to see the film. You discount that race prejudice idea which some people have read into the story simply because it is founded on 'The Clansman.' It is the spectacular nature of the production, its thrills and its technical excellence, augmented by mechanical effects and musical accompaniment that make you an advocate of Griffith's masterpiece.

An argument over an incident in the World's Series in the next room so ved the Old Stager that he stopped short, rose and bade me good-night.

Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

MOST remarkable of recent changes in the [illegible] amuse every night and create ephemeral enterprises—all to make an American holiday—beside the magnitude of which much historical pioneering and concoction of actual events seem but child's play.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement kings—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Wark Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision animating Griffith undoubtedly comes from some obscure Welsh bardic strain.

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The [illegible] Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the plot. As this [illegible] there was a previous stage play. If we are wise, we forget that as much as we can, for the motion picture is a novelising or story-telling form, not strictly a stage form; it is epic rather than dramatic; much of the work is of the great indoors. We have a period of history to cover, the scenes of a wide territory to revivify. Therefore, we must prepare the locale as well as the actors—the tasks of the landscape artist and, in some sense, of the civil engineer are before us. For a month the actors rehearse without the camera.

"STAGE CAREFULLY SET FOR A MOVIE DRAMA"

"And now South Carolina in Reconstruction days is measurably before our eyes. Elsewhere the battlegrounds of the Civil War are springing into being, helped by expert advice of old vets and modern West Pointers. The costumes, settings and [illegible] laboriously prepared for the ensemble historical scenes like those of the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Lincoln cabinet meeting. Then comes the task of the camera. Our thousands and thousands of cavalrymen—in the present production we used 18,000 people altogether—own the entire countryside. Cameras are everywhere—the most effective ones for pictorial purposes being mounted on autos that travel ahead of the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, consecutive picture taking. Parallel with the onrush of the cavalry run one, two, three other Reconstruction stories. Each onrush is a bit contrasted with another short scene of entirely different character. The timing must be exact, yet the cyclonic rapidity must never seem to be relaxed.

"It will give you an idea of necessary enormous complexity when I tell you that there are no less than 5,000 separate and individual scenes in the completed work. The [illegible] features are as cunning a mosaic of the infinitely little as the cavalry charges or as the scenes of domestic life in the Carolinas. We exhibit the panorama of a battle-mate bits and the discarding of the useless go right on while we are living the history, so to speak, from day to day. Nearly twenty-eight miles of pictures—140,000 feet of film—are taken. And how much of these are used? At the finale we discover that we have thrown away eight-tenths of our product—we have remaining 28,000 feet, or, say, five miles of consecutive story. But that is twice too long. We condense, condense, condense. At the end of two months more of hard labor we have edited 'The Birth of a Nation' to 12,000 or 13,000 feet—two and a half miles—or, in theatre wise, two hours and forty-five minutes' stage entertainment."

"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg.

"How about the cavalry and war effects?"

"We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked up everywhere.

"Our thousands and thousands of cavalrymen—in the present production we used 18,000 people altogether—own the entire countryside. Cameras are everywhere—the most effective ones for pictorial purposes being mounted on autos that travel ahead of the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, consecutive picture taking. Parallel with the onrush of the cavalry run one, two, three other Reconstruction stories. Each onrush is a bit contrasted with another short scene of entirely different character. The timing must be exact, yet the cyclonic rapidity must never seem to be relaxed.

"It will give you an idea of necessary enormous complexity when I tell you that there are no less than 5,000 separate and individual scenes in the completed work. The [illegible] features are as cunning a mosaic of the infinitely little as the cavalry charges or as the scenes of domestic life in the Carolinas. We exhibit the panorama of a battle-idea of the tremendous technical difficulties involved."

"Will the motion picture ever develop into a true work of art?" was the next question, somewhat rudely asked of this wizard of the nature theatre.

David Griffith laughed—not a laugh of offended vanity or condescending superiority, but the easy, natural mirth of a master who expects to encounter many skeptics and doubting Thomases in the day's work.

"Why," he said, "the makers of pictures have already surpassed in many ways the art of the speaking stage. The old school are coming to us, are they not? And appropriating such of our devices as the 'cut-back' and the parallel action. And I could name one actress with a tremendous New York hit of two years to her credit who built up her justly famous part from close study of the methods of our Los Angeles picture actresses.

"Already it is admitted that as to poetic beauty the motion picture entertainment is far ahead of the stage play. Poetry is apparently a lost art in the regular theatre, but it is the very life and essence of the motion playhouse. We have staged most of Browning's stories, many of Tennyson's, innumerable Biblical and classical fables. Not only beauty but thought is our goal, for the silent drama is peculiarly the birthplace of ideas. No one can tell what the motion picture will become, for we are at present only at the infancy of it."

"Pardon me," I persisted, "but will the silent drama ever put forth immortal art products? Will there ever be a Shakespeare or a Homer of the movies?"

"No," mused David Griffith reflectively, "because the motion picture is acting, and the fashion of acting changes with each age. The stage work of Forrest, Macready, Kean or Kemble, for example, if it could be accurately reproduced, would appear crude, stiff and awkward to us of today. The acting response. "I know there is much talk of picture types, blonde types and all that, but over and above technical requirements, so called, is the demand for people of great personalities, of sincere, true emotion and the untheatrical expression thereof.

"Somehow, most of the stars who come to us from the regular stage lack the sincerity, at least in their earlier efforts before the camera. Mrs. Fiske, in 'Tess,' was a notable exception. I know she drew from me the tribute of tears. The Comedie Francaise actors, notably Coquelin and Le Bargy, who appeared in some of the French pictures, were wonderful in the breadth and strength of their exquisite character portrayals. On the other hand, some of the most widely advertised and most admired spectacular pictures from abroad suffered from the defect of mediocre acting. Of what use are magnificent scenes with only puppet-like actors? Here in America we are training a school of silent actors who bid fair to surpass the finest efforts of the Old World schools.

"In the old days," continued Mr. Griffith, "we followed the modes of the stage somewhat slavishly. Few of us sensed we were dealing with a new art form. The primitive picture play was laid out in facts, strict unity of time and place being always observed, the same sized figures shown in an unvarying time sequence of a single action.

"I remember what a sensation I caused in the old Biograph studios, in Fourteenth Street, when I invented the 'close-up' figures.

"'That will never do at all,' objected the proprietor. 'The actors look as if they were swimming—you can't have them float on, without legs or bodies!' But I persisted, and had my way, though it was alleged that the audiences always knocked disapproval with their feet whenever the 'close-ups' were exhibited. Today the 'close-up' is essential to every motion picture, for the near view of the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the 'story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point is that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvelous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young, may be entirely revolutionized by its strangely new processes."

Dec 17

FORREST—The daily matinees of the David W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which continues here, with the evening performances by it as popular as ever, attendance. The arrangement whereby it is possible to buy seats two weeks in advance has been very happy in its influence, as persons who would otherwise find it difficult to obtain seats at the box office are thereby enabled to secure reservations. As the run continues the demand for seats grows rather than diminishes and this is taken as an indication of the widespread interest this epoch-making film has created. Indeed, there is promise that the engagement which is still in its infancy will be duplicated here in Washington, as it has been in New York and other cities. Important in the presentation of the picture is the musical score, which, played by a symphony orchestra, accentuates the dramatic effects so skillfully contrived by the producer, Griffith. In addition there are the "effects" behind the scenes which add specially to the realism of battle and storm, the clatter and galloping horses. The play has been splendidly cast, with Henry B. Walthall, Miss Marie Lillian Gish, Josephine Scottswood Aiken and Miriam Cooper, to mention only a few of the leading roles. There is not a false note in the production, which is not required to give it character, and to give it the proper setting. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer. In this emergency the county authorities were sought. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within the posted notice the Commissioners all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. Griffith handled this matter with [illegible] permission—by removing all telegraph and telephone poles. Thus the roads would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of workmen to change the aspect of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the North Carolina orchestra, later on the Carolina orchestra, without an accident or appreciable mistake. After it was over, Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the rails and life in the Carolinas went on its [illegible] course. The picture cost [illegible] to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost.

Dec 17

AT THE FORREST

This daily matinee of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is the sen-

---

Dec 17

PRIVATE WAR AREA FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

When David W. Griffith started the production of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The National [illegible] Nation," now showing at the Forrest, he was confronted with seemingly insurmountable difficulties. An area of private land was required about equivalent to that occupied by the opposing forces. Thousands of [illegible] had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina [illegible] was [illegible] Southern [illegible] many, many [illegible] Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency the county authorities were sought. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within the posted notice the Commissioners all traffic on "the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look Southern. Griffith handled this matter with [illegible] permission—by removing all telegraph and telephone poles. Thus the roads would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of workmen to change the aspect of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the North Carolina orchestra, later on the Carolina orchestra, without an accident or appreciable mistake. After it was over, Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the rails and life in the Carolinas went on its [illegible] course. The picture cost [illegible] to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost.

Dec 17

D. W. Griffith was eight months making his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which has created such a furore in all sections of the country. Griffith took his photographic and stage forces to five different States before the proper color. Some scenes in the Carolinas, in Virginia and other States were taken in California. One big scene had to be taken in Mexico. . . .

Dec 17

FORREST—The daily matinees of the David W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which continues here, with the evening performances by it as popular as ever, attendance. The arrangement whereby it is possible to buy seats two weeks in advance has been very happy in its influence, as persons who would otherwise find it difficult to obtain seats at the box office are thereby enabled to secure reservations. As the run continues the demand for seats grows rather than diminishes and this is taken as an indication of the widespread interest this epoch-making film has created. Indeed, there is promise that the engagement which is still in its infancy will be duplicated here in Washington, as it has been in New York and other cities. Important in the presentation of the picture is the musical score, which, played by a symphony orchestra, accentuates the dramatic effects so skillfully contrived by the producer, Griffith. In addition there are the "effects" behind the scenes which add specially to the realism of battle and storm, the clatter and galloping horses. The play has been splendidly cast, with such eminent artists

Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Oct 17

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" will observe the eighth week of its stay in this city, which commences tomorrow, by moving to the Miles Theater. Just how long it will remain at the attractive Seventh street playhouse no one can predict, but judging from its record-breaking run at the Nixon, and what the play is doing in the other large cities of the country, the big spectacle will be with us for many, many weeks to come. The popularity of the piece in this city is representative of its success in every other large city where it has been presented. Just as it has broken all records for length of run and volumne of attendance here, so it has dohe everywhere. In no one of the 10 other centers where it is now being presented is the end of its vogue in sight any more than it is here. Everyone who has seen it is saying something about it, and that something is the very thing which excites the curiosity and interest of the person who hasn't seen it. No stage offering has been so widely discussed as "The Birth of a Nation," no one has met such national approval nor scored such a record of attendance. The long line of intending seat purchasers which has been a feature of the Miles entrance since the seats went on sale, indicate that the run is going to be continued at this theater with the same enthusiasm that marked the Nixon engagement. In every way—prices, production, effects and the symphony orchestra of 30—the presentation at the Miles will be identical with that seen at the Nixon Theater.

* * *

IN THE photoplay field this week the removal of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon, where it has been for seven prosperous weeks, to the Miles, there will be an exhibition of life saving that is unusual in its scope.

In the first place it will save to those seemingly eager people who have not yet seen the Griffith spectacle a chance to gratify their curiosity. In the second place, it saves to the promoters of the screen a home in a most fruitful field, where additional shekels may be garnered for the already bulging money bags of the lucky producing company.

It may be assumed that this transfer also does some life saving for the Miles, where William Moore Patch may now sit idly by on his directorship throne and watch his numerous minions collect a good fat monthly rental.

N.Y. Press Oct 17

Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues in the Liberty Theatre, where it turns into its ninth month with to-day's performances. This spectacle has broken all records for the length of its run excepting one, and with the past week it registered 623 consecutive presentations. It will remain in the Liberty for an indefinite term and will not be seen in any other theatre in Manhattan during this engagement.

N.Y. Telegraph Oct 17

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it turns into its ninth month with the performance to-day. With the past week "The Birth of a Nation" registered 623 consecutive presentations of the great spectacle in New York. It will remain at the Liberty for an indefinite term, and will positively not be seen at any other theatre in Manhattan during this engagement.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 17

MILES.

"The Birth of a Nation" will observe the eighth week of its stay in this city, which commences tomorrow, by moving to the Miles theater. Just how long it will remain at the attractive Seventh st. playhouse no one can predict, but judging from its record-breaking run at the Nixon, and what the play is doing in the other large cities of the country, the big spectacle will be with us for many, many weeks to come. The popularity of the piece in this city is representative of its success in every other large city where it has been presented. Just as it has broken all records for length of run and volume of attendance here, so it has done everywhere. In no one of the 10 other centers where it is now being presented is the end of its vogue in sight any more than it is here. North, south, east, west and middle west, are paying tribute to the human appeal of its story, its patriotic interest, its artistic excellence and the magnitude of its scale of production. Everyone who has seen it is saying something about it and that something is the very thing which excites the curiosity and interest of the person who hasn't seen it. No stage offering has been so widely discussed as "The Birth of a Nation," no one has met such national approval nor scored such a record of attendance.

Telegraph Oct 17

"The Birth of a Nation" continues at the Liberty Theatre, where it turns into its ninth month with the performances today. Mr. Griffith's epic narrative has broken all records for the length of its run excepting the one held by Henry E. Dixey in "Adonis," which was made nearly twenty years ago.

Oct 17

MILES—"The Birth of a Nation" will observe the eighth week of its stay in this city, which commences tomorrow, by moving to the Miles theater. Just how long it will remain at the attractive Seventh street playhouse no one can predict, but judging from its record-breaking run at the Nixon, and what the play is doing in the other large cities of the country the big spectacle will be with us for many, many weeks to come. The popularity of the piece in this city is representative of its success in every other large city where it has been presented. Just as it has broken all records for length of run and volume of attendance here, so it has done everywhere. In no one of the 10 other centers where it is now being presented is the end of its vogue in sight any more than it is here.

North, south, east, west and middle west are paying tribute to the human appeal of its story, its patriotic interest, its artistic excellence and the magnitude of its scale of production. Everyone who has seen it is saying

Pittsburgh Press Oct 17

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."
At the Miles.

FILM PLAY POETIC GRIFFITH PRODUCTION.

The peace allegory of that Reconstruction romance, "The Birth of a Nation," which from now on will be seen at the Miles theater, is one of the many poetic conceptions of D. W. Griffiths, which have helped make this remarkable director one of the most commanding figures in the world of pictorial production.

There are two distinct schools of picture production; the "newer school," at its best, is Griffith as represented by "The Birth of a Nation," and no piece better represents the director of daring, and the producer gifted with the artist's imagination.

Gazette Times Oct 17

Recalling An Historic Tragedy

THE assassination of President Lincoln, so realistically reproduced by D. W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation," lends particular interest to a playbill that was one of the many issued to the audience who witnessed the tragedy at Ford's Theater, Washington, on the evening of April 14, 1865. This playbill, which is herewith illustrated in part, is the treasured property of Thomas Kirk, Sr., of this city. But few of these historic playbills are in existence; they are very highly prized by collectors and one at a recent auction sale in New York sold for $40.

"Our American Cousin" is the play that later in the century under the title of "Lord Dundreary," was so prominently identified with the career of the elder Sothern.

On the night of the assassination Miss Keene who, by the way, was the first actress in this country to manage her own company, was making the final appearance of her all-season stock engagement in Washington. John Wilkes Booth, the assassin, though a member of Miss Keene's organization, was not in the cast of "Our American Cousin," which doubtless made possible the opportunity for his act.

Booth is dead, shot in a barn, so history says, by one of the soldiers who pursued him, and so, with the exception of W. J. Ferguson, is every other player whose name appears on this playbill. Mr. Ferguson, one of the best known of our old-time actors, was on the vaudeville stage last season. He is now in Los Angeles connected with the studio of D. W. Griffith's, the celebrated producer of "The Birth of a Nation."

The death three years ago of John Matthews, the Lieut. Vernon on the playbill, left Mr. Ferguson the sole survivor of the theatrical organization that was so suddenly and tragically thrust upon the attention of the American nation. Matthews for some years preceding his death, was known as the visiting angel of the Actor's Relief Fund. His duty if was to seek out the sick and needy members of his craft and extend them the benefficent aid of the fund. Of all the members of the cast of "Our American Cousin," he was the only one to suffer by the act of Booth. He was Booth's closest friend, his roommate at the boarding house kept by Mrs. Surratt, the woman who was said to be the instigator of the plot to assassinate the President. Matthews, because of his friendship for Booth, was at once entangled in the case. He was suspected of complicity with Booth, and though the authorities did not charge him with having a part in the crime, the mob did. Feeling ran high and one accusation followed another. Finally the mob took matters into their own hands and seizing Matthews one day, they put a rope around his neck and were about to hang him to a lamp post when the police, in answer to a riot call, rescued him and so saved his life. Matthews was then accorded safe conduct out of Washington, but his experiences shadowed his life, and his friends claimed he was a changed man from that time on, particularly in his attitude toward women, for whom he took an aversion so noticeable that it made him a marked man even to his last days, and mystery surrounds the reason of why this famous old actor lost his regard for the opposite sex.

Pittsburg Oct 17

IN THE photoplay field this week the removal of "The Birth of a Nation" from the Nixon, where it has been for seven prosperous weeks, to the Miles, there will be an exhibition of life saving that is unusual in its scope.

In the first place it will save to those seemingly eager people who have not yet seen the Griffith spectacle a chance to gratify their curiosity. In the second place, it saves to the promoters of the screen a home in a most fruitful field, where additional shekels may be garnered for the already bulging money bags of the lucky producing company.

It may be assumed that this transfer also does some life saving for the Miles, where William Moore Patch may now sit idly by on his directorship throne and watch his numerous minions collect a good fat monthly rental.

Record Oct 17

S. F. Nixon, managing director of the Forrest Theatre, where "The Birth of a Nation" is the current attraction, announces the transfer of the engagement of that photo spectacle at Pittsburgh from the Nixon Theatre there to the Miles Theatre. The success of the "Birth of a Nation" in Pittsburgh was so great that Nixon was compelled to find a new place to show the film when booking arrangements made impossible continuance of the engagement at the Nixon Theatre. Demand for seats for this attraction has been as spirited in Pittsburgh as in this city, and two performances a day do not suffice to accommodate the crowds. Necessity for the change in booking arrangements at Pittsburgh was due to the fact that Frances Starr, in "Marie Odile," had been booked at the Nixon. It is interesting in this connection to learn that "The Birth of a Nation" at St. Louis recently was transferred from the Olympic Theatre to the Garrick in order to provide accommodation for an incoming attraction, and at the same time to arrange that the desire of the public to see the Griffith film should not be denied.

Londn

Star "THE BIRTH OF A NATION." 24 Oct 20

MR. D. W. GRIFFITH.

The Creator of the great Scala film, "The Birth of a Nation."

Miss Lillian Gish,

whose sympathetic portrayal of Elsie Stoneman is one of the best features of the great film to be produced at the Scala Theatre on Monday next, has earned a great reputation in the photo-play world.

P. Ledger Oct 17 '95

HENRY B. WALTHALL—FORREST

N. A. Oct 17

HENRY B. WALTHALL—FORREST

P. Ledger Oct 17

FORREST—The daily matinees at this theatre, where the David W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is the successful attraction, vie with the evening performances in attendance and there is promise that the run which the photoplay has had and is still having in New York and other cities will be duplicated here. The work has been splendidly cast, with such artists as Henry B. Walthal, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Spottiswoode Aiken and Miriam Cooper, to mention only a few, in leading roles.

WAR "SOMEWHERE IN THE STATES": A £100,000 FILM.

Trench warfare in the 'sixties.

There are many battle scenes.

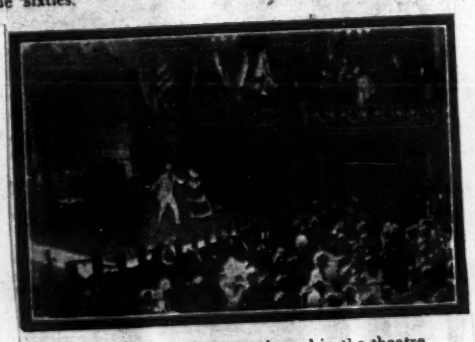
Daily Mirror Sept 24

Recent Oct 17

Forrest—"Birth of a Nation."

The daily matinees at the Forrest Theatre, where the David W. Griffith photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is the sensationally successful attraction, vie with the evening performances in attendance. The arrangement whereby it is possible to buy seats two weeks in advance has been very happy, inasmuch as persons who would otherwise find it difficult to obtain seats because of the crowds constantly at the box offices are thereby enabled to secure reservations. As the run continues demand for seats grows instead of diminishes, and this is taken as an indication of the widespread interest this epoch-making film has created. Indeed, there is promise that the run which "The Birth of a Nation" has had and is still having in New York and other cities will be duplicated here.

Important in the presentation of the picture is the musical score, which, played by a symphony orchestra, accentuates the dramatic effects so skillfully contrived by the producer, Griffith. In addition, there are "effects" behind the screen, with alert and competent men to imitate on specially constructed machines the rumble of thunder, the roar of battle and the clatter of galloping horses. Then, too, the play has been splendidly cast, with such eminent artists as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Spottiswoode Aiken and Miriam Cooper, to mention only a few, in leading roles. As a matter of fact, however, there is not a person in the production who is not true to character, and as there were required 18,000 persons to give verity to this historic and romantic play, the task which Griffith set himself and which he successfully completed seems the more astounding. Pictures such as "The Birth of a Nation" are inspirational and are truly educational.



President Lincoln assassinated in the theatre.

There are 5,000 scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," a £100,000 film dealing with the American Civil War, to be shown at the Scala Theatre.

Inquirer Oct 17

Miriam Cooper (in Film) Forrest

FROM A FILM THAT COMMANDEERED A COUNTY FOR A DAY AND COST 500,000 DOLLARS! TO BE SEEN AT THE SCALA: A "RIDE OF THE KU KLUX CLAN," IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

The "Ku Klux Klan" incident stands out as the most vivid and thrilling of all in Mr. D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacular photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," produced at a cost of £100,000, and seen for the first time in England at the Scala Theatre on Monday. The gathering of the "Klan" in America is of itself one of the strangest of romances. It was a great society of Southern Whites who, after the Civil War of 1861-4, to redress their wrongs took the law into their own hands and ruled the South with an iron hand. "Adventurers," describes Woodrow Wilson in his "History of the American People," "swarmed out of the North, as much the enemies of the one race as of the other, to cozen, beguile, and use the negroes. . . . The white men were roused by a mere instinct of self-preservation until at last there had sprung into existence a great Ku Klux Klan, a veritable Empire of the South, to protect the Southern Country."

The production of this part of the film is said to have "held up" a county for a day!

SEPTEMBER 25, 1915.
No. 444. Vol. 35.

WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 2, 1915.

WHAT'S ON

"THE PAPER WITH ITS EYES OPEN"

D. W. GRIFFITHS.

The producer of the great photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," which opens at the Scala on Monday, 27th inst.

"THE BUDGET" and "THE TAX ON WAR PROFITS"—see page 11.

Evening Journal Dallas, Texas Oct 16

New ...y Which Sent New York Into Thrills Will Be Here Monday

The drama "Kick In," which has had a remarkable run in New York for the last few months, will be seen at the Dallas Opera House Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights with matinee Wednesday. An Eastern critic sized the play up in this manner: "This is the play that has set all New York athrill; the play that made the reviewers hunt for synonyms for 'absorbing' and 'engrossing' and 'captivating' and which has proven to be the sensational success of a notable season.

"To reveal the story of 'Kick In' would be unfair to author and auditor.

"Suffice it to say that, although it deals with crime, there is not a real criminal in the entire roll of its characters; that, although it deals intimately with the police and police methods, it is in no sense of the word a condemnation of the officers of the law; that, although filled with love interest, the hero and heroine are man and wife, and Cupid does not have to tax his ingenuity to keep the pair together, as he is so often called upon to do in the usual play. It is an entirely different play with a 'kick' in every line and yet replete with humor; for every thrill there are a dozen laughs.

"The characters have been drawn from real life and it is the ring of sincerity that gives the final punch to this remarkable drama."

"Birth of a Nation."

With a special matinee tomorrow afternoon, "The Birth of a Nation," the world's famous motion picture film which has been showing here for two weeks, will close its engagement at the Dallas Opera House. It is useless to say that no one should miss this great picture as thousands who have seen the film since it was first shown here have been walking advertisements for the play. According to the management of the Opera House, every person who has seen the play has left the theater a booster for "The Birth of a Nation."

The film is the most elaborate and most expensive ever produced, it is said. It deals with the Civil War and reconstruction and it shows war as it really is. One big feature is the thrilling ride of 3,000 members of the Ku-Klux Klan into Piedmont, South Carolina, where the Government has stationed negro troops to control the whites. A performance will also be given tonight. The matinee tomorrow was requested by a number of people who were unable to attend the show tonight.

N. Y. Times Oct

"The Birth of a Nation." And that, please remember, was the run achieved by the unprecedented "Peg o' My Heart." If the huge Griffith photo-pageant remains at the Liberty till the end of December, then it will beat the record. Of course, it is being shown at the same time in other cities, and doubtless the denizens of distant Dallas go trustingly to "The Birth of a Nation" because they know that there can be no substitutions in the movies. A photo-play can have ... company.

Evening Journal Dallas, Texas Oct 16

FILM STAR OF 18 YEARS PREFERS WORK TO PLAY

Mae Marsh Ill From First Shopping Experiences Here.

If by modern magic you could appear to be doing your daily work while you were actually at ease in the luxurious bed of a luxurious hotel, with a devoted mother to wait on you, would you like it? The question was put to Mae Marsh, movie star.

"Not in New York!" she cried in a tone of pathetic disappointment, for movie actresses do not lose the power to convey emotion audibly off the screen.

There is Miss Marsh at the Liberty doing her part twice a day in "The Birth of a Nation." And there she is, also, at the Claridge to-day trying to get well from her first attack of New York shopping. It is her first trip here in her eighteen years, though, like coming events, she had cast her shadow before—on the screen.

There is another paradox about her—she is a famous actress, yet still only a girl in her teens, coming to the metropolis to see it for the first time.

As to herself, she admits she likes to shop and spend money, but she is sure she likes even better the work that earns the money.

"Work is the best fun," she says.

"What is the hardest part of the work?"

"Getting the character. But Mr. Griffith tells me I get the character very quickly. He has done everything for me." When the interviewer suggests that even the wonderful Mr. Griffith couldn't make something out of nothing the artist's mother nods.

"I have told her that," she says.

"When I first began to play in the 'Birth of a Nation' I didn't like the part," went on Miss Marsh. "But soon I began to love the girl, and when they offered me something bigger in the same piece I wouldn't change."

She appeared to be deeply impressed with the idea of the play and the fact that she was helping to bring history closer to the people.

"Lincoln runs away with the whole thing," she said with a smile that would have assured the great emancipator she was more than willing to let him have it.

"I've always loved Lincoln, especially because he used to study so hard when he was a boy, working late by the fire and by the light of candles and pine torches. He was ambitious. . . . I'm ambitious too." She added the personal touch after a little silence in a way that paid tribute to the inspiration of a great example.

From the Civil War talk leaped down to the present. She gets letters from soldiers over in England who have seen her in the movies.

"They tell me how they have suffered," she said. One would like to read some of the answers.

Her final word was one of appreciation for THE EVENING SUN'S discriminating reports.

"When I had only a little part the paper noticed that, gave me all the praise it was worth and that encouraged me to do my best. It meant everything then and I haven't forgotten it."

Although the little screen favorite was ill the interviewer could find no trace of those tears that have helped to make her famous on the screen. Can it be they are Griffith tears?

FAMOUS FOR HER TEARS

Mae Marsh in "The Birth of a Nation."

Record Oct 17

Battle Scene in "The Birth of a Nation." (Motion Pictures) Forrest

Houston Chronicle Oct 15/15

Prince "Birth of Nation" Vast Film Feature

197

"Birth of a Nation" Opens at Prince Tomorrow Night.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Prince Theatre tomorrow night. There will be two performances daily after the opening at 8:15 and 2:30 p.m.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City, where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece his piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and St. Louis.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation, its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for those results have been marshaled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before.

Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. Eighteen thousand people fill his stage, which has a vast territory for its background. Three thousand horses pass before your review in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago.

Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of ten square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as can not be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war.

Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

New Program of Features Announced

Zoe

D. W. Griffith, producer of the "Birth of a Nation."

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 17

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" HERE WEEK OF OCTOBER 25

"The Birth of a Nation," which opened its tour of the South in Norfolk three weeks ago and played to the largest audiences that the Colonial Theater in that city has ever held, comes to the Academy of Music, Richmond, for a week's engagement, beginning Monday, October 25. Daily matinees will be given after Monday, making eleven performances in all. Seats will be placed on sale at the Acaedmy box office next Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

The big Griffith spectacle will be presented in Richmond with an orchestra of thirty, and exactly as it is being seen at the Liberty Theater, New York, where it is now in its eighth month. It is also breaking all records for long runs in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago.

Entirely different is "The Birth of a Nation" from anything that the American stage has ever known that its producer, David W. Griffith, has been hailed as the creator of a new art. Mr. Griffith has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of slavery, the War Between the States, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction and the restoration of the South to its own.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion-picture camera. The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast. Within 12,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and signified presentment of national upgrowth with a real and human love story based on Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansman."

As it appears to the newspaper and magazine critics, Mr. Griffith has not only surpassed the art of the "indoor" theater, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-style history or historical novel. The best characterization of it so far is that of a very eminent public man who has called it "history by lightning."

Journal Spartanburg Oct 18

Clever Actress in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Harris theatre next Thursday ,Friday and Saturday, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded.

Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron, favorite sister of "The Little Colonel," in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Harris heatre, three days, beginning Thursday, October 21.

Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the younger sister in this appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her face is better known than any actress in the world, and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

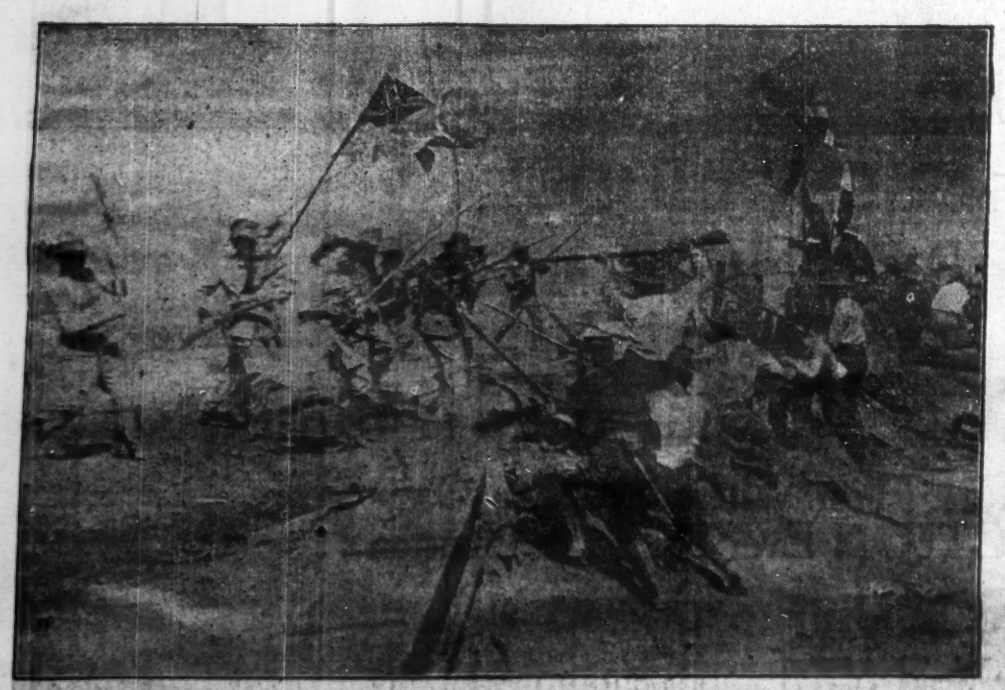
Seats are selling fast for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday ,making five performances in all.

Pittsburg Post Oct 18

Today, beginning with a matinee, is the opening of "The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle at the Miles Theater. In no way is the exhibit at the Miles different from that at the Nixon and the prices remain the same.

Houston Daily Post Oct 13th

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IS A PLAY WITHIN A PLAY



The Last Confederate Charge at Petersburg.

Abraham Lincoln.

Lee and Grant at Appomattox.

Pittsburg Press Oct 8

"Birth of a Nation" at Miles.

Today, commencing with a matinee performance, marks the opening of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles theater where this popular spectacle will continue its phenomenal run in this city. That the public appreciate the action of the Griffith management in securing another theater in order to prolong the local engagement is indicated by the past three days' advance sale at the Miles. From all viewpoints this attractive playhouse at the corner of Seventh st. and Penn ave. is ideal for the presentation of the celebrated pictorial drama; in particular the Miles' arrangement of seats ensures patrons an unusually clear view of the screen while the construction of the auditorium makes possible the perfect picture that so distinguishes the projection of the romantic offering. In no way will the performance at the Miles differ from those seen at the Nixon in the past seven weeks and the prices remain just the same as they were at the Sixth ave. playhouse.

Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph Oct 18

"Birth of a Nation" Opens at the Miles

Popular Pictorial Drama Continues Its Engagement in Pittsburgh.

DEMAND FOR SEATS STILL BIG

Commencing with today's matinee performance, "The Birth of a Nation" will continue its Pittsburgh engagement at the Miles Theater. That the public appreciates the action of the Griffith management in securing another theater in order to prolong the local engagement is indicated by the last three days' advance sale at the Miles. From all viewpoints this playhouse is ideal for the presentation of the celebrated pictorial drama. In no way will the performance at the Miles differ from those at the Nixon in the last seven weeks and the prices remain just the same as they were at the Sixth avenue playhouse.

Pittsburgh Gazette Times Oct 8

Commencing with a matinee performance today, marks the opening of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles Theater where this popular spectacle will continue its phenominal run in Pittsburgh. That the public appreciates the action of the Griffith management in securing another theater in order to prolong the local engagement is indicated by the past three days advance sale at the Miles. From all viewpoints this attractive playhouse at the corner of Seventh street and Penn avenue is ideal for the presentation of the celebrated pictorial drama; in particular the Miles arrangements of seats ensures patrons an unusually clear view of the screen, while the construction of the auditorium makes possible the perfect picture that so distinguishes the projection of the romantic offering. In no way will the performances at the Miles differ from those seen at the Nixon in the past seven weeks and the prices remain just the same as they were at the Sixth avenue playhouse.

E. e. Journal Dallas Oct 12

BIRTH OF NATION GETS NEW MARK FOR ATTENDANCE

The special matinee given at the Dallas Opera House showing "The Birth of a Nation" for the last time yesterday afternoon resulted in breaking all theatrical records for Dallas.

There were, by far, more paid admissions to see the picture yesterday afternoon than at any time since the film was started on the road tour. More than 700 persons occupied the gallery, while the balcony and downstairs were filled to overflowing. Long before time for the curtain to rise every seat in the opera house had been sold out and standing room was at a premium. Manager Greenwall of the opera house said that almost twice as many people saw the picture yesterday as were present at the biggest day in Atlanta where the film made its first Southern showing.

David W. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his new photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Prince theater tomorrow, is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction and the reincarnation of the South to its own. These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion picture camera. The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast. Within 13,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and dignified presentment of national upgrowth with a real and human love story based on Thomas Dixon's book romance, "The Clansman." As it appears to the newspaper and magazine critics, Mr. Griffith has not only surpassed the is complete story within itself and yet is a vital part of the entire story which is covered in the larger plan of the spectacle. From a technical viewpoint it is one of the most interesting achievements in the annals of the American stage.

In the language of motion picture production it is known as a studio scene. This means that it was built indoors and had to be specially constructed to suit the needed dramatic effect. It is the largest interior set ever built for a motion picture story. The scene is in minute detail an exact reproduction of Ford's theater as it appeared during the historic event. Numerous authentic works upon the subject were studied to obtain the correct arrements and dimensions of the old theater. In this research the fundamentals were furnished by Nicolay and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, a History."

It will be recalled that the latter served as secretaries to President Lincoln and were in close touch with the stirring events of that period. In showing the impressive box scene in the picture, people's names public now [illegible]

lightning."
Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 people in the historical pictures. The best-time and time again and the real actors who played Booth before the real picture was taught just how Booth made his jump

199

Pease Allegory in "The Birth of aNation," at the Harris theatre three days, beginning Thursday, October 21.

A well-known artist visiting D. J. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures, to my mind, have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," the big spectacle to be seen at the Harris theatre next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veiling of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the land of Utopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment in "The Birth of a Nation" of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wane, skelton-like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean, emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs and arms and (as it were) shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

Mae Marsh Plays in the "Birth of a Nation"

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Prince Theatre, beginning tonight, is a prodigy of filmdom. In fact, it would sound extravagant to quote the praises of her by the film experts, who declare her to be the best "find" of the last thirty months in this wonderfully advancing art.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spearholding with the "merry, merry," was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio, where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed, also, a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in the kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit, with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero, had been achieved by Mae Marsh. When one asks a film man nowadays to mention offhand a really great character actress in the photographic field, the chances are ten to one that he will mention her name. The ugly duckling is at last a swan!

BEHIND THE SCENE

Property Man Astounded at Two Strange Apparitions.

There is a property man with "The Birth of a Nation," the motion-picture spectacle now at the Forrest, and he is a very efficient and conscientious person. Indeed, so faithful to his employment is he that he is always at the theatre at least a half-hour before its performance begins. Such assiduity, of course, is physically wearing, and so, last Thursday afternoon, just before the matinee, he went into the star dressing-room, which is convenient to the stage, and sat down for a moment to rest. It was a desolate enough place. Where once might have been found fluffy or spangly gowns, dapper shoes, cold cream, all sorts of cosmetics and an overflowing trunk or two, there was nothing but bare walls, an electric globe unlighted, pegs for clothing but no clothing, and a dressing-table scratched and sorrowful.

Still, it was a restful spot—especially for a tired property man—and he began to muse upon the people who must have been the occupants of the rooms in times gone by. Flora Zabelle, dashing and evanescent, was conjured up. There was a vision of Mizzi Hajos with the voluminous skirts, so attractive a figure in "Sari," and naturally there was a fleeting recollection of the elfin Adeline Genee, a very sylph in her ballet garb. You see, this property man is familiar with the people of the stage, even though he has left them temporarily to devote his abilities to the continued success of "The Birth of a Nation."

He was just marveling at the grace of Mlle. Genee in her fairy-like flitting when he turned to the door of the room, distracted by a murmur of voices.

"Why, good afternoon, Mae Marsh," he exclaimed; "I see you are ready to go on."

Miss Marsh was in the doorway and she was coming into the dressing-room, with Lillian Gish closely following.

"I hope I'm not intruding," suggested the property man.

"Not at all," amiably responded Miss Marsh. "I have my crinoline on and I just came into Miss Gish's room for a moment to put a touch of powder on my cheeks."

"Oh," said Miss Gish, who was also very lovely in her civil war time costume. "I told Miss Marsh that she should have the star's room anyway, and I just hope she will take it."

The property man was amazed. "Well," said he, "I think both of you are stars and that you ought to share the room."

"How sweet of you," exclaimed the two girls in unison. Then each smiled at him and the property man asked, in wonderment: "But, say, how did you get off the screen?"

"I thought you would ask that," Miss Gish responded. "It was just this way. I found that lovemaking was wearing on me, and Mae got tired of falling off the cliff, so we—"

There was a sudden alarm. The property man looked for the two girls, but they had vanished. Someone was shaking him and calling to him, "Wake up!" He rubbed his eyes and then, after a pause, he mumbled: "I might have known stars don't give up star dressing-rooms—except in dreams."

And yet it might not have been a dream, but Miss Gish and Miss Marsh are the warmest of friends and the most unassuming of persons.

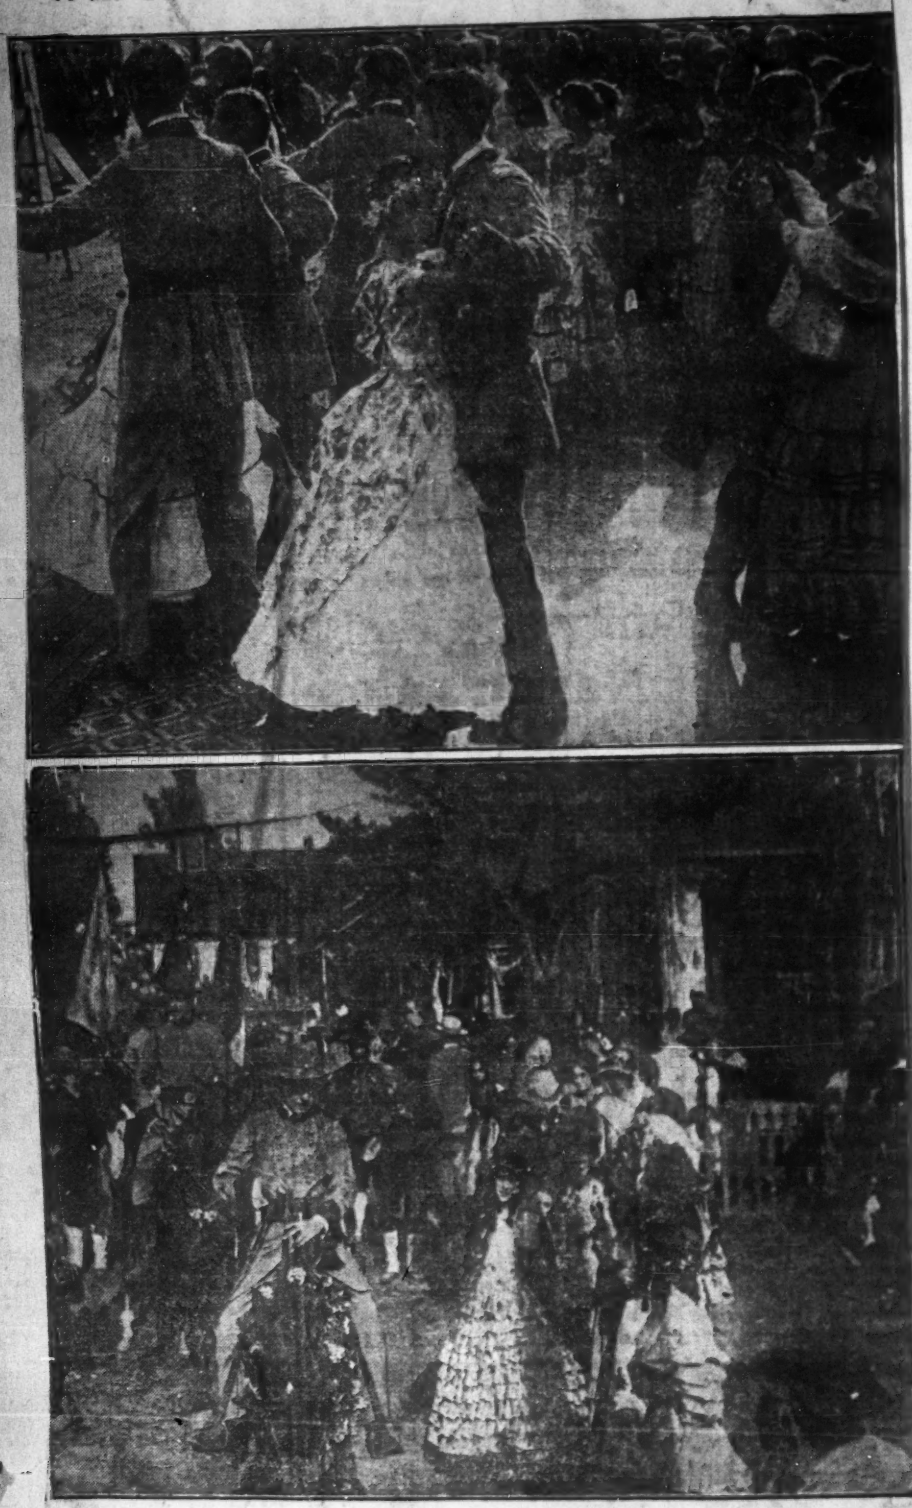
"The Birth of a Nation."

An advance notice says:

In each of the large cities where D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which will soon be seen at the Grand Opera House three days, beginning Sunday, October 24, matinees Monday and Tuesday, was produced last summer, there were long lines of patrons waiting to buy seats at the box offices. Absolute capacity was the rule for many months. During the dull times that had fallen upon the theater these lines or "queues" of prospective buyers had practically disappeared. "Oh, there won't be any advance sale," said the box office attendant wearily when asked about an engagement. It took a Griffith production of pictures and music—not words—to bring back the long absent queues. New York's Broadway, Chicago's Loop, Boston's Tremont Street looked like old times again, with the box office forces doubled and the lines of "Birth of a Nation" admirers stretching to the corner or even to the next street. The same phenomenon has been repeated in all the other cities which the play has visited the present season. It means, of course, that the high class theater is not moribund. Only the touch of David W. Griffith's master wizardry has been required to infuse it with life.

Magazine News Supplement Galveston - Texas

David W. Griffith's Epoch-Making Spectacle Will Have a Five-Performance Run at Grand



SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

THE upper picture shows a glimpse of the Southern ball on the eve of Bull Run; the lower picture shows confederate volunteers leaving for the front. The production will be run for five performances at the Grand Opera House, beginning next Sunday night.

SOUTHERN DRAMA IN FILM PICTURES

Production That Had Record-Breaking Runs in Cities Will Be Shown

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Grand Opera House for five performances, commencing next Sunday night.

The management announces that this work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale claimed indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, presumably the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine.

Scenes Are Out of Doors.

Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out of doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and many men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's Theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which is said to cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay, now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the Master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Is Historically Connected.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret, Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman, Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively, George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina, Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus, Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth, Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia, John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Neise and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers, Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew; two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theater projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25c to $2 at the evening performances, and 25c to $1 at the matinees.

Houston Chronicle Oct 19

"Birth of the Nation" Strong, Gripping and Wonderful, a Picture That Makes You Cry

You will cry. Probably you have remarked that it is not possible to construct a $2 motion picture. But after you have seen "The Birth of a Nation" you will say, "But they did." This remarkable, soul-stirring David Griffith production opened last night at the Prince. It plays all week, twice daily, matinee and night.

The veteran critic will judge a play largely by the effect it has upon the crowd. Last night there was an enthusiasm that the Prince Theatre never saw before. The shrill "rebel yell" echoed and reverberated. Persons who never wept before at a show wiped away tears. There were many who sobbed. And there were times when they laughed.

One forgets that it is a moving picture. There have been no films made like it before. Not a foot of the many reels but has a smile or a tear or a sigh in it. It is not only that the production is massive, but it is gripping, thrilling, inspiring.

For years they have talked of the great American drama. Maybe it has been written, not in words, but in gesture—the silent drama. The story begins with slaves, bound, bending cringingly before the auction blocks. It starts with the stain of the South. It begins to "get you" right on the commencing.

Then it shows a flash of the abolitionist movement. Close on the heels of this is the creeping in of "big politics." Then comes the war. Never has there been a war without its murder, its rapine, its terror to the innocent. There never will be. There can not be. When man wars he sluffs off the civilization of centuries. He becomes a devil.

The devilishness of war is bared to the bone in "The Birth of a Nation." Pointing down from a mountain-top, the camera shows Sherman's army marching through Georgia. Cities are burned. Women and children flee. There is terror everywhere. Thousands of people are shown in flight and fight.

All the evils of carpetbaggery are pictured. These follow in a train after Lincoln, "the best friend of the South," is murdered in the Ford Theatre. The picture of that assassination is repeated. Booth sneaks in and fires. Tumult ensues. That tragic night is duplicated.

It is a shock to the South, for had not Lincoln told the radical leader who wanted to confiscate property and do the Confederacy as a captured nation:

"I shall treat them as if they had never been away."

Then upon the screen flashes all that story of Lincoln's policies turned topsy-turvy. The terrible reconstruction days, the rule of the black man over the white. Before your eyes the "invisible empire" comes into being. The Ku-Klux Klan is organized. It springs into being. It battles.

"But not without as great a cost of life as Gettysburg," says the screen.

When the Ku-Klux charges the rioting negroes and the shooting negro militia, the blooded horses vault over bodies in the street and trample them. In the battle scenes one could swear he watches men die wholesale. It is realism, marvelously done. But never once is the story forgotten.

Love runs through it—a beautiful, double love, the love of a Southern hero for a Northern girl, and a Northern hero for a Southern girl. And the heroes are heroes and the girls are wonderfully fair. It is a powerful drama of death and love, tears and smiles. You become of it. It takes you into itself. If ever a show was worth $2 this is worth it.

It is a picture, but you will cry.

Spartanburg Herald Oct 19

Special Was Lee and Grant.

Among all the film factors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle, to be seen at the Harris theatre for three days, beginning Thursday night, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The spectacle shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Courthouse, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederaccy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerrilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers toward the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact, John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the Battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9, under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard, were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Gen. U. S. Grant, as he will be seen in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Harris Theatre, three days, beginning Thursday, October 21.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress, and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough, General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

Matinees will be given by "The Birth of a Nation" company Friday and Saturday, making five performances in Spartanburg. An orchestra of thirty pieces will be heard at each performance. Seats are selling fast.

Pittsburg Leader Oct 19

Miles—"Birth of a Nation."

Following a phenomenal run at the Nixon Theater, where it entertained thousands for seven weeks, "The Birth of a Nation," transferred to the Miles in view of the continuing demand, opened there yesterday, crowded houses attending both performances. A symphony orchestra of 30 men and the big organ, the latter being an added feature in the production, helped to make the presentation of the historical story even more realistic than ever. Out-of-town attendance to witness the production is growing, and as a result, many parties are coming from all sections of this end of the state. Some marvel at the drawing power of the production, but the story is perhaps the most realistic ever produced in photoplay. How long the motion picture will run at the Miles has not been intimated, but it is said that it will stay there as long as it continues to draw the crowds. The appearance of the Klu Klux Klan and their wonderful charge on horseback, this incident following a most realistic battle scene, continues to stand out prominently as perhaps the most interesting of the many thrilling scenes presented in the telling of the story.

Pittsburg Press Oct 19

"The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Miles theater yesterday after seven banner weeks at the Nixon. The large audiences that crowded the Penn ave. playhouse yesterday afternoon and evening were proof that this remarkable moving picture drama has lost nothing as a drawing card from its already protracted stay here. The production is identical with that which filled the Nixon auditorium with well pleased spectators for the better part of two months. The orchestra is the same. All indications point to a long and prosperous run at the Miles. "The Birth of a Nation" has been designated the eighth wonder of the world—at least it is an extraordinarily splendid drama of the screen.

Galveston Tribune Oct 19

"The Birth of a Nation."

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen in the presentation of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil war history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

N. Y. Press Oct 19

"The Birth of a Nation" has begun its ninth month in the Liberty Theatre with no decline in popularity.

Galveston Daily News Oct 19

German Pictures Close at Grand.

Edwin F. Wiegle's motion pictures of the German army in action at the battle front were shown yesterday at the Grand Opera House for the last time. The next attraction at the Grand will be "The Birth of a Nation," Oct. 24, 25 and 26.

Houston Daily Post Oct 19 20

"BIRTH OF A NATION" STIRRED LARGE AUDIENCE TO ENTHUSIASM

D. W. Griffith's Stupendous Spectacle of Ante-Bellum Days, Civil War and Reconstruction Revived Historic Scenes.

Censors Unanimous in Approval

The board of censors attended the Monday night offering of "The Birth of a Nation," but did not sit as a body. After the performance a meeting was held and it was announced by Chairman W. T. Kendall on behalf of the board that the unanimous opinion was that there was nothing in the picture to require its being refused permission to show.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be repeated at the Prince all of the present week, with a matinee and night performance each day.

Cheered by a large audience rocked to the depth of feeling by the stirring scenes portrayed before them and witnessed by the largest audience that ever attended a single performance of any moving picture in Houston, D. W. Griffith's stupendous moving picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was presented for the first time at the Prince Monday.

The capacity audience that sat enthralled for over three hours Monday night as Griffith's magnificent historical conception of ante-bellum days, civil war and reconstruction was unfolded before them upon the screen, lost sight of the fact that this was the first experiment in the $2 moving picture, lost sight of the fact that this was the silent drama, not the stage itself, forgot everything save that before their eyes were retold in graphic fashion the stories their fathers had told of scenes that they themselves had witnessed—the thrilling pages of the history of these United States had been torn from the inanimate volume to spread in vivid panorama and pulsating life before an audience of 50 years later.

It would be idle indeed to attempt to add to the tribute already paid D. W. Griffith for his conception and his wonderful attention to detail. No more telling statement of that fact could be made than to repeat that these three hours of film are cheered and applauded as no spoken drama has ever been in a Houston theater, and that for an audience of varied temperaments, sympathies, ideals and homes, these scenes lived for the full space of their portrayal.

VETERANS OF THE WAR GUESTS OF THE POST.

Occupying the two lower boxes on each side of the stage and taking a large part of the upper boxes, sat, as guests of The Post, members of the two local camps of veterans of the war between the States—men of the George B. McClelland post of the Grand Army of the Republic, who wore the blue, and men of the Dick Dowling camp of the United Confederate Veterans, who wore the gray. Tense and silent for the most part, these gray haired men, once themselves figures in the most stupendous conflict the continent has known, followed with unswerving interest the battle scenes portrayed as well as the vivid and exciting rehearsal of reconstruction in South Carolina. Battle scenes can never be painted or illustrated for those who have lived through them in all the gory horror of war as it exists, for these grewsome details which only Verestchagin sought to transfer to canvas may not be invoked for the lay mind to comprehend. But that the repetition of battle scenes in which perhaps may of those old veterans present last night fought during the war, evoked from them the tribute of occasional cheers—none louder than when a heroic incident was portrayed of a Southern soldier leaping across a rampart to succor a wounded federal. Old wearers of blue and gray alike cheered the realism of the film in voices cracked with age, but still as shrilly defiant as when they trebled the rebel yell or cheered the Stars and Stripes.

FOUNDED UPON THOMAS DIXON'S CLANSMAN.

Founded upon Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," and employing throughout a love story—a human interest tale in the fortunes of the Stoneman and Cameron families—Griffith has used only this structure around which to summon up again the scenes and incidents of half a century ago—only calling them back in the wonderful coloring of a decade, gone, perhaps, but never to be forgotten so long as those live who saw with their own eyes its existence and its passing, and who now only see it in the fading gaze of retrospect, or so long as those of us remain who have stood at the knee of fathers and grandfathers to hear them tell of the past. Never to be forgotten, indeed, so long as the arid page of historic reminiscence can summon that distant time for young America.

"The Birth of a Nation" opens in the peaceful but restless years immediately preceding the war between the States, portraying the rise of the abolitionist movement to power in congress, and the old plantation scenes of the lordly South that passed forever when war swept like a destructive khamsin over their smiling beauty. War is declared. In the South, Griffith brings before you the wild enthusiasm of those stirring days after the victory at Bull Run, when hearts were light and unshadowed by the sorrows to come, when Carolina belles pinned boutonnieres on the breasts of the youths marching to the front, when wife and sister lined the streets to speed the gray legions on their way. War—with all its dazzling brilliance and romantic lure—exists then—as it can never exist after the start. Then comes the change. Through the streets of stricken villages pour the guerrilla raiders, spreading ruin and devastation and striking terror to hearts that never feared a noble enemy. The romance that flamed at Manassas fades into the chill of death as loved ones are slain far away in battle. The glamour of war pales besides the flames that light Sherman's march to the sea, that procession which from the mountains to the ocean, left Tennessee and Georgia a cinder path of desolation. It dies in the trenches as gaunt, hungry Confederates battle beneath the ramparts at Petersburg in the last fading days of the Lost Cause.

PORTRAYED IN TELLING COLORS.

Griffith's powerful touch lights anew old torches. Southern chivalry and northern valor are portrayed in telling colors. The homely Lincoln and his great heart are brought in close touch with this distant day as the audience sees him relieve a mother's agony by pardoning her son, unjustly condemned. Then, the war concluded, with wonderful attention to historic accuracy—even to the moment when the president, slightly chilled, pulled his cape about his shoulders as he sat in the box at Ford's theater, the assassination of Lincoln is repeated—enacted.

The death of Lincoln brings this pictorial storyteller, or, more accurately, historian, to reconstruction days, when under the stimulus of rage at Lincoln's death and deprived of his restraining hand, the South groans under the heel of political oppression—the negro, the carpet-bagger and the scalawag rule supreme.

Into this chaos of misrule springs the fantastic figure of the Clansman—heroic in retrospect—tinged with the romance of the Invisible Empire. The part played by this recrudescence of the age-old crusader in the regeneration of the South and of the negro race is brought home with striking force—and the figments of romance used for his canvas of the Ku Klux Klan stir the blood as the fiery cross that once summoned the Highlanders to their chiefs is used to call together the clans of the Invisible Empire to right a nation's wrongs.

At last the Ku Klux works out the redemption of the South—and side by side, heart by heart, old wrongs are righted, old grudges forgotten, until the true union of North and South reflects the abolition of Mason and Dixon's line, "once," as Henry Grady said, "traced in fratricidal blood, but now, thank God! but a vanishing shadow!""

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 17

THE BATTLE OF THE CRATER
in "The Birth of a Nation," Academy, Week of October 25.

Spartanburg Herald Oct 20

MOVIES SUPREME IN POETRY, ART AND ACTING SAYS DAVID W. GRIFFITH

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

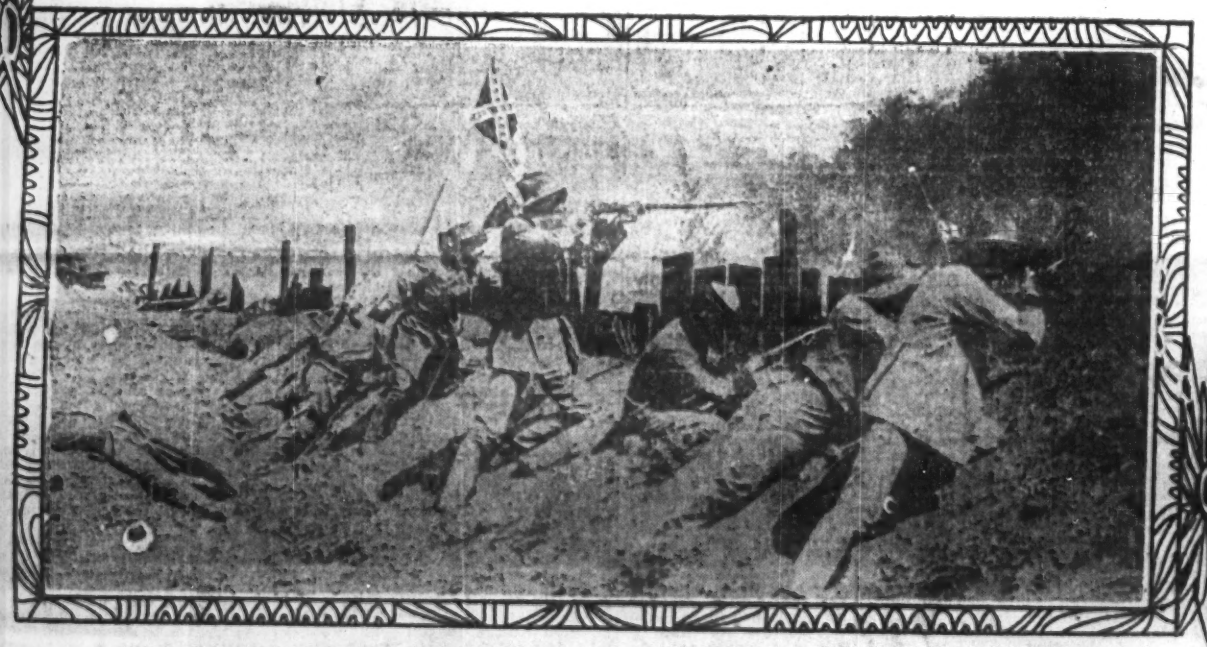
Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

MOST remarkable of recent changes in the theatre has been the appearance of "kings that knew not Joseph"; of sceptres seized from dying dynasties and wielded by new hands; of rulers with Aladdin - like fortunes who dash from coast to coast, build transitory cities, engage and dissolve armies overnight and create ephemeral enterprises—all to make an American holiday—beside the magnitude of which much historical pioneering and concoction of actual events seem but child's play.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement kings—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Wark Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision animating Griffith undoubtedly comes from some obscure Welsh bardic strain.

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The Birth of a Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the plot. In this case there was a previous stage play. If we were wise, we forget that as much as we can, for



"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg.

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards, and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER the Most Stupendendous, Dramatic and Spectacular Enterprise that the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Realized!

nation. By the way, twenty-four 'Lincoln actors' were rehearsed before the right Lincoln was found! The Blue and the Gray, and the Southern white gentry all have been drilled under their respective leaders. And then film making begins.

"At an early stage of the work—after the rough outlines have been filled in—the scenario is thrown away. The building and rebuilding of the story, the piecing of intimate bits and the discarding of the useless go right on while we are living the history, so to speak, from day to day. Nearly twenty-eight miles of pictures—140,000 feet of film—are taken. And how much of these are used? At the finale we discover that we have thrown away eight-tenths of our product—we have remaining 26,000 feet, or, say, five miles of consecutive story. But that is twice too long. We condense, condense, condense. At the end of two months more of hard labor we have edited 'The Birth of a Nation' to 12,000 or 13,000 feet—two and a half miles—or, in theatre wise, two hours and forty-five minutes' stage entertainment."

"How about the cavalry and war effects?"

"We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked up everywhere.

"Four thousands and thousands of cavalry, [illegible] being mounted on autos that travel ahead of the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, consecutive picture taking. Parallel with the idea of the tremendous technical difficulties involved."

"Will the motion picture ever develop into a true work of art?" was the next question, somewhat rudely asked of this wizard of the nature theatre.

David Griffith laughed—not a laugh of offended vanity or condescending superiority, but the easy, natural mirth of a master who expects to encounter many skeptics and doubting Thomases in the day's work.

"Why," he said, "the makers of pictures have already surpassed in many ways the art of the speaking stage. The old school are coming to us, are they not? And appropriating such of our devices as the 'cut-back' and the parallel action. And I could name one actress with a tremendous New York hit of two years to her credit who built up her justly famous part from close study of the methods of our Los Angeles picture actresses!

"Already it is admitted that as to poetic beauty the motion picture [illegible] Browning's stories, many of Tennyson's, innumerable Biblical and classical fables. Not only beauty but thought is our goal, for the silent drama is peculiarly the birthplace of response. "I know there is much talk of picture types, blonde types and all that, but over and above technical requirements, so called, is the demand for people of great personalities, of sincere, true emotion and the untheatrical expression thereof.

"Somehow, most of the stars who come to us from the regular stage lack the sincerity, at least in their earlier efforts before the camera. Mrs. Fiske, in 'Tess,' was a notable exception. I know she drew from me the tribute of tears. The Comedie Francaise actors, notably Coquelin and Le Bargy, who appeared in some of the French pictures, were wonderful in the breadth and strength of their exquisite character portrayals. On the other hand, some of the most widely advertised and most admired spectacular pictures from abroad suffered from the defect of mediocre acting. Of what use are magnificent scenes with only puppet-like actors? Here in America we are training a school of silent actors who bid fair to sur-

what slavishly. Few of us erased we were dealing with a new art form. The primitive picture play was laid out in facts, strict unity of time and place being always observed, the same sized figures shown in an unvarying the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be con-latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching

Spartanburg Herald Oct 20

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Josepeh Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was selected from 18 players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the president reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington—April 14, 1866—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the war president as Mr. Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious states. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character as exhibited in his granting of a parlon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the president. They then depart and he turns to a plain, middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black, who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattox surrender, the leader of congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the south for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away!" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's theatre, Washington, when southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great president, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

Journal & Carolina Spartan
Spartanburg S.C. Oct 20

"The Birth of a Nation."

For the first time upon any stage in South Carolina, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle of the reconstruction, "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented at the Harris theatre, Spartanburg, for three days, beginning Thursday, October 21. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday, making five performances in all.

As most playgoers know, "The Birth of a Nation" is an elaborate picturization of "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's world-famous novel and play, but it is not to be compared with either. Both the book and the play have been dwarfed by Griffith, who used the great outdoors for his stage and employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses.

Spartanburg will enjoy a double distinction in the engagement of the spectacle. In the first place, it will be the first city in South Carolina—the state whose history was drawn upon by Mr. Dixon for his story—to see the big play, and, secondly, it will be the smallest city to date in which it has been presented.

During its engagement at the Harris there will be thirty men in the orchestra and twenty more will be employed "back stage" working the realistic effects. The battle scenes, showing Petersburg at the crest of the invasion, Sherman's march to the sea, and other conflicts of the war between the states, make up the greatest lesson in history that the American stage has ever known. Other important scenes are the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theatre, Washington; Lee and Grant at Appomattox, and the burning of Atlanta.

Seats for the engagement are now on sale at the box office.

Houston Chronicle Oct 20 203

Mae Marsh Is Star in "Birth of a Nation"

It is a well-known fact that lovers of photoplays have their favorites among the actors in the cast, and rave over their cleverness and personal charm as if they were before them on the legitimate stage in actual flesh and blood.

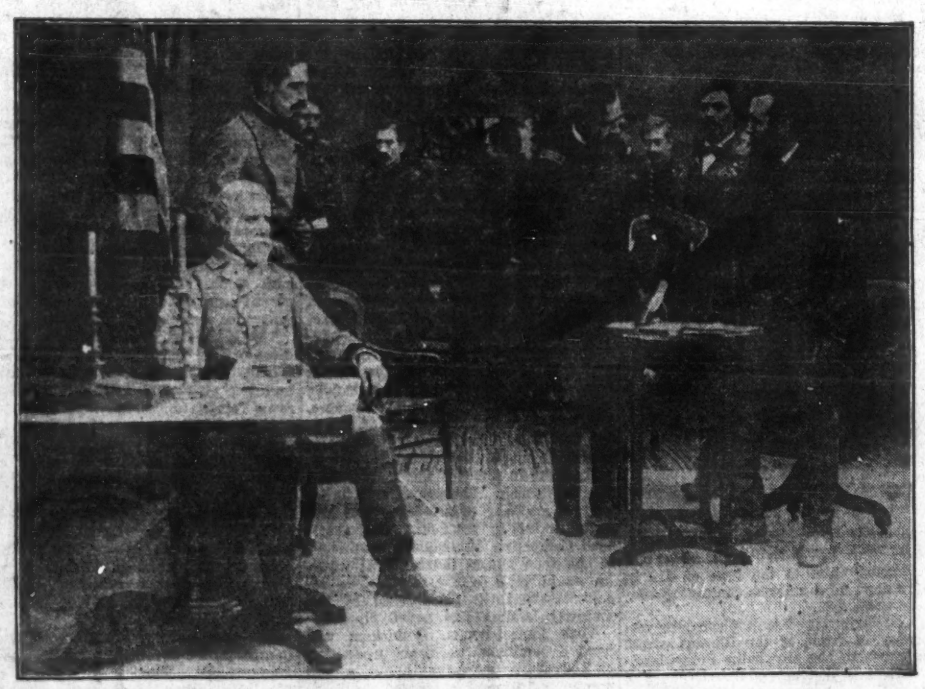
Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron, the younger daughter in the Southern household in "The Birth of a Nation," by her successful appearance in many photoplays during her three years career, has attracted by her elf-like charm and naive personality, many admirers, who greet with pleasure her appearance on the screen.

Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of the brother back from the civil war; the making of "Southern ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black; the scene in the cellar with Miriam Cooper; the garden making that follows the return from the war; the Southern banquet; and the pretty scene where she rains kisses on her brother Ben's mouth to console him for temporary loss of his sweetheart, Elsie. There is always a touch of comedy or of pathos where Miss Marsh appears. Her personality lends itself to fine temperamental treatment of any part she plays. Her expressive, ever-changing, mood-adapting face is one of the most valuable in all the list of film favorites.

She was discovered by David W. Griffith, the producer of many film successes, long before he made "The Birth of a Nation."

News Leader Richmond Va. Oct 20

Meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox Among Historical Scenes in Griffith's Production



SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom.

The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical facsimile scenes in Griffith's motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Academy of Music next week.

General Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, while General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith, "has been to introduce as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricalism."

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the 'story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvellous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young may be entirely revolutionized by the stage by new processes."

"Pardon me," I persisted, "but will the silent drama ever put forth immortal art products? Will there ever be a Shakespeare or a Homer of the movies?"

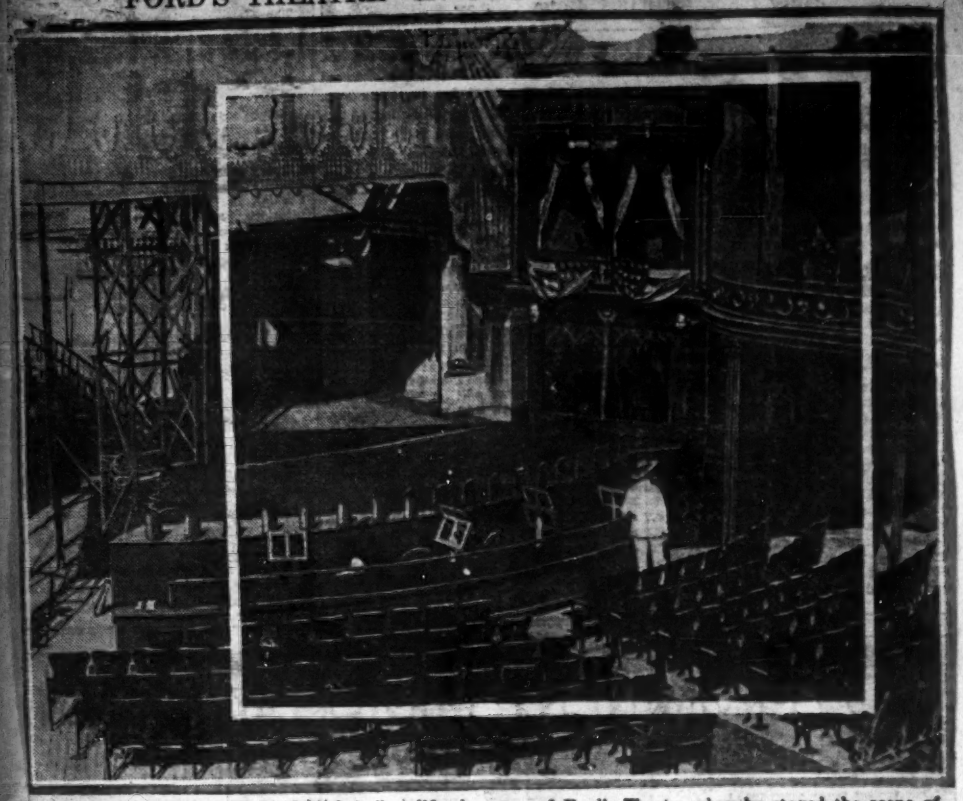
"No," mused David Griffith reflectively, "because the motion picture is acting, and the fashion of acting changes with each age. The stage work of Forrest, Macready, Kean or Kemble, for example, if it could be accurately reproduced, would appear crude, awkward to us of today. The actor's art is of the moment. It cannot be preserved for posterity. Therefore, as a wide departure from the methods of the past, we must develop the locale as well as the actors—the looks of the landscape artist and, in some sense, of the civil engineer are before us. For a month the actors rehearse without the camera.

"STAGE CAREFULLY SET FOR A MOVIE DRAMA"

"And now South Carolina in Reconstruction days is measurably before our eyes. Elsewhere the battlegrounds of the Civil War are springing into being, helped by expert advice of old vets and modern West Pointers. The costumes, settings and accessories have been carefully prepared for the Southside New Jersey scenes like those on the Rappahannock and Potomac, and Dr. Lincoln assembled [illegible] the panorama of a battle-

Gen. Ledger Oct 16

FORD'S THEATRE—IN THE CALIFORNIA HILLS



As every one knows, D. W. Griffith built a life-size copy of Ford's Theatre when he staged the scene of Lincoln's assassination in "The Birth of a Nation." But how many people who see the stage, balcony and parquet on the screen at the Forrest suspect that the structure was set up out among the hills of California with only a canopy of white cloth to break and diffuse the light? The photograph shows the ragged edge of seats, proscenium and roof. The space within the white line is all that the lens of the picture camera shows on the screen.

Houston Daily Post Oct 15

$2 WILLINGLY PAID BY MOVIE FANS FOR BIRTH OF A NATION

Although the Cost of Producing Picture Is Enormous, the Charge Is Not Based Upon This, but on Art Alone.

The two dollar movie, originated in the brain of D. W. Griffith, who declared that it was the moving picture of the future and then promptly demonstrated that it could be accomplished successfully today, may or may not have come to stay. But that in the case of the first experiment of exhibiting a moving picture at the same prices demanded by the speaking stage, the two dollar mark has not deterred the movie fans from responding is evidenced by the remarkable success of "The Birth of a Nation," showing at the Prince.

It is at least certain that the two dollar movie which grips the heart strings as Griffith's masterpiece of today grips it, will never be a failure. It may be impossible to follow up the present success with an equal triumph. Experimenting in this unknown country of public interest may prove as fatal to some stupendous moving picture enterprises as it has often proved to theatrical productions, only that the cost will be far greater, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and one failure may deter.

D. W. Griffith, conceiver of what is really more of a magnificent and realistic historical spectacle than a dramatic story, bases his $2 price on the grounds of art. "The Birth of a Nation" is art—art of the highest development in a century of progress, and no one who has witnessed the picture will deny its worth. But the producer of the historical film, a man who is recognized as one of the foremost minds in the moving picture game and one of the men to whom the present development of the business owes its success, could as well have based his contention on the ground of expense.

FIRST HALF A MILLION MOVIE.

"The Birth of a Nation" is not only the first $2 movie, but the first half a million movie. It is claimed that that was the actual cost of the production before a single cent was realized from the exhibition of the picture itself.

Producing "The Birth of a Nation" required over a year in actual time. This picture, in which nothing small appears, dealt in no small figures. It was taken in two locations separated by the breadth of the continent; 18,000 people took part in the picture and over 3000 horses; and when to these natural rapidly pyramiding expenses is added the cost of costumes staging, scenic effects, as well as actual photography, it is evident that the bill must have been tremendous.

Many of the scenes of the picture were actually taken in Piedmont, South Carolina, in which the story is largely laid. An old Southern mansion was rented outright and a street blocked for days for the taking of the Piedmont scenes. By far the major portion of the picture, however, was taken in the country around Los Angeles, California, where the climate as well as the natural scenery, including coast, plain and mountain were best suited to the panoramic views called into being by the exigency of the story.

THOUSANDS OF HORSES WERE REQUIRED.

To stage the thrilling dashes of cavalry and artillery, and the mad rides of the Ku Klux Klan, thousands of horses were required. But not these alone, for such work as the picture portrays the most skilled riders in the world are needed. Naturally, the riding pictures are largely made by celebrated cowboy riders. Again, the use of trained horses is frequently required, as there is scene after scene, both in the battle pictures and in the Ku Klux story, where falling horses must go down beneath gunfire.

Aside from the actual cost of production, the cost of staging "The Birth of a Nation" is approximately the same as that attendant on the production of any legitimate drama. The film now being presented at the Prince is accompanied by a force of 60, including 40 musicians, a stage manager, a complete crew of stage hands, and attaches of the business office, as well as skilled operators for the machine itself.

As much care must be taken in the staging of this picture as in any well presented drama. The transportation of the paraphernalia requires as much space in baggage trains and as large transfer wagons as any big theatrical production.

Once inside the theater the staging must be well done. To obtain the best effects, the machines must be located in the parquet, as to throw the pictures on the screen fro mabove gives what the moving picture people call the "keystone effect"—a gradual shaping towards the bottom of the picture much in the shape of a key stone. This makes the production hard on the eyes, and in a picture requiring over three hours for completion the eyes of the audience must be protected.

COMPLETE CREW ON THE STAGE.

On the stage is the complete crew of the company and the company's own "shadow box." In order to make the picture as clear to occupants of the front rows as to those in the back and to hurt the eyes of neither, the screen must be set back at least 20 feet from the footlights.

Stationed at the switchboard is a special electrical operator, whose eyes must constantly be trained on the picture in order to signal by an electric light system to the corps of stage hands exactly at which times to reproduce the sounds of thundering cannon, of storm, of crackling fire, or galloping horses and such other audible noise as is necessary to heighten the dramatic effect of the picture. At each town a special squad of boys is hired to supply cheering for the battle scenes under the direction of the stage hands.

It is obvious that the cost of any single film presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" is great, but there are 10 companies now touring the country offering Griffith's really wonderful and spectacular film.

Galveston Tribune Oct 22

"The Birth of a Nation."

"I was prepared to see a wonderful production, but I was not prepared for such a gripping, thrilling thing as I found in 'The Birth of a Nation' to be." Thus spoke Charles E. Sasseen, manager of the Grand opera house, who returned today from a trip to Houston, where he saw this motion picture at the Prince theater yesterday afternoon. The picture will begin a three days' engagement at the Grand on Sunday. "Description of this picture is impossible," continued Mr. Sasseen. "But it does get hold of you right from the start and it holds you until the close. You forget that it is a picture, that there is an orchestra, and you forget everything except that you feel as if you were living the scenes before you."

The Houston Chronicle yesterday had this to say of this picture:

The veteran critic will judge a play largely by the effect it has upon the crowd. Last night there was an enthusiasm that the Prince theater never saw before. The shrill "rebel yell" echoed and reverberated. Persons who never wept before at a show wiped away tears. There were many who sobbed. And there were times when they laughed.

One forgets that it is a moving picture. There have been no films made like it before. Not a foot of the many reels but has a smile or a tear or a sigh in it. It is not only that the production is massive, but it is gripping, thrilling, inspiring.

For years they have talked of the great American drama. Maybe it has been written, not in words, but in gesture—the silent drama. The story begins with slaves, bound, bending cringingly before the auction blocks. It starts with the stain of the south. It begins to "get you" right on the commencing.

All the evils of carpetbaggery are pictured. These follow in a train after Lincoln, "the best friend of the south," is murdered in the Ford theater. The picture of that assassination is repeated. Booth sneaks in and fires. Tumult ensues. That tragic night is duplicated.

It is a shock to the south, for had not Lincoln told the radical leader who wanted to confiscate property and do the Confederacy as a captured nation:

"I shall treat them as if they had never been away."

Then upon the screen flashes all that story of Lincoln's policies turned topsy-turvy. The terrible reconstruction days, the rule of the black man over the white. Before your eyes the "invisible empire" comes into being. The Ku-Klux Klan is organized. It springs into being. It battles.

"But not without as great a cost of life as Gettysburg," says the screen.

Houston Daily Post Oct 15

CENSORIZATION OF PICTURES STARTS IN THEIR PRODUCTION

Producers and Managers First Figure on Elimina tions—"Birth of Nation" Made to Fit Variou Sections of Country—Ten Companies on Roa

For the average "movie fan," the idea prevails that once a picture has been completed in the studio, no further changes are necessary—that the films are merely made up and sent out over the country as they stand. The manager of any production of Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," now being presented at the Prince, could speedily enlighten you on the fallacy of such a belief and unfold a tale of woe anent the use of scissors that would be emphatically—and profanely—backed up by the operator in charge of the film.

"Censorization" to the average follower of the "movies" implies the existence of a board of censors which occasionally bursts into public gaze by forbidding the showing of certain pictures, or by holding up others until inspection approves them under the unwritten pure moral law. But censorization of a far keener kind exists in the production of a picture itself, and many sleepless nights are passed by producers and managers in figuring on necessary eliminations.

The censorization of such a picture as "The Birth of a Nation," dealing as it does with a period in our country's history still fresh in memory and portrayal of which might possibly arouse contradictory feelings, is by no means the same for any given part of the country. Possibly, it is for this reason, that the 10 companies presenting Griffith's great picture are so carefully routed.

The picture of "The Birth of a Nation" as presented here was thoroughly "censorized" by the management before it was produced in Dallas. The film was carefully studied and any scenes that might possibly give offense were eliminated. The scissors plied merrily before "The Birth of a Nation" reached a Texas audience.

For instance, there are two places in the story where a white woman is the subject of negro violence—the flessing and ultimate leap to death of Flora Cameron to escape dishonor, and Elsie Stoneman's forcible detention in the house of Lynch, when the negro lieutenant governor is endeavoring to force a marriage. Now a careful study of the many film scenes required to portray these two important incidents of the play will show that at no time in the course of either does a male negro actually lay his hands on the white woman. In the original picture, contact actually occurs, particularly in the Lynch episode, where the negro seizes Elsie in his arms and kisses her. The management in censorizing these scenes for this section worked on the basis that such a portrayal was quite likely to stir up race antagonism in a section where miscegenation is forbidden by law. And in order to avoid any demonstration that might be calculated to injure the feelings of either race, the shears were ruthlessly employed.

Again, there is a scene in connection with the elder Stoneman's relations with the mulatto, Lydia, which is naturally repulsive in any section, but would be more particularly so in the South. This has been eliminated entirely from the film.

Avoidance of any possible touch that might prejudice black or white has been the big feature of the censoring of "The Birth of a Nation" for the Southern tours. But consorization has gone on for other sections.

For instance, the New York production was deprived of the scene in which one of the best standup fights of moving picture history is portrayed—the blacksmith Jeff's single-handed struggle for the capture of the negro Gus in the shanty of "White Arm." This is a wonderful bit of realism and easily to be compared to that wonderful man to man, free for all, of "On the Night Trail," and superior to William Farnum's battle in "The Spoilers." But it was not given Gotham to witness it. This portion of the picture was censorized for New York, for it was feared that the audiences there would not stand for it.

In the initial showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Houston Monday night at the Prince a number of films of present day progress of the negro race concluded the picture itself. These were not a part of "The Birth of a Nation," but were insisted upon by the Houston board of censors. After the Monday performance, however, the local censors reached the conclusion that the closing pictures were unnecessary and really destroyed the continuity of Griffith's spectacle. It was then left to the management as to whether it cared to use them or not, and they were promptly eliminated. Enter—the shears.

Wherever censorization must occur the operator has his troubles. It is he who with expert hand must wield the shears, and cut and piece together the film. And that means work. And for the operator there is plenty of work any way.

Each morning he must examine the precious film carefully—go over it with a magnifying class after cleaning it, to see that no tiny spot of dust remains to appear as a huge blotch on the screen and mar the picture. His lenses must be cleaned with a fine silk to avoid the same defect.

Small wonder then that the operator is no enthusiast over "censorization," either by the management or by outsiders. And a pair of shears is an abomination in his sight.

Pittsburg Dispatch Oct 21

At the Miles Theater, "The Birth of a Nation" is observing the eighth week of its wonderful run here to a twice daily patronage that indicates that only a portion of the Pittsburgh public have as yet seen this remarkable spectacle of our nation's birth and infanthood. Lovers of the photodrama, and their names are legion, are keen critics; what they do not indorse by their presence cannot be successful. That an army of them here over 100,000 strong have already expressed their admiration of this masterpiece is convincing proof that Mr. Griffith has produced something unusual.

Pittsburg Post Oct 21

At the Miles Theater "The Birth of a Nation," photo spectacle, is in the eighth week of its Pittsburgh run to a twice-daily patronage. More than a hundred thousand people here have expressed their admiration of this masterpiece.

Trades Union News Oct 21,

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" CONTINUES DAILY SUCCESS

Prodigious Exposition of This Country's Vital History Attracts Big Crowds

The daily matinees of the David W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which continues here, vie with the evening performances in attendance.

The arrangement whereby it is possible to buy seats two weeks in advance has been very happy, inasmuch as persons who would otherwise find it difficult to obtain seats because of the crowds constantly at the box offices are thereby enabled to secure reservations.

As the run continues demand for seats grows instead of diminishes and this is taken as an indication of the widespread interest this epoch-making film has created.

Indeed, there is promise that the run which "The Birth of a Nation" has had and is still having in New York and other cities will be duplicated here. Important in the presentation of the picture is the musical score, which, played by a symphony orchestra, accentuates the dramatic effects so skillfully contrived by the producer, Griffith.

In addition there are "effects" behind the scenes with alert and competent men to imitate on specially constructed machines the rumble of thunder, the roar of battle and the clatter and galloping of horses.

Then, too, the play has been splendidly cast, with such eminent artists.

Dealing with scenes easily within the memory of many men, this picture proved its possession of a peculiar sway over the emotions of all classes and degrees of men.

Its love story, though of a type often seen in tales of the civil war, is not without a strong popular appeal.

The capable cast presenting the piece includes Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper and Lillian Gish.

To Walthall and Miss Marsh fall the chief histrionic problems of the action and they solve them in an artistic and thoroughgoing manner.

Miriam Cooper is restrained, but powerful, in the role of the older Cameron girl, and Lillian Gish, as the daughter of the unrelenting Stoneman, proves forceful in the climax of the piece.

One dramatic writer says that he has means of knowing that profits of "The Birth of a Nation" now are sixty thousand dollars a week.

"Only about ten cities have been visited," he continues, "and the greater part of the United States is still open for exploitation. There isn't a place in which the picture has been shown that success has not come in overwhelming measure.

"You wouldn't have believed this if you hadn't seen the picture.

"Once you have seen it, you can understand.

"It is simply filled with exciting and thrilling episodes, touching upon the dramatic moments of our Nation's most critical period and is adorned with romance that is held together by a strong story.

"It gets you and you advise your friends by all means to see the film.

"You discount that race prejudice idea which some people have read into the story simply because it is founded on 'The Clansman.'

"It is the spectacular nature of the production, its thrills and its technical excellence, augmented by mechanical effects and musical accompaniment, that make you an advocate of Griffith's masterpiece."

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest Theatre to take note of the fact that this tremendously successful spectacle will never be shown in any but the finest theatres and at prices customarily charged for the best theatrical attractions. D. W. Griffith, creator of this epoch-making film, has made this fact clear in definite statements over his signaure, so that it would seem incumbent upon persons who have delayed their witnessing of this picture to make early arrangements for a visit to the Forrest.

Continuance of the popularity of this entertainment in Philadelphia is paralleled in other important communities and there is no abatement in interest here or elsewhere as is manifested by the crowded houses at afternoon and evening performances alike.

Although daily matinees are given there seems at times hardly enough opportunity for the public to be given proper accommodation.

However, the arrangement, still in operation, permitting the buying of seats two weeks in advance, has been a means of satisfying many people who otherwise might have been disappointed at the box office.

Journal & Courier Oct 21

The Birth of a Nation."

After a night of steady toil on the part of a score of electricians and stage mechanics, the Harris theatre is almost in readiness today for the first presentation tonight of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The finishing touches are being applied today and when the audience enters they will see little evidence of the long hours of preparation. Except for the removal of a large block of seats in the rear of the orchestra floor to provide space for the large asbestos booth carried by the company, the work was confined to the stage, where extensive changes were necessary for the installation of the two carloads of special equipment. This vast assortment of "props," requiring the services of twenty men during the performance, is used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects which have helped to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most talked-about theatrical offering in the world.

While the mechanics are finishing their work today, the twenty musicians carried by the company, together with ten of Spartanburg's best musicians, will be rehearsing the long and very difficult score which is played without pause during the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle. This splendid symphonic organization of thirty pieces will be one of the finest that local people have ever heard.

Tonight's performance will begin at 8:30 and the sale of seats indicates that there will be a capacity audience. The spectacle will remain for three days with performances at the same hour Friday and Saturday nights, and matinees Friday and Saturday at 3 o'clock.

Pittsburg Press Oct 21

MILES.

At the Miles theater, "The Birth of a Nation" is observing the eighth week of its wonderful run here to a twice daily patronage that indicates that only a portion of the Pittsburg public have as yet seen this remarkable spectacle of our Nation's birth and infanthood. Lovers of the photodrama, and their names are legion, are keen critics; what they do not endorse by their presence cannot be successful; that an army of them here over one hundred thousand strong have already expressed their admiration of this masterpiece is convincing proof that Mr. Griffith has produced something unusual, a distinct novelty in idea, patriotic interest, and magnitude.

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 21

"The Birth of a Nation."

Seats for the eleven performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music next week will be placed on sale at the box office at 9 o'clock this morning, and it is expected that the sale will start with a rush. The great number of inquiries received at the box office during the last week has disclosed unusual local interest in the coming of the big Griffith spectacle, and it would not be surprising if the week's attendance exceeds that of Norfolk, where the company opened its Southern tour three weeks ago. Toward the end of the week in Norfolk the Colonial Theater was not large enough to hold the thousands who clamored for seats.

Spartanburg Herald Oct 21

With a score of electricians and mechanics preparing the playhouse for the reception of the massive "Birth of a Nation" production when the company arrives this morning, the Harris theatre will be about the busiest spot in Spartanburg today. Extensive changes to the stage and auditorium are necessitated by the staging of the spectacle that has enthralled New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities and neither effort nor expense is being spared by the local management to provide the company with proper facilities.

In the first place a large block of seats must be removed from the rear of the orchestra floor, where a booth housing two large projecting machines and other electrical paraphernalia is to be installed. An optical expert sent in advance of the company measured to the fraction of an inch the distance necessary for proper focal adjustmet in a theatre of the rather unusual dimensions of the Harris and the regular stage employes were at work all last week carrying out his orders. Wherever possible, the theatre where "The Birth of a Nation" is shown is kept clear of other attractions for a week before the engagement.

Then the stage and orchestra pit require rearrangement. The bewildering array of electrical and other equipment used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects require every available inch of space on the stage. Twenty men are employed "back stage" in workig the effects, not counting a squad of "supers," who do nothing but shout at the command of the stage director. And these commands, by the way, are not spoken. Colored incandescents are scattered over the dozens of separate "props" and each is cotrolled from a switch not unlike the keyboard of a piano, which the director operates. The glimmer of a red light on a piece of equipment means to the trained handled of it that it is to be for a certain effect, while an instant later, at the sign of a blue light, the same "prop" is to be used for an entirely different effect. The stage staff is kept at high tension throughout the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle, which they never see.

Thirty men in the orchestra, twenty of whom are carried by the company, will also require more room in the musician's pit than is needed for the average atrraction. The pit has been stripped of all its superfluous furnishings and it may yet be necessary to place one of the harpists in a lower box, as has been done in other cities.

While the extent of the preparations necessary for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in a theatre gives one a fair idea of the massiveness of the production, it is only after one has witnessed the spectacle that he can appreciate its grandeur and realism. It is the most stupendous undertaking ever visioned and realized by a human being within the realm of dramatic art. Some bare facts of its sheer vastness are given herewith:

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided into two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the civil war re-enacted. A production of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells, costing $80 aplece, were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"as it actual is."—(Adv.)

Pittsburg Chronicle Tele Oct 21

"BIRTH OF A NATION" DRAWS BIG CROWDS

At the Miles Theater, "The Birth of a Nation" is observing the eighth week of its run here to a twice daily patronage. Followers of the photodrama are keen critics; what they do not endorse by their presence cannot be successful; that an army of them here over one hundred thousand strong has already expressed their admiration of this masterpiece is convincing proof that Mr. Griffith has produced something unusual, a distinct novelty in idea, patriotic interest and magnitude. "The Birth of a Nation" illumines the most important period of American history. It is as fascinating as a Dumas romance, as impressive as Dante's Divine Comedy, as comprehensive as Balzac's Human Comedy, and as soul-searching as the tragedies of Shakespeare.

Kansas City Post Oct 21

SEAT SALE AT GRAND FOR 'BIRTH OF NATION' TO START TOMORROW

DAVID W. GRIFFITH,
Producer of great great American film drama which opens here Sunday.

The seat sale for David W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," starts at the box office of the Grand theater tomorrow. The first show will be given Sunday.

Griffith, who produced the picture, has many masterpieces to his credit, including "The Merchant of Venice," "The Battle of the Sexes" and "The Avenging Conscience."

"The Girl From Utah" closed at the Grand last night and the remainder of the week will be used to prepare for the showing of the picture. A large permanent booth is being erected on the lower floor to insure the most perfect projection of the picture and the two car loads of machines used for effects are being installed. The orchestra of thirty pieces which is carried with the picture, will have two days' rehearsal to insure perfect synchronization of the music with the 5,000 scenes that are shown.

To give some idea of the enormous amount of work necessary to make the picture, Mr. Griffith was required to use 18,000 persons, 3,000 horses, several batteries of artillery and millions of feet of picture film. The cost of preparing roads for one day's riding of the Ku Klux Klan amounted to $10,000. The night battle scenes alone cost $5,000. Dozens of shells, costing $80 each, were used in the artillery battle. It required 25,000 yards of cloth for the Ku Klux costumes.

Since the opening performance, March 3, 1915, in the Liberty theater, New York, where the picture will be shown the remainder of the season, more than 5,000,000 persons have seen it in various cities.

Galveston Tribune Oct 21

"The Birth of a Nation."

An advance notice says:

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle opens an engagement of three days commencing Sunday, Oct. 24, and matinee Sunday and Monday, at the Grand Opera House. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's theater, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpeting regime, is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman and that of the Unionist captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South, are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unknown.

Globe & Commercial Advertiser Oct 12

Mae Marsh of "Birth of a Nation". Film Fame.

Of the thousands of moving picture actresses who through the medium of the screen have been taken to the public's heart, it is safe to say that none has found a snugger place than Mae Marsh—the Jenny Joyce of "The Escape," Mary of "The Sands o' Dee," Apple Pie Mary of "Home, Sweet Home," and the little sister in "The Birth of a Nation."

She is here in New York—in fact, two of her are here; Mae Marsh in the flesh, stopping at the Claridge accompanied by her mother—who, quite incidentally, a stranger would take to be her sister—and her screen incarnation, which has been here these many, many weeks scampering about among the stirring scenes over at the Liberty Theatre.

If that time-old question of personality and the stage is still up for discussion, those of the opposing side are lucky not to see Miss Marsh if they are bent on keeping up their end of the argument; for at the first glance, and after a minute's conversation, any one must recognize that this girl from California is the replica of the loving, lovable, earnest, playful little sister immortalized in Mr. Griffith's great civil war play. In the first place, she is scarcely older than that, even now, when she is within hailing distance of her twenties.

There is the same dignity that just escapes being primness, and that same spontaneity and vivacity, that same alternating repression and expression of emotion that make the girl of the screen so adorable, and that goes so far in the making of one of the most splendidly developed climaxes that has characterized any play, on stage or screen, in a long, long time.

There is apparently no pretense about Miss Marsh. Quiet and unassuming, she nevertheless is fully appreciative of the advantages that have been hers without depreciating the qualities in herself that have impelled her to make the most of those advantages. And when one has that sense so well developed and the ability she so evidently has to weigh possibilities and limitations impartially, even though they be her own, it is an invaluable asset.

"I am in my right sphere," she says, "and so, naturally, I am happy. I never have gone through the shifting process of so many girls who are set to earn their own living—going from one kind of occupation to another—because, you see, I knew exactly what I wanted to do and I made for it, although"—laughing—"goodness knows it took some courage; or, rather, it would have taken courage had I been of a wavering disposition."

It has been told many times how Mae Marsh some five years ago suddenly made up her little girl mind that she would be a moving picture actress like her sister, who was with the Biograph company; how her sister refused to take her to the studio; how

Mae Marsh.

Houston Chronicle Oct 12

Story of Surrender in "Birth of a Nation"

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom.

The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical facsimile scenes in Griffith's motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Prince Theatre. General Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, whilst General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith in speaking of such scenes recently, "has been to introduce as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricalism."

Detroit Tribune Oct 12

"The Birth of a Nation."

An advance notice says:

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a three days' engagement next Sunday evening at the Grand Opera House, with matinee Monday and Tuesday. The first-class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful battle of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the president in Ford's theater, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrific climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered states. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny "armies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung lines of many, many miles and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills and Vanderbilt cup race. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theater performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of outdoor Nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art—form of drama spectacle with music.

Beaumont Daily Journal Oct 12

Film Director Griffith, Who Grouped Figures In "The Birth of a Nation" Is Great Artist

PEACE GROUP "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Kyle theatre next Wednesday night for seven performances. The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by construction of two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Utopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment, in the "Birth of a Nation," of the contrasting theme of the misery of war. Wan, skeleton-like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and sordidness. Some of the lean emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewn about the stage like the piled up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to heaven. Bodies, legs and arms and (as it were) shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

Houston Chronicle Oct 21

Beautiful Love Story in "Birth of a Nation"

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Prince Theatre, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "great commoner," who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the patents' office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in indoor or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera, are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation" does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the civil war and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

Richmond Ev Journal Oct 20

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SEAT SALE IMMENSE

With seats selling fast for all performances of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music next week, it is apparent that the spectacle will perform its usual feat here of playing to capacity business. The sale for the eleven performances opened with a rush yesterday morning and there has been no letup in the demand.

But prosperity brings its worries. Just now the management is somewhat concerned as to how the crowds are to be handled toward the end of the week. Wherever the spectacle has been shown there has been much confusion and congestion, due to the tendency of many patrons to wait for the final performances. It is urged, therefore, that patrons obtain seats for the Monday and Tuesday performances as far as possible, thus distributing the attendance evenly through the week and minimizing the congestion. Two performances daily, at 2:30 and 8:15 P. M., are to be given after Monday night's opening, and seats for all performances are now on sale at the box office.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been praised so strongly by teachers and students of history that theatrical

Houston Chronicle Oct 25

Representation of Gens. Grant and Lee at Appomattox. One of the Scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Houston Dem News Oct 25

Grand Opera House.

"The Birth of a Nation," the great film drama, will be shown at the Grand Opera House, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 24, 25 and 26, with matinees on Monday and Tuesday.

The day after the film was first shown in Dallas The Dallas News said:

"As the Iliad of Homer is to an acrostic by a jokesmith, so is 'The Birth of a Nation' to the ordinary run of one-reel screen dramas.

"And just as the immortal epic of the Trojan war moves majectically through the regal splendors of the ancient poet's imagination, so the vivid imagery of the film artists threw its soul-wringing concepts upon the visualized consciousness of the large audiences at the Dallas Opera House last night. There were thrills and tears and pulsing pride mingled at a score of climactic moments with smiles and sighs and unclassified emotions. The press agents told us much in advance concerning this major effort of the photographic dramatists, but they could not convey to us a complete appreciation of the picture's obvious fidelity, nor the dash and spirit of the spectacle. Indeed, perhaps they failed to impress us with the magnitude of the portraiture, or with the astonishing realism in which were set as in a frame the most tragic episodes of our national life.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is history in motion—a wonderful counterfeit presentment of those tempestuous years when the union of states was being reborn, in unfathomed pain, into an indivisible unity of nationalistic purpose. Possibly there are incidents here and there upon the moving page which do not accord with our personal traditions or preferences, whether we be of the South or of the North by nativity. Also there are glimpses into a black inferno which we would in free choice avoid, but back of each incident, and all of them, is substantial historic justification, and it may be that we should not flinch at the sight in pictures of that which our forbears felt in every fiber of their hearts.

"But if there are scenes we would edit out, there are besides granite-thick basreliefs of sweet sentiment and martial splendors. Throughout the whole rolling panorama there are opportunities to indulge the most intense satisfaction, for into it are woven every thread that order of Americanism which is best interpreted by those Americans who experienced in fact those tragedies which we of later generations experience only in pictures.

"It is impossible quickly to render a critical judgment of this offering as a theatrical performance. That may come later, for there are to be many presentations of this production here. It will suffice for the present to say that the lavish expenditure of money necessary to produce this master film comprehended not only great crowds of miscellaneous actors, but also a cast of principals of the highest quality. These gave to the more intimate scenes a personality and a charm which seemed almost to reach out and grasp the heartstrings of those who sat in witness.

"A massive and virile play it is, and one to see over and over again. D. W. Griffiths is the central spirit in the making of the piece, and the second part is founded upon Thomas Dixon's well-known novel, 'The Clansman.'

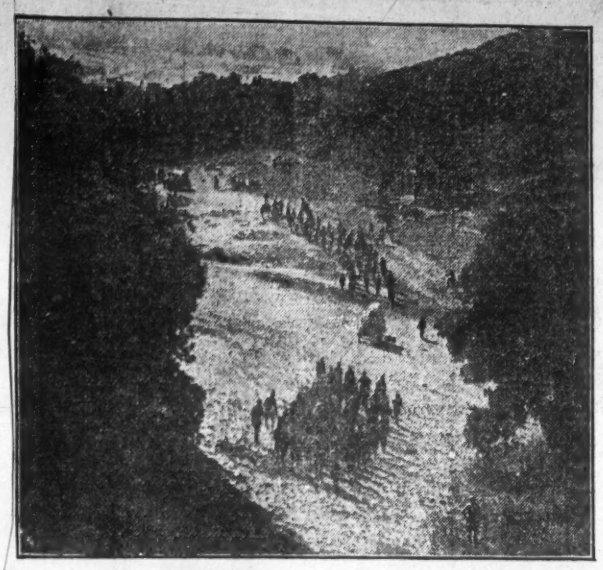
"The entire play is worked out with great care as to historical detail, and the parts are taken by actors of experience both in photodrama and on the stage. Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Robert Harroun, Miriam Cooper and other well-known stars of the motion picture screen have parts in the vast production.

"The musical accompaniment of the film drama is deserving of particular commendation. It is furnished by an excellent symphony orchestra of forty pieces, especially trained and equipped to furnish appropriate and natural accompaniments of incidental sounds and music with the silent drama of the screen."

Beaumont Enterprise Oct 25

207

Sherman's March to the Sea



Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Kyle theatre Wednesday night, is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, drear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the south. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

Spartanburg Herald Oct 25 15

BIRTH OF NATION MARVELOUS PICTURE

The War Between the States in Most Stupendous Picture Ever Made. At Harris Theater.

No one can tell you what "The Birth of a Nation" is—you have to see it—and then you do not know. It is the most marvelous motion picture the world has ever seen. It is a masterpiece of art. It makes the most emotional appeal ever made from a stage, beyond doubt, and it is therefore, not surprising that it is a national sensation.

It puts on the screen the south before the war; the war between the states, real war it is, too; the surrender at Appomattox; the assassination of Lincoln, as it actually happened; reconstruction days in South Carolina; the rise of the Ku Klux Klan, and through all there is romance so appealing the tears flow unbidden.

The picture was shown at the Harris theatre last night for the first time in South Carolina, where much of the scene is laid and where there still live many men who took part in the dreadful story that is told. It will be shown this afternoon, tonight, tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night.

As is stated in the beginning, you cannot be told what this picture is. And, furthermore, you can scarcely believe it after you have looked upon it, because it is so overwhelming, so stupendous, so marvelously dreadful, and yet so true, one's brain must be given time for its conception. As someone has said, "You see, as the angels looking down from Heaven must have seen, exactly what took place 50 years ago."

Dr. Snyder's Comment.

The moving picture story of "The Birth of a Nation," produced at Harris theatre last night, was pronounced a great piece of work by Dr. Henry N. Snyder, president of Wofford college, in commenting upon the picture last night.

"The pictures visualize a very important historic era," said Dr. Snyder. "They are thrilling and intensely interesting. I am not certain in my own mind just whether they are overdone or not. I am also a little doubtful as to whether the picture should be produced in the south just at this time. They would, I am sure, do more good in the north just now, where they would permit the northern people to see just what the south went through. The production, however, is a great piece of work."

Should Be Seen.

Dr. J. A. Tillinghast, professor of history at Converse college, addressed the following comment on the picture to The Herald last night:

Tditor of The Herald:

I have just seen "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Harris theatre. It is a wonderful achievement, undoubtedly, as an effort to show in vivid panorama the drama that once was going on in stern reality among us, with a strange and fierce mixture of emotions, purposes, hopes, sacrifices, revenges, romance—a drama on which the curtain fell so long ago that now few survive who saw it to remember it. The effort to tell this story in picture, accompanied by music as the constant reminder of many things that melody serves curiously to keep alive in us, is an effort probably reaching the summit in moving picture art.

I am moved to say a word about it in this public manner for fear many young people, knowing far too little of their country's history and not likely to learn it from books, may miss this opportunity to learn a good deal that they would not soon forget. They may miss it merely for lack of understanding what it is. I feel, since seeing it, that all who can possibly afford to see it should do so.

J. A. TILLINGHAST.

Richmond Ev Journal Oct 25

THE LITTLE COLONEL

HENRY WALTHALL,
Who takes a leading part in the production of "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Academy all next week.

Richmond Ev Journal Oct 25

TICKET SALE ON FOR BIG FILM SPECTACLE

Memories of the palmy days of the theater, when the box office was seldom without a line of waiting patrons and the "S. R. O." sign was never allowed to accumulate dust, were stirred by scenes of activity at the Academy of Music this morning when the seat sale for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" next week opened with an unprecedented rush.

Playgoers of high and low degree took their places in the line as the sale continued through the day, making deep inroads into the tickets for the eleven performances to be given by the company next week. The term company is used advisedly because the services of fifty people are employed in each presentation. There are twenty musicians in the traveling organization, and these, with ten local musicians, will make up the orchestra of thirty pieces to be heard at each performance at the Academy.

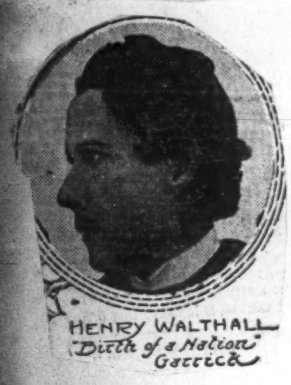
A new standard of stage realism has been set by D. W. Griffith in his spectacle of the Reconstruction, "The Birth of a Nation." Instead of a small company of actors he employed a cast of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. He staged a private war of gigantic proportions and built a whole city, only to destroy it afterward by way of representation of the burning of Atlanta.

Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the heated Yankees. Up the hills they rush—men, women and little children—in endless parade of misery, fear and hopelessness.

St Louis Times Oct 13

"The Birth of a Nation" Begins Third Month.

The remarkable St. Louis run of D. W. Griffith's notable photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," may now be numbered in months, as on Monday it will break into the third month of its sensational engagement in this city. Just how long it will remain at the Garrick no one can predict, but judging from the continued capacity attendance, and as well from the record of what the photo-drama is doing in the other large cities of the country, the big spectacle will be with us for several weeks to come. The popularity of the piece in this city is representative of its success in every other large center where it has been presented. Just as it has broken all records for length of run and volume of attendance here, so it has done everywhere. No stage offering has been so widely discussed as "The Birth of a Nation," and none has met with such national approval.



HENRY WALTHALL
"Birth of a Nation"
Garrick

Pittsburg Union Life Oct 13

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

Next Monday at the Miles Theater "The Birth of a Nation" will enter on the ninth week of its success in this city. To all appearances its popularity is undiminished and its future here assured for weeks to come. The true greatness of this masterpiece lies in its emotional appeal, an appeal so forceful that it lifts you out of your seat and thrills you as the speaking drama never did and probably never will. Those who have lived the stretch of years represented by "The Birth of a Nation" have gone on record as saying that no one of its 5,000 pictures are in any essential an exaggeration. They are one and all faithful to historic fact so that looking upon them you may feel that you are beholding that which actually happened. What more convincing proof of the play's fascination and appeal does one require beyond the fact that throughout this country it has already been seen by over 5,000,000 people?

N.Y. Comercial Oct 13

"The Birth of A Nation" remains at the Liberty where it has been running consecutively for 36 weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest.

Chicago Examiner Oct 13

Movie Star Too Young to See Self in Film

Would you believe it? A star barred out of her own theater? If it's true it's news and the press agent vouches for the story. Here are the facts as he related them last night:

Miss Mae Marsh, star in the film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Colonial Theater, stopped over in Chicago yesterday to see the picture in which she takes such a prominent part. She was scheduled to make a speech at the evening performance, but management and star overlooked a very important factor in their plans. The city ordinance limits the audience to those over twenty-one years old. Miss Marsh is nineteen and looks even younger.

When she attempted to enter the theater a Pinkerton guard refused her admittance. Protests were futile and Miss Marsh was compelled to forego her evening's entertainment. She appeared at the theater after the performance, however, and addressed the audience.

Evening Sun Oct 13

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" continues at this theatre, where it has turned its ninth month. Mr. Griffith's epic narrative has broken all records for the length of its run excepting the one held by Henry E. Dixey in "Adonis," which was made nearly thirty years ago. With the past week "The Birth of a Nation" registered 628 consecutive presentations of the great spectacle in New York. It will remain at the Liberty for an indefinite term and will positively not be seen at any other theatre in Manhattan during this engagement.

Globe & Com. Oct 13

LIBERTY—"The Birth of a Nation" remains at the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running consecutively for thirty-six weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest.

POWERFUL PICTURE SAYS DR. WALLACE

Wofford Faculty Member Deeply Impressed With Stupendousness of "Birth of a Nation."

"The stupendousness of the thing perhaps stands out above everything else," said last night Dr. D. D. Wallace, professor of history and economics, at Wofford college, commenting on the historical photo-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," being shown at Harris theatre.

"Why, sir, in giving my opinion of the "Birth of a Nation," the first thing that impresses me—I can't say that exactly either; for so many things impress me so powerfully that I hardly know where to start," said Dr. Wallace. "The stupendousness of the thing perhaps stands out above everything else. I was very much in the same state of mind as a prominent minister who sat near me; he seemed unable to believe that he had actually seen what he had. It seemed impossible that such a stupendous drama could have been placed within the four walls of a house. I was swept along on the mighty current of the years from 1860 to 1876 with mind and emotions at such a pitch that I fele like I need a rest.

"I believe that any man, no matter what his prominence, who had lived through the great tragedy of the war and reconstruction would understand it better for seeing 'The Birth of a Nation.' That is the service of the artist; he makes us understand life like we had not understood it before. I just thought as I sat there seeing the thrilling romance, the dramatic power, the mighty passions of men, that have made our history, 'How blind and dull we are to the greatness, the deep springs of motive, of the life we live in. Every American is indebted to those who have made our history so vivid. Its grip will stay with me as long as I can remember.

"Of course from the standpoint of technical skill, many of the high-class pictures leave little to be desired. "The Birth of the Nation" is wonderful in this regard. The get-up of the leading actors makes one feel as though Lee, Grant, Lincoln, Thad Stevens, Stanton, Seward, Andrew Johnson were actually before you.

"Yes, there are some horrible things in it; but there are some horrible things in life, and I don't know that we are going to get rid of them by pretending that they are not there. Taken all in all, it is something that no American, certainly no southern man or woman, can afford not to see. I took the whole family except the baby, and if it comes along after she's big enough, I'll take her, too."

Chicago News Oct 13

MAY MARSH VISITOR IN CHICAGO.

She's Girl Who Makes Everybody Cry in "Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh arrived yesterday with her mother from New York en route to California, where she will rejoin her friends at the Griffith studio after an absence of a month. Although this actress has been seen for several years on the screen and especially attracted a good deal of attention in "The Birth of a Nation," she almost slipped by a party of newspaper writers and members connected with the management of David W. Griffith's play, who waited at the Union station to meet her. When she was discovered and greetings concluded, George Bowles, manager of the Colonial theater, started the visitors on a tour of the city.

MAE MARSH.
[Photoplay studio photo.]

"I didn't enjoy my trip east at all," said Miss Marsh. "I've been ill most of the time."

One man remarked that her scene in "The Birth of a Nation" where she jumps off the cliff was responsible for black and blue marks which he carried on his arm. "A young woman who accompanied me to the theater Wednesday evening became so excited when that scene appeared that she dug her nails into my arm," said the injured man.

"I'm so sorry," sympathized Miss Marsh. "You know as I was leaving New York, a little girl recognized me and said, 'Are you the lady who makes everybody cry.'" Of course I try to play the parts as I think they ought to be played and as Mr. Griffith coaches me."

Miss Marsh said that in the next Griffith spectacle, "The Woman and the Law," she will play the leading female role and Robert Harron the leading male part.

Miss Marsh was taken by automobile over the boulevards and through the parks. This was her first stopover here. In one of the parks she was photographed feeding the squirrels. A similar episode appears in "The Birth of a Nation." Last night she attended the Colonial theater and addressed the audience. She leaves to-night for the Pacific coast.

News Leader Richmond Oct 13

"The Birth of a Nation" an Inspiring Story of Romance, Love and Patriotism in "Times That Tried Men's Souls"

A Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," Showing the Christening of the First Confederate Flag.

W. D. Griffith's Motion Picture Spectacle Will Be Shown at the Academy of Music Week With the Same Musical Accompaniment and Mechanical Effects That Were Used in New York, Where the Production Scored Such a Huge Success.

Heralded by the praises of scores of RICHMOND people who witnessed the spectacle in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Atlantic City and other large cities during the summer, as well as its record-smashing runs in those cities, "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Academy of Music Monday night to begin a week's engagement. Daily matinees will be given after Monday, making eleven performances in all.

The big Griffith spectacle is expected to establish a new record at the Academy. The management is urging patrons to obtain seats for the early performances. In other cities there has been much congestion and disappointment, due to the tendency of patrons to wait for the week-end performances. The matinees will be at 2:30 and the evening performances at 8:15.

Griffith New Art Creator.

So entirely different is "The Birth of a Nation" from anything that the American stage has ever known that its producer, D. W. Griffith, has been hailed by critics as the creator of a new art. Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: a new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation" as no other filmed play—not even "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis?"—had been put on. He used half a great state for his locale; 150 years of American history as his subject; 18,000 people as his actors; 3,000 riders and steeds as his cavalry; 5,000 scenes instead of a few score or a few hundred.

Suggested by "The Clansman."

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of Civil war and reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's, "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill.

For the first time in theatrical history a motion spectacle is being presented as a regular attraction at regular prices in regular first-class playhouses. The success speaks for itself. The Griffith drama come here with a baggage equipment of two sixty-foot cars, a complete staff, including mechanical experts and stage crew, and a large symphonic orchestra regularly carried on tour—a company of fifty people altogether.

An Enormous Cast.

The story embraces beautiful romances of the blue and the gray; Ben Cameron, the clansman, and his Northern sweetheart, Elsie; Captain Phil Stoneman, U. S. A., and sweet Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie.

Among the principals of the largest cast ever assembled for a dramatic entertainment are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lew, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Henaberry, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, John McGlynn, Ernest Campbell, John French and J. A. Beringer.

N.Y. Tribune Oct 13

"Birth of a Nation" Near Its 37th Week

"The Birth of a Nation" remains at the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running consecutively for thirty-six weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest in Griffith's powerful narative of the conditions in American history that led to the opening and closing of the Civil War of the early 60s. The great battlefields, the assassination of Lincoln, the surrender of General Lee at Apomattox and the thrilling events which settled the grave questions involved in the final adjustment of the slavery issues and the welding of the nation into its present unity are the high lights in an illumination of history unlike anything ever presented upon the American stage.

Eve. Mail Oct 13

"Birth of a Nation" Continues.

"The Birth of a Nation" remains at the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running consecutively for 36 weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest in Griffith's powerful narrative of the conditions in American history that led to the opening and closing of the Civil War of the early sixties. The great battle fields, the assassination of Lincoln, the surrender of General Lee at Appomatox and the thrilling events which settled the grave questions involved in the final adjustment of the slavery issues and the welding of the nation into its present unity are the high lights in an illumination of history unlike anything ever presented upon the American stage.

Kansas City Post Oct 13

"BIRTH OF A NATION" FILM IN CENSORED

At the request of a large delegation of negroes, Mayor Jost last night viewed the film "The Birth of a Nation," to be shown at the Grand theater next week.

Complaint was made the film would incite racial prejudice. The negroes asked that the film be barred from Kansas City. Mayor Jost ordered fourteen eliminations. After these small parts are eliminated the theater will be permitted to put on its production tomorrow as scheduled.

FILM SPECTACLE HAS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Griffith's Gigantic Photo Drama to Be Seen Here All Next Week

Richmond playgoers will have their long-awaited opportunity to witness D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music all next week. The company, including a symphony orchestra of thirty and a score of electricians and stage mechanics, will begin its engagement Monday night, and during its stay will give two performances daily at 2:30 and 8:15 P. M. Seats are now selling at the box office for all performances.

The spectacle will be seen at the Academy exactly as it is being shown in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago and other large cities, where it has broken all records for length of runs. Its engagement is a distinct event for the reason that it has been seen in very few of the smaller cities up to this time. The company coming to the Academy is the only one on tour and most of its season is to be spent in long runs in Atlanta, New Orleans and the principal cities of Texas.

In producing "The Birth of a Nation" Mr. Griffith has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of Slavery, the War of Secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of Reconstruction, and the restoration of the South to its own. These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion picture camera. The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast. Within 12,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and dignified presentment of national upgrowth with a real and human love story based on Thomas Dixon's book romance, "The Clansman." As it appears to the newspaper and magazine critics, Mr. Griffith has not only surpassed the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-style history or historical novel. The best characterization of it so far is that of a very eminent public man who has called it "History by lightning."

Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 people in taking these historical pictures. The battle scenes were actual duplicates of several of the Civil War conflicts, and so were the facsimiles of important events. We see Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for volunteers, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the Freedmen's Bureau, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the Ku Klux. The realism is almost uncanny. Often the old war shouts are heard in the audiences from the lips of veterans who momentarily forget that it is only a picture. It is hard to keep one's feet from dancing to the well-beloved tunes of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the pictures are so skilfully managed that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development, the old dramatic form having been thrown away and the epic or historical form substituted. The old reproach against the "ten-cent movie" is forever removed. It is a curious sight now in New York to see dozens of speculators asking three and four dollars a seat for a moving picture, whilst inside at the box office the public gladly pays the regular scale of prices at a fashionable metropolitan theater.

The labor involved in this newest

Houston Chronicle Oct 7 3

Last Chance to See "Birth of a Nation"

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama," is illustrated by the Ford's Theatre scene in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Prince Theatre. The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's Theatre in April, 1865, but also the auditorium of the theatre, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin Booth who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the box draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is meant by the so-called "new art" for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinated horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous art achievements of the film drama.

FLICKERINGS from FILM LAND

'How Do You Do? I'm Here—Good-By'

BY KITTY KELLY.

THE blithe bit of a Mae Marsh herself, all wrapped up in a fleecy terra cotta hued coat, with square black hat, baby beaver trimmed, nestling low on her fair hair with its reddish gleams, went riding around in Chicago yesterday. And she knocked a beautiful theory in the head.

The big limousine paused for a few minutes before the Colonial theater, and a favored few slipped out and paid their respects to the little screen star, but most of the world rambled right along unthinkingly, just as if it were any old limousine instead of one glorified by one of the celluloid's best ever.

Miss Marsh wasn't allowed to dismount. Not that she showed any signs of wanting to, for she was to be sprung as a specialty at the evening performance and there was no intention of upsetting a good program.

Miss Marsh is on her way home from New York, where she has been spending her first vacation after two years of hard, hard work. She leaves tonight for Los Angeles, with stopoffs at the Grand cañon and in Mexico in prospect. With her is her mother, who wears the same flame shot hair and seems in years like an elder sister.

She affirmed yesterday, as per custom that she liked Chicago very much, though at the time of the affirmation she had been here about an hour.

Things began with her remark about her coat, a delectably soft, muffly thing of burnt red coloring that nestled up almost to her ears.

"I hope you don't think this is awfully 'loud,'" she explained. "I'm afraid it is, but I can't help it now. See, isn't this the cutest thing about it?" She unflapped the shrouding fold from her neck and pointed to a gray oblong at the collar place. "That's suede really suede," and she fingered it affectionately.

"Yet, I got it in New York; but, no, I didn't get many things. There were, O, so many wonderful things that one wanted. Dorothy Gish and I just went crazy over them. But, of course, I couldn't have them, so I just bought the 'loudest' coat I could find, and had to be content with that."

"O" and I was truly, properly amazed, "I thought screen stars could buy anything they wanted."

"Well, not that I know of," declared Miss Mae Marsh decidedly, as if amazed at the notion that such affluence existed—whereat a regular dear old theory fell on the limousine floor, smashed into bits.

The news was broken that she was to speak in the intermission at the evening performance. "O, why, I don't know anything to say," she protested. "I've never been on the stage and I've no idea how to behave. I'll just have to say, 'How do you do? I'm here. Good-by!'"

"'The Mother and the Law' isn't quite finished yet," she explained, mentioning Griffith's next big feature, on which he began work some time last winter. "I'll be in a few scenes that have to be taken after I get back—prologue scenes. I don't know whether the public will like it so well or not. The public likes ingénues, and in this I start out as an ingénue, and then I'm grown up and have a baby, and it dies and there's lots of trouble."

"And do you die?"

"O, my goodness, no!" Mae Marsh bounced up vigorously. "For once, I don't die, and I can't remember a picture in which I haven't. Dear me, I hope this one will be successful. There are just the three of us in it—Miss Cooper and Bobby [meaning gentle reader, Robert Harron], and myself."

Other people came along then to shake the young lady's hand and beam into her bright eyes, but not before she had confided the astonishing news that she had stayed a while in Denver and had gained so much until she actually weighed a hundred pounds!

BULLETIN—9 P. M.

It seems pretty tough to spoil a good press agent story—they are so scarce—but it is even tougher to spoil a good interview by Kitty Kelly.

Last night, long after Miss Kelly had turned in her story, the Colonial p. a. had an inspiration. As Miss Kelly has said in the foregoing chat with Mae Marsh, the latter really was afraid to go on the stage and talk.

"Why not take advantage of that and pull off something that will make the city editors put it on page one?" cogitated the p. a.

He phoned the door ticket man at the Colonial. Then, some time later, when Miss Marsh, accompanied by George Bowles and two or three reporters, marched into the Colonial theater lobby they met a stern rebuff from the gold laced ticket collector.

"Nix on this kid stuff," he said, holding up a No. 12 white glove.

"But I'm manager of this theater," said Mr. Bowles, hiding a smile from the puzzled Miss Marsh, "and this isn't any kid."

"You know what I mean. This ain't no joke. She's under 21, and the city won't let no kids see this here filium. Get me?"

"But she wants to see herself act and give the fans a spiel," said Mr. Bowles, pitifully. "Why, this is terrible! Think of what the papers will say! Isn't this outrageous?" and Mr. Bowles turned an appealing eye on the reporters. They grinned and nodded.

His entrance nibs merely winked the eye farthest from Miss Marsh and said cheerfully:

"Well, this ain't no kid. She ain't goin' in."

Miss Marsh really blushed.

"Well, I'm not 21, and, anyway, I'd rather go and see a real show," and she marched down the street to a musical comedy in the next block, where the box office man cares not whether you were born in 1894 or 1914.

And the bevy of 18 year old ushers at the Colonial all chuckled when they heard the story.

MAE MARSH

* *

Loop Features.

Three things are keeping right on. "The Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial shows no signs of pausing. "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Olympic is a busy house, and Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen" is making the new Strand popular. "Carmen" will remain there for the next two weeks.

Galveston Tribune Oct 7 3

"The Birth of a Nation."

The sale of seats for "The Birth of a Nation," which opens at the Grand Opera House Sunday night and continues Monday and Tuesday matinees and nights, started off with a jump Friday morning and to those who anticipate seeing this great attraction, are advised not to wait, but to secure their seats early and not wait until the last minute.

D. W. Griffith's great production, "The Birth of a Nation," has broken so many records that it is hard to keep track of them. For the length of its run and the total attendance it holds the season's record in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlantic City, Brighton Beach and Seattle, Wash. These records are being added to in numerous other cities where the big spectacle is now piling up unprecedented to substantiate its marvelous popularity.

Mr. Griffith utilized a full operatic score for the first time in its true relationship to the enlargement of his varied themes. It is the Wagnerian idea fitted to the screen drama and the synchronization was so perfectly adapted to this story that it became a very important part of the epical form of narrative. The score was arranged by Joseph Carl Breil, who spent months with Mr. Griffith while he was making the picture and caught his thematic ideas in snatches of tune that Griffith would hum while he was working out his big dramatic ideas. It is perhaps the most unusual score ever devised, but is a wonderful feature in the production.

Danville Bee Oct 7 3

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

This Great Spectacle Will Be Seen at The Majestic Nov. 1, 2, 3.

"The Birth of a Nation," the mighty spectacle which combines music, motion pictures and retalistic stage effects in a re-enactment of the story of the South's reconstruction, is announced as the next important offering at the Majestic Theatre—and probably the most important offering of the season. The engagement is for three days, beginning Monday night, Nov. 1 and continuing Tuesday and Wednesday. Daily matinees will be given except on Monday, when the entire day is given over to the installation of the company's carload of scenery, stage effects and electrical equipment.

To play-goers who read the magazines and big city newspapers, "The Birth of a Nation" needs no introduction. They know of it as the attraction that has broken all records in New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities during the last eight months. It has been at the Liberty Theatre, New York, since last February and will probably remain there the rest of the winter.

The company which comes to the Majestic will open a week's engagement at the Academy of Music, Richmond, next Monday night. The company carries twenty musicians, and these are augmented with local artists, giving a symphony orchestra of thirty wherever the spectacle is shown. Twenty electricians and mechanics are employed in attaining the stage effects, so that insead of being a "picture show, as it is sometimes characterized by the uninformed, the services of fifty flesh-and-blood people are employed in each presentation.

The story, taken from "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon, is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme, but a myriad of details illumine the narrative.

The seat sale for the Majestic Theatre engagement will open at Booth's drug store Wednesday morning.

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Whose genius made possible "The Birth of a Nation," the great historical spectacle which comes to the Majestic, Nov. 1, 2 and 3.

Telegraph Oct 7 3

LIKES TO DANCE

No, Not Pavlowa, but David W. Griffith is Meant.

Strange as it may seem, David W. Griffith, who created the spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," finds his greatest pleasure in dancing. "Note the fighting people of the world," says he. "Everyone of them is a dancer. All the great conquests have been won by dancing people, and all the great achievements of man have been wrought by nations that dance."

And to everyone who meets him Griffith gives the impression of being one of those persons who achieve something. He seems a born commander, and it is said of him that "he lives under his hat." The meaning of this is that he is an out-of-doors man to a great extent, but even when he is indoors at the studio he wears his hat, for any moment he may be rushing off to rehearse some group in an exterior scene, or to direct a photographer in the open. It is said of him, too, that he wears as many as fifty hats a day, with a favorite in an enormous Panama to shade his eyes, and to keep away the heat of the Los Angeles Sun. He is always in fit condition, and, indeed, he would have to be so, for he is always working at top speed. He is up at 6 o'clock every morning. At 8 or 9 o'clock he has begun his day's work, and he does not let up, if it is necessary, until midnight.

Chicago Herald Ex

Seen on the Screen

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

EVERY one stood expectantly on tiptoe at the Union station. Mae Marsh, the little sister, in "The Birth of a Nation," was scheduled to arrive from New York on the 2 o'clock train. We saw her last asleep in her comn, now we were going to see her with the flush of health and in real life. We waited, the crowd rushed through the gates, then George Bowles saw a little figure gowned in a severe black tailored suit and white blouse come toward us.

"There she is," he said, "and with another girl. I guess her mother didn't come."

But her mother did come. The slender, attractive girl, chatting with the little actress, was Mrs. Marsh, mother of the famous Mae.

"Did all these people come to meet me," she exclaimed joyously. "Isn't it lovely. I want to see Chicago, I have heard so much about it and I have never had a peep at the city only during an hour or so spent at a railway station."

Seeing Chicago was the first thing on the program. We all went with the Marshes to register at the Congress, and then for a little spin in Lincoln Park, where Mae found some squirrels to feed and scenes to admire. She had her picture taken, too, and only stopped long enough to adjust the black three-cornered beaver trimmed hat and to fasten her white gloves.

There is nothing affected about little sister. She is a delightfully modest, plain, every day little girl. Her hair, golden with a glint of red, and her Irish blue eyes, almost black in coloring, remind one in an elusive manner of Billie Burke. Being famous is new to her and she revels in interviews and in being photographed and having the bystanders say, "That's Mae Marsh," and stare after her with a curiosity born of a friendly interest in this girl whom they have seen so often in the movies.

—[Photo by Burke & Atwell.
MAE MARSH.

There is nothing passe to her nor is any incident a bore to this wonderfully alive and happy little lady. Even a "white wings" leaning on his broom and staring into the limousine got a gleeful laugh from Miss Marsh.

Miss Marsh told us about Griffith's new production, "The Mother and the Law." She is to play the lead.

"I am the mother," she said, in a voice that has just the suggestion of an Irish brogue. "Bobby Harron is the father and Miriam Cooper is the bad lady. There will not be as many principal characters as in 'The Birth of a Nation,' and the only battle scenes are in the prologue. Mr. Griffith may call it 'Intolerance.' Isn't that a terrible name! We hope to see it on the screen in four months."

"What about your absence?"

"That won't make any difference," was the reply. "It is such a huge thing that they can take other scenes until I return. I was ill. Simply worn out, and I had to go to New York to rest."

Some one mentioned the pleasant fact that Mr. Griffith had announced in Chicago that Mae Marsh was, in his estimation, the best screen actress of the day.

"He didn't mean exactly that," was the reply. "He considers every company needs a beauty- a girl who is a good heavy type and a girl who can act in any role. Miss Gish has the beauty, Miss Cooper can play heavies, and I ought to have something," she said, naively, "so I have to be the one who can always act."

Miss Marsh and Henry Walthall appeared at the conclusion of "The Birth of a Nation" last evening at the Colonial Theater and spoke to the audience. Miss Marsh had expected to witness the performance earlier in the evening but as she was about to step in the theater two policemen barred the way. Her age, which is 19, prevented the little star from seeing her own performance.

She was allowed to enter however at the end of the film.

Chicago Post Art

Miss Marsh Peeved; Doorman Obdurate

By Mildred Joclyn.

They wouldn't let Mae Marsh in at the Colonial last evening to see the show in which she has one of the leading parts! Funny thing about those censors, isn't it? But, anyway, pretty little Miss Marsh, with her adorable smile and sweet, winsome ways, pleaded very sweetly with the stern and forbidding detective whose chief business just now is to keep children under 21 from the Colonial, where "The Birth of the Nation" is showing, but she pleaded in vain. Even her threats availed nothing, for when she told him she was playing in the picture and threatened to "take it up with the proper authorities" he gave her carte blanche to see the mayor, the President of the United States of George Bowles, the manager, whom she thinks is bigger than any of 'em—in fact, anyone—but he, and that should be spelled to correspond with capital I, wouldn't let her in. And he didn't. The last I saw of her she had her nose pressed against the squares of glass in the French doors in the foyer watching a bit wistfully the grave curtsies of the colonial maidens in the foyer.

Those who have seen Miss Marsh in her best pictures have a faint conception of her undeniable charm, but it would be hard to conceive a more adorable little artist—shy, extremely modest and very clever. Miss Marsh isn't exactly pretty—not very much pretty—but she is a highly interesting young person with a grave little head set on a pair of shoulders that really don't look big enough for a doll. She is just one of those tiny little morsels of femininity that you want to take and cuddle in your arms—she is only 19, you know—but then when she starts to talk you realize that she is a big girl, grown up and way past that cuddly stage—at least, as far as women are concerned.

Miss Marsh arrived from New York yesterday afternoon, where she has been for a month on her first vacation in two years, and she expects to leave tomorrow or the next day for Hollywood, Cal., where she and her mother make their home.

MAE MARSH,
"Birth of a Nation," Colonial, who is seeing Chicago today for the first time.

St. Louis Republic Ex

Ku-Klux Klan Constitution Preserved by St. Louisan

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation"

Original Document, Which Belonged to Husband, Member of the Band, in Possession of Mrs. Philip Chew.

INTEREST in the Ku-Klux Klan which has been re-awakened by the production of the "Birth of a Nation," now at the Garrick, has brought to light an original constitution of the clan which belonged to Philip Chew, Civil War veteran and member of the Ku-Klux organization during the reconstruction period.

Mrs. Chew, of 5280 Washington avenue, widow of Mr. Chew, who died six years ago, declared the constitution was drawn in the handwriting of Senator George of Mississippi, who was president of the Primary Council of the clan, to which Mr. Chew belonged.

The constitution limited the membership to gentlemen of "unimpeachable character." A clause provided that "the habitual drunkard is never to be accepted" as a member.

Maintenance of the political supremacy of the white race and restoration and preservation of the Constitution of the United States were stated to be the prime objects of the organization. The constitution follows:

(Name revealed upon initiation.)

Article I—Objects.

First—Restoration and preservation of the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States under it by peaceful and lawful means.

Second—To maintain the political supremacy of the white race by the same means.

Article II—Organization.

First—Into councils of five or more members, whose officers—president, first and second vice presidents, secretary and treasurer—constitute the Executive Committee, invested with full legislative powers, subject to control of full council, which may be called upon application of five members.

Second—When seven or more councils are organized this may (upon call of Senior Council, which shall name time and place of assembly for Grand Council) form a Grand council of the State, composed of one delegate selected by each council or its Executive Committee. Its objects shall be to establish organization and shape the policy of the State at large. Organization same as Primary Council, but no Executive Committee.

Third—Central Committee of five to be selected from members at large by Grand Council, and one of the Ku-Klux Klan.

Henry Walthall, a Southern [illegible] Council, got exclusive of its own de[illegible] who might operate on its powers [illegible] tion 22d by notification to Grand [illegible] convene the Grand Council. This [illegible] may transact business at any time [illegible] or manner it pleases, and shall [illegible] through its chief, who shall be [illegible] by grand council when it selects [illegible] Committee. This committee shall be [illegible] to control of Grand Council. Its [illegible] supreme.

Fourth—Grand Council of State [illegible] a Federal Council by selecting one [illegible] from each State. This power act [illegible] ercised by Central Committee. Organ[illegible]zation as that of Primary Committee [illegible] there shall be but one vice president.

Article III—Obligation.

Members, on initiation, shall be [illegible] affirm upon the honor of gentlemen [illegible]

First—Not to reveal existence of [illegible] tion.

Second—To do all in their power [illegible] mote its objects.

Article IV—Membership and [illegible]

None but men of unimpeached [illegible] for honor, integrity and courage [illegible] admitted. The habitual drunkard [illegible] be accepted. Before a man is [illegible] his name shall be proposed by [illegible] ber to Executive Committee; it [illegible] unanimously accept him he shall be [illegible] unanimously by designated members [illegible] found favorably disposed, without [illegible] may be initiated, by any two of [illegible] tive Committee, and being a [illegible] vice president, and details given [illegible] explained.

Article V—Funds.

If funds should be needed they [illegible] raised by voluntary contribution [illegible]

Article VI—Term of Office.

Officers of Primary Council, [illegible] until successors elected. Other officers [illegible] delegates to G. Council, two years. [illegible] Primary Council may withdraw [illegible] state at pleasure and send another. [illegible] Primary, G. or F. Councils, may [illegible] for cause, any officer appointed by [illegible] fill vacancies of expel members.

Members to have privilege of with[illegible] but must keep their knowledge of [illegible] graduation secret. Chief of Exchequer [illegible] all to be notified of all changes of [illegible] and vice presidents in Primary Council [illegible] their secretaries.

Article VII.

One or more members may be [illegible] by any Executive Committee [illegible] members and establish new council [illegible] over a new council is formed in [illegible] shall report to Executive Committee [illegible] eral Council until Central Council [illegible] formed, when new council shall report [illegible] to its chief.

Mr. Chew always was proud [illegible] ing been a member of the [illegible] clan. He joined it in his native [illegible] at Lexington, Miss., and was a [illegible] member during its existence.

HOW GRIFFITH DOES IT
Here is the producer of "The Birth of a Nation" rehearsing one of the scenes in that [illegible] his associates

Petersburg D. Progress Oct 23

"The Battle of the Crater"—One of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music, Richmond, next week, showing Petersburg at the height of the invasion.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," the gigantic spectacle in which D. W. Griffith has reproduced Petersburg's "Battle of the Crater," will be presented at the Academy of Music, Richmond, all next week, beginning Monday night. Inasmuch as the spectacle is being presented in only the large cities and will not be shown in Petersburg, this will afford local people their only opportunity to witness the historical production which deals so intimately with the history of their home city.

As daily matinees are to be given, beginning Tuesday, the facilities for attending the performances in Richmond will be unusually good and it is expected that hundreds of Petersburg residents will make the journey during the week, combining shopping and other business, with three hours of dramatic entertainment that they will never forget. The matinees will begin at 2.30 and the night performances at 8.15 and seats are now selling at the Academy box office for all performances. They can be obtained by mail at the regular prices, to be found in an advertisement printed elsewhere in this edition of the PROGRESS.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be presented in Richmond exactly as it is being seen at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and in the principal theatres of Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago. The services of fifty people are employed, as well as a symphony orchestra of thirty people and the musical and stage effects have been pronounced the most wonderful ever heard in a theatre.

In staging the spectacle, Mr. Griffith used the great outdoors as his stage and employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. He took his story from "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's successful novel and play, but he dwarfed both so thoroughly that there is no comparison. Griffith has reproduced the great story of the Reconstruction; he has shown what the south suffered that a nation might be born and in the words of a certain high official at Washington, he has written history with lightning."

Richmond Leleg. Oct 24

"The Birth of a Nation" remains at the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running consecutively for thirty-six weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest in Griffith's powerful narrative of the conditions in American history that led to the opening and closing of the Civil War of the early sixties.

N.Y. Press Oct 24

Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" remains in the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running consecutively for thirty-six weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest in this narrative of the conditions in American history that led to the opening and closing of the civil war. The great battle fields, the assassination of Lincoln, the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox, the thrilling events which settled the grave questions involved in the final adjustment of the slavery issues and the welding of the Nation into its present unity are the high lights in the spectacle.

Civil War costume at "The Birth of a Nation, Liberty Theatre.

Morning Telegraph Oct 24

LILLIAN GISH
in "The Birth of a Nation"

N.Y. Herald Oct 24

"The Birth of a Nation" still is attracting many persons to the Liberty Theatre.

Petersburg Progress Oct 24

MILES.

Tomorrow at the Miles theater, "The Birth of a Nation" will commence the ninth week of its record-breaking success in this city. The magnitude of this spectacular dramatic production makes by all comparison all other theatrical offerings look inconsequential. There are shown hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors and horses; armies in landscape in place of squads of mere supers jostling on a platform among canvass scenery. Here is the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here are social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here is a whole art gallery of scenery of humanity, of still life and life in wildest career. Here are portraits of streets, homes, wilderness; pictures of famous conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies, pictures of family life, of festivals and funerals, ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower gardens, hypocracy and passion, ecstasy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny. Here is depicted the south in its wealth, its home luxury and wind-swept cotton-fields; here are shown its soldiers riding away to war and trudging home in defeat with poverty ahead of them and ghastly difficulties confronting them on every side.

At the Liberty Theatre, where for more than six months "The Birth of a Nation" has brought crowds from all parts of the city, there are girls in the dress of the late '60s, which is the period of this play. With their flaring skirts and lace flounces, their long curls and poke bonnets, they are like real specimens of maidenhood at the period of the picture play, which is that of the reconstruction. Anna Ryan is the crinoline girl who stands at the door of the theatre, while Frances Whelan, who is garbed in the same fashion but with differences in detail, is called the "Courtesy Girl." It might be added that all the dangers of the flaring crinoline are averted by long and elaborately decorated pantalettes.

And the ushers at the Century Theatre! When Ned Wayburn designed their uniforms he must have meant business. There is no clinging girl of the late crinoline period about them. They look like the most formidable of cops. Spectators watch their steps when these stern ladies step up.

Oct 24 Tel. Telegram

"The Birth of a Nation" remains at the Liberty Theatre, where it has been running consecutively for thirty-six weeks. There is no sign of slackening interest in Griffith's powerful narrative of the conditions in American history that led to the opening and closing of the civil war of the early sixties. The great battle fields, the assassination of Lincoln, the surrender of General Lee at Appomatox and the thrilling events which settled the grave questions involved in the final adjustment of the slavery issues and the welding of the nation into its present unity are the high lights in an illumination of history unlike anything ever before presented upon the American stage.

N.Y. American Oct 24

Mae Marsh, Clever Star, Tells of Her Ambitions

By THE MATINEE GIRL.

"I WROTE Mr. Griffith that Rockefeller has nothing on me."

Mae Marsh sent a gay little glance across the top of a glass of raspberry parfait.

"Then it pays to be a motion picture actress?"

"It pays so well that the first week I worked at it I wouldn't speak to any of the girls I had gone to school with."

"What was the sum that made a plutocrat of you?"

"Three dollars a day. I was sixteen. I had gone into the studio where my elder sister was posing, and when she wasn't looking I applied for a job. They told me to come back and see Mr. Griffith. I did, and got a job. So you see it isn't true that Mr. Griffith saw me . . . ying about the studio and saw possibilities of an actress in me. I saw him working at the studio and saw my f[ull] re possibilities in him."

Then she ceased jesting and became a serious young person, as she is—well, half the time. That she can be tremendously serious every one who has seen the little Southern girl fleeing from the negro pursuer in "The Birth of a Nation" knows. Mae Marsh looks as pensive as any pictured Madonna when she spoke of that tragic picture.

"I did the three scenes—my flight from the negro, my fall on the rocks and my death scene at home—in one afternoon," she said. "What an afternoon's work that was. I went home and went straight to bed without dinner. I couldn't eat. And I stayed in bed right round the clock twelve hours, to catch up in the race with my strength. Walter Long, the young man who plays the negro, is a good friend of mine, and a dear, nice chap, but when I looked over my shoulder and saw him, his face blackened, rushing toward me, I looked down the big rock and was really ready to jump from fright."

"But about you and Mr. Rockefeller?" I urged.

The California girl who has become so great a favorite in the Triangle pictures and who, D. W. Griffith predicts, will become a still greater one, sat primly in her chair at a luncheon table at the Knickerbocker Hotel and tried to look pompous. It was an effort that failed. Her face broke into an eddy of smiles and dimples.

MAE MARSH
in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—LIBERTY THEATRE

"I'm on a vacation," she said proudly. "I was allowed to come away for a month. On salary too, just as though I were working. Having the salary while not working I spent it. I had automobiles and flowers and went about shopping and sightseeing. We stayed at Brown's Palace. Mr. John D. Rockefeller was staying there. My automobile drew up behind his at the curb. It was as fine as his. I ate in the same dining room as he. One day I sat at the table next to his."

She drew her face into solemn lines to make me believe she was profoundly impressed by her proximity to the multimillionaire of the mining troubles. But she was not in the least impressed. If ever a girl belonged to the democracy of those who do, it is Mae Marsh. But she overflowed with the spirits of twenty and her vacation was an event of huge importance to her, as little events are when we are not big in years.

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 24

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ACADEMY ALL THE WEEK

With a score of electricians and mechanics preparing the playhouse for the reception of the massive "The Birth of a Nation" production when the company arrives to-night the Academy of Music has been a busy spot. Extensive changes in the stage and auditorium are necessitated by the coming of the spectacle that has enthralled New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, and neither effort nor expense is being spared by the local management to provide the company with proper facilities.

In the first place, a large block of seats must be removed from the rear of the orchestra floor, where a booth housing two large projecting machines and other electrical paraphernalia is to be installed. An optical expert sent in advance of the company measured to the fraction of an inch the distance necessary for proper focal adjustment in a theater of the dimensions of the Academy of Music.

Then the stage and orchestra pit require rearrangement. The bewildering array of equipment used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects requires every possible inch of space on the stage. Twenty men are employed "back-stage" in working the effects, not counting a squad of "supers" who do nothing but shout at the command of the stage director. And these commands, be it understood, are not spoken. Colored incandescents are scattered over the dozens of separate "props," and each is controlled from a switch not unlike the keyboard of a piano, which the director operates. The glimmer of a red light on a piece of equipment means to the trained handler that it is to be used for a certain effect, while an instant later, at the sign of a blue light, the same "prop" is to be used for an entirely different effect. The stage staff is kept at high tension throughout the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle, which they never see.

Thirty men in the orchestra, twenty of whom are carried by the company, will also require more room in the musicians' pit than is needed for the average attraction. The pit has been stripped of all its superfluous furnishings, and it may yet be necessary to place one of the harpists in a lower box, as has been done in other cities.

While the extent of the preparations necessary for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in a theater gives a fair idea of the massiveness of the production, it is only after one has witnessed the spectacle that he can appreciate its grandeur and realism. Some facts of its vastness are given herewith:

The play contains 5,000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 2,000 horses, cost $500,000 for actual production expense and took eight months to produce. The story is divided into two acts, and the total time of performance is two hours and forty minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the War Between the States are re-enacted. Atlanta, as it was in 1864, is built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant are shown at Appomattox. Ford's Theater, Washington, is reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Events of the reconstruction are pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku-Klux Klan riders [who] commandeered a county for a day. [The] women's dresses used 1,000 yards and Ku-Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Wonderful artillery duels are shown, in which real shells were used. One sees miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—and "war as it actually is."

This great spectacle and drama will be shown at the Academy of Music all the week, beginning to-morrow night, with a matinee every day after to-morrow.

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 24

"The Birth of a Nation"

D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle of peace and war, "The Birth of a Nation," will open at the Grand opera house tonight and will continue two daily thereafter for a limited engagement.

Produced during the fiftieth anniversary of the closing events of the Civil war, the play offers an unusually vivid portrayal of those epoch-making scenes. It is just half a century since Lee's surrender to Grant, and the terrible assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theater, Washington. Both of those events that stirred the nation to its depths are depicted by Mr. Griffith in so realistic a manner as to start with their realism even that fast accustomed few who were themselves a part of what was done in those momentous days.

The first half of the picture covers the entire period from 1860 to 1865 with massive battle scenes which by their horror accentuate the blessings of peace. The second half Mr. Griffith devotes to the soul-stirring drama of reconstruction. He shows the South in the clutch of the Carpetbagger and Scalawag and how it was saved by the Scottish Clans of the Carolinas. Here the dramatic power reaches its zenith.

This wonderful spectacle is made all the more impressive by the art of music. Interpreted by thirty picked musicians. Extensive mechanical effects increase the illusion of reality. "The Birth of a Nation" is the first film spectacle to play the first class theaters at the same prices that are obtained for the most elaborate dramatic productions.

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 24

AT THE FORREST

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest to note the fact that this tremendously successful photo-spectacle will never be shown in any but the first-class theaters and at prices customarily charged for the best theatrical attractions. D. W. Griffith, creator of the great photo-making film, has made this fact clear in definite statements over his own signature.

Continuance of the popularity of the production in Philadelphia is paralleled in other important communities, and there is no abatement in interest here or elsewhere, as is manifested by the crowded houses at afternoon and evening performances alike.

So many elements enter into the success of "The Birth of a Nation" that even enumeration of the merits of the production might prove tedious. But it should be said that the musical accompaniment to the picture, embracing folk songs, national anthems, engaging dance melodies and some of the finest compositions of the world's best composers, has no small part in contributing to the entertainment. This music is played by a symphonic orchestra and each selection is fitted so closely to the shifting scene as to be an integral part of the exhibition.

A finely selected company of actors is seen in historic and romantic roles, and there are tremendous battle scenes, wonderful night rides by the Ku Klux Klan, delightful bits of comedy and romance, and, in a visualization of historic events, such incidents as the assassination of Abraham Lincoln and the surrender of Lee to Grant.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 24

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."
At the Miles.

HISTORIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle now at the Miles theater, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as Gen. Robert E. Lee and the other as Gen. U. S. Grant.

The picture shows Gen. Lee surrendering to Gen. Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough Gen. Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket inkstand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the grand event.

Kansas City Post Oct 24

Has Strong Company.

Then comes the American girl who finds the drunken beach comber. She reclaims him to a life of usefulness. The pictorial display of the different scenes are unusual. Miss Monterey is surrounded with a strong company, including Hopper L. Atchley, Jane Haven, Richard Gordon, Laura Adams and many others.

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand, is the last word in motion pictures. The picture has been shown in the Lincoln theater, New York, since April 8, where more than 1,000,000 persons have seen it. This production covers ten years of history and visualizes the events of the Civil war. Some of the scenes are the early glories of the Confederacy, the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea, the siege of Petersburg, the signing of peace and the assassination of President Lincoln. An orchestra of thirty pieces accompanies it.

Record Oct 24

—The man behind the guns is always essential but often is overlooked when the bouquets of success are being tossed around. In "The Birth of a Nation" there is one man who looms big, but of whom the public hears little. This candidate for a few posies of his own is H. E. Aitken, the financial head of the company in control of this big property. Aitken raised $500,000 to put the picture on and supplied the sinews of war at a time when it required an assortment of faith and nerve to risk so much upon an untried venture.

Motion Pictures

Forrest—"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photoplay. As a series of picturesque scenes of civil war days alone this consummate creation of filmdom would gain substantial recognition. Every scene flashed on the screen has been composed with the care of accomplished artistry. Settings are carefully chosen, and, like costumes, are historically accurate. In the "big scenes" these elements are especially noteworthy. The film is also realistic enough to satisfy the most rabid movie fan. [illegible] acting of Henry B. Walthall, [illegible]liam Cooper and Lillian [illegible] principal roles, is

P. Ledger Oct 24

LILLIAN GISH - FORREST

Pittsburgh Gazette Times Oct 25

MILES - SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Miles—"Birth of a Nation."

Tomorrow at the Miles Theater "The Birth of a Nation" will commence the ninth week of its record-breaking success in this city.

The size of this spectacular production makes by comparison all other photoplay offerings look inconsequential. Here are shown hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors and horses; armies in landscape in place of squads of mere supers jostling on a platform among canvas scenery. Here is the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here are social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here is a whole art gallery of scenery of humanity, of still life and life in wildest career. Here are portraits of streets, homes, wilderness; pictures of famous conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies; pictures of family life, of festivals and funerals, ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower gardens, hypocrisy and passion, ecstacy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny. Here is depicted the South in its wealth, its home luxury and wind-swept cotton fields; here are shown its soldiers riding away to war and trudging home in defeat with poverty ahead of them and ghastly difficulties confronting them on every side.

Motion Picture Weekly

The censors in Boston have practically spoiled "The Birth of a Nation," which is showing there. They have cut out many of the dramatic parts.

"The Birth of a Nation," three hundred and ninetieth time in New York, and still going strong!

N.Y. Herald Oct 25

Miss Mae Marsh Ill.

Miss Mae Marsh, heroine of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," started yesterday for Albequerque, N. M., where she has been advised to take a vacation of several weeks. She came from California to enjoy the autumn in New York and see how Eastern playgoers liked her work on the screen, but she caught a heavy cold, and after being confined to her rooms most of the time she was here her physicians advised her to seek a milder climate for the next few weeks. When her health is restored Miss Marsh will return to California where she will resume her work under Mr. Griffith's direction.

N.Y. Times Oct 25

Mae Marsh, the heroine of "The Birth of a Nation," left New York yesterday for a vacation of several weeks in Albuquerque, N. M. Miss Marsh came here from California several weeks ago to spend the Fall, but a severe cold confined her to her rooms most of the time and her physician advised her to return West.

N.Y. Commercial Oct 25

Mae Marsh, the heroine of "The Birth Of A Nation" left New York yesterday for Albuquerque, New Mexico, where she has been advised to take a vacation of several weeks. Miss Marsh came east from California to enjoy the fall in New York and see how eastern playgoers like her work on the screen, but a heavy cold broke up her plans.

N.Y. Press Oct 25

Mae Marsh, who plays the heroine in "The Birth of a Nation," left yesterday for Albuquerque, N. M., to recuperate from a cold contracted during a short stay in this city.

N.Y. Sun Oct 25

Mae Marsh, who is seen in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, has left New York for a visit in the West.

Globe & Com. Oct 25

Mae Marsh, the heroine of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," left New York yesterday for Albuquerque, N. M., where she has been advised to take a vacation of several weeks. Miss Marsh came east from California to enjoy the fall in New York and see how eastern playgoers liked her work on the screen, but a heavy cold broke up her plans. After being confined to her rooms most of the time she was here, her physicians advised her to seek a milder climate.

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 31

SCENES FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"History by lightning" is the epigrammatic expression used by one critic in describing the great spectacle play, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Academy of Music all of next week. The upper of the two pictures shows "The Little Colonel" the hero of the play, leading a charge at the Battle of the Crater; the lower shows President Lincoln in a moment of deep trouble.

Motion Picture Weekly

It was stated in a magazine recently that the night scenes in Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" were taken in broad daylight and tinted. You're all wrong, Mr. Writer. The night-battle scenes were all taken after nine o'clock in the evening. I saw them photographed myself.

Proof that the big features are going to be the real money getters, is shown by the continued success of the "Birth of a Nation" and "The Eternal City," both of which are enjoying long runs at Broadway-theater prices!

Irving Cummings, leading man in

I have received many letters asking my opinion on the best pictures produced. Here are my choices for the seven best pictures ever produced: "Birth of a Nation," "Wrath of the Gods," "Cabaria," "Judith of Bethulia," "Tess of the Storm Country," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Spoilers."

By Al Ray.

Here is our choice of the five greatest film actors. The greatest the world has ever known is, in our opinion: Henry B. Walthal, of the Majestic company. His work in "The Birth of a Nation," "The Avenging Conscience," "Home, Sweet Home," and many other

"The Birth of a Nation" is still running along to crowded houses wherever it is being shown. Three weeks ago, in Boston, the film made a clean-up. In one little week there, they took in over nineteen thousand dollars.

Eve. Mail Oct 25

MAE MARSH.
Heroine in "Birth of a Nation," Who Has Had to Forego Vacation in New York Because of Illness.

Eve. World Oct 25

Mae March, heroine of "The Birth of a Nation," has gone to Albuquerque for her health. Later she will resume work for D. W. Griffith.

Motion Picture Weekly

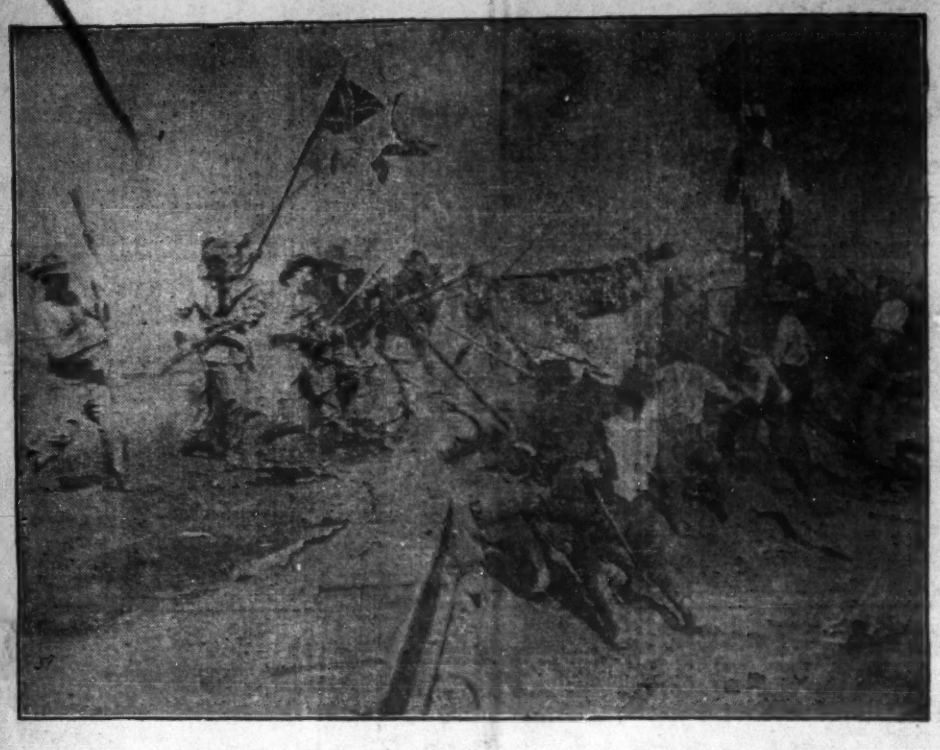
Every one is awaiting anxiously the arrival of David Mark Griffith's new big spectacle, "The Mother and the Law." If it is anywhere near as good as "The Birth of a Nation," I know of a good many people who will travel a long way to see it.

Joseph Henxaberry, who was Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," has received many offers to pose as the former president.

Mrs. Josephine Bonaparte Crowell has invented a new hat, which is very popular on the coast. They call it the ku klux, and Mrs. Crowell got her idea from "The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" is still running along to crowded houses wherever it is being shown. Three weeks ago, in Boston, the film made a clean-up. In one little week there, they took in over nineteen thousand dollars.

Final Charge of Confederates at Petersburg as Reconstructed in Griffith's Film Drama



SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," GRAND OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" ENTRANCING.

Manager Sasseen Enthusiastic Over Gigantic Photoplay to Be Seen Here.

"You sit there for three hours and think it has been one; the music lulls you, and the emotional spectacle overpowers your brain; you forget where you are and away with the theme of a master drama. I did—twice."

Charles E. Sasseen, manager at the Grand Opera House, is enthusiastic about G. W. Griffith's gigantic photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be projected here today, tomorrow and Tuesday. He saw it twice in Houston.

"Oh, it's perfect. I don't know how to describe it. The battle scenes, the big panoramas, are wonderful; but it is the detail that astonishes you. Mr. Griffith is everywhere known as a genius of execution—it's because of these details. One scene—an old man with a kitten in his lap, nods off to sleep, the kitten falls to the floor and lands squarely on an outraged and indignant puppy—must have been posed over and over, for it comes out as naturally as if the little play had occurred quite by chance.

"I could tell you about it all morning," he explained to the dramatic critic.

That is what he did.

BIRTH OF NATION, TWO DOLLAR FILM, SCORES AT GRAND

Great American Silent Drama Holds Rapt Attention of Big Crowds.

AWES AND THRILLS

Tells in Graphic Scenes Stirring Periods of United States History.

Kansas City accepted the $2 movie last night when a thronged house witnessed the spectacular film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand. From the moment the first picture was thrown on the screen at 8:15 o'clock until 11:05 o'clock, when the last scene died away, the audience was all attention. Applause, the like of which few plays receive, rang out through the theater time and again.

There is only one way to get any idea of the greatness of "The Birth of a Nation," and that is to see it. Never before has such a masterpiece been thrown on the screen in Kansas City. It is just what every Eastern critic has said, "a masterpiece of masterpieces."

Sets Pace for Future.

"The Birth of a Nation" sets a pace for the mummers' art for the future. It is a superb achievement in which more drama is shown than was ever before seen on the stage of a theater in the same number of hours.

Ten years of strenuous times, the period just previous to the great Civil war, and the years of struggle between the North and the South, with brothers facing each other on the firing line, are covered in the three hours of film. One sees the armies stretching twenty miles through the valleys, the deadly work of the infantry and artillery, the dead and wounded in heaps in the trenches and between the lines, as first one side and then the other charges in the face of the deadly fire, and the devastation of the South as Sherman's army swept all before it on the Love Story Adds Interest.

And then the war ends. President Lincoln signs the proclamation freeing the slaves, signs pardons for many southerners for whom radical members of the senate advocate the rope. Then the fateful night in the Ford theater when President Lincoln was assassinated.

The radicals in power, conditions follow which result in the organization of the Ku-Klux Klan, a force of 3,000 southern white men. These horsemen, dressed in their white flowing garbs, make a spectacular sight, riding here and there.

A beautiful love story runs through the entire length of the film, giving it an added interest. Sketches of the life of a typical southern family are more forceful than all the melodramas ever written around that great period of American history.

The film will be shown twice daily for an indefinite period at the Grand.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" JUSTIFIES PRAISE

Stupendous Film Production at Grand Proves Press Claims Correct.

THRILLS AND TEARS

Laughter, Too, in Part of "Reconstruction" Drama of U. S. History.

D. W. Griffith's wonderfully conceived and brilliantly executed photo drama, "The Birth of a Nation," thrown on the screen for the first time in Kansas City at the Grand last night held spellbound for more than three hours an audience that taxed the capacity of the house.

"The Birth of a Nation" has come heralded far and wide as the peer of all motion picture dramas—a film than which there is no other more superb achievement. Certainly no more drama of so loftily a character has been shown on stage or screen in the same length of time. As a spectacle its brilliancy and its execution have exceeded by far the expectations of those who may have doubted the ability of any producer to provide in three hours' time sufficient screen entertainment to warrant the prices demanded.

The immensity of the production is overwhelming. Its power and its pathos compels closest attention and when there is not a tear to be shed there is laughter in its place and in the thousands of feet of film uncoiled there are as many thrills—thrills that keep the audience perched on the edge of their seats in anticipation.

AMAZING REALISM.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the story of that period in the history of the United States known as the reconstruction. There was, of course, a fitting and educational introduction upon which groundwork was fashioned the play after Thomas Dixon's story of "The Clansman." Five hundred thousand dollars was spent in its production, but it was done with a realism that is amazing. The film makes only a detail of the early episodes, linking up the great events of the Civil war as they occurred at Washington with the immortal Lincoln at the helm. Lincoln himself is shown in his study and later in Ford's theater and as a final chapter of his career, the assassination.

Great battles are reproduced in a manner that causes the old soldier to gasp with amazement. Miles upon miles of troops have been filmed to represent that famous march of Sherman's to the sea. Cities are put to the torch and mobs rule unchecked.

KU KLUX KLAN SHOWN.

But it was when the Ku Klux Klan came riding into the range of the camera with their banners flying, swords waving and horses champing at the bit that the piercing blast of a bugle started a wave of applause that ended only when the last plunging horseman was lost to view. No charge on the battlefield at Bull Run or Appomattox was more thrilling. Nothing so heart-quickening.

Many lovable characters are presented in "The Birth of a Nation"; many bestial, white and black. As some one has said, "The Birth of a Nation" is a chronicle of human passion. Somewhere throughout the film there is chronicled every human emotion; sometimes a laugh and sometimes a tear, but throughout a lesson, a message of peace, of the horror and futility of war.

"The Birth of a Nation."

After a night of steady toil on the part of a score of electricians and stage mechanics, the Academy of Music is in readiness for the first presentation to-night of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." Except for the removal of a block of seats in the rear of the orchestra floor to provide space for the large asbestos booth carried by the company, the work was confined to the stage, where extensive changes were necessary for the installation of the special equipment. This vast assortment of "props," requiring the services of twenty men during the performance, is used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects which have helped to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most talked-about theatrical offering in the world.

While the mechanics are finishing their work to-day, the twenty musicians carried by the company, together with ten local musicians, will be rehearsing the long and difficult score, which is played without pause during the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle.

To-night's performance will begin at 8:15. The spectacle will remain for the entire week, with a matinee every day after the opening night.

St. Louis Times Oct 13

GRIFFITH'S YOUNG STAR

IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" THERE IS ONE LITTLE GIRL WHO, UNDER THE ORDINARY ACCEPTATION OF THE TERM, CANNOT BE CALLED THE STAR, BUT WHOSE PERSONALITY REMAINS IN THE MEMORY AFTER THE FILM HAS BEEN COMPLETED. MIRIAM COOPER IS THE GIRL WHOSE SOUTHERN SYMPATHIES DO NOT GIVE WAY TO LOVE OF MAN, UNTIL THAT GREAT MOMENT WHEN THE NORTHERN GENTLEMAN OFFERS HIS LIFE IN ORDER TO SAVE HER. SHE IS A DELIGHTFUL LITTLE GIRL WHO WILL RISE WITH THE FILM.

GRIFFITH SAYS $2 MOVIES HAVE REFUTED WISEACRES

Screen Dramas Are Not Really Competitors of Legitimate Stage, He Declares, but Are Popular Because They Show Things as They Are.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

While there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all, it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The remainder is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a 10-cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see we knew what we had. That was an advantage the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture as undoubted success. There will be many $2 pictures. Their success will depend entirely upon how well they are done and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life.

LIMITS OF THE STAGE.

The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can only show certain scenes in the limits of three walls and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which, after all, are only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts.

Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater.

What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are a part of for a single evening? Long years afterwards in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI.," and can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him, and yet was equivocating at the same time? Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd. These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

DOES NOT RIVAL DRAMA.

It was the art interpretive glorified. The player and his mood become the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche, and if artistically done will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so-called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battle field we show an actual battle field. If it means that 10,000 persons were part of this conflict, we engage 10,000 persons, rehearse them in minute detail and when we are ready we show you that scene, as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

COMPARISON OF COSTS.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 persons in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily with eight or ten performances a week and the high salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries runs up to $3500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures, they point an important moral without need of further explanation.

In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lovers' tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight, with a snow-crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breezes and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great postic pictures will not only compare with the best off the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera, and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to 5-cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Beaumont Enterprise 5/5

BIRTH OF NATION IS GRAND OPERA WITH THE WORDS ABSENT

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne or emperor. Occasionally however, old art-ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Kyle theatre for seven performances, starting next Wednesday night.

Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: a new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation" as no other filmed play—not even "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis"—had been put on. He used half a great state for his locale; 150 years of American history as his subject; 18,000 people as his actors; 3000 riders and steeds as his cavalry; 5000 scenes instead of a few score or a few hundred. His work dwarfed the old-fashioned stage art to such pettiness that many are wondering whether the so-called "indoor" drama is not doomed to long and possible total eclipse.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of civil war and reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill. New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles crowded for many months the theatres where it was being simultaneously played.

For the first time in theatrical history a motion spectacle is being presented as a regular attraction at regular prices in regular first-class playhouses. The success speaks for itself. The Griffith drama comes here with a baggage equipment of two sixty-foot cars, a complete staff including mechanical experts and stage crew and a large symphonic orchestra regularly carried on tour—a company of fifty people altogether.

The story embraces beautiful romances of the blue and the gray; Ben Cameron the clansman and his northern sweetheart Elsie; Capt. Phil Stoneman, U. S. A., and sweet Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie. Among the principals of the largest cast ever assembled for a dramatic entertainment are Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lew, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, John McGlynn, Ernest Campbell, John French and J. A. Berlinger.

Beaumont Daily Journal

'Birth of a Nation,' Innovation In Motion Picture Achievements, To Show In Beaumont For Four Days

18,000 People and 3,000 Horses Appear in Film Story That Held New York Multitudes Spellbound; Decisive Battles of Civil War Depicted.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Kyle theatre Wednesday night. There will be two performances daily starting Thursday at 8:15 and 2:30 p. m.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City, where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city of the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Pittsburg and Philadelphia.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated in the civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. Eighteen thousand people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. Three thousand horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway.

The decisive battles of the civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged fifty years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent asunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of vengeful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners, and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the natrrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

President Lincoln and Cabinet in "The Birth of a Nation."

MISS MIRIAM COOPER
The Southern Heroine in "The Birth of a Nation."

Beaumont Enterprise Extra

"BIRTH OF A NATION" TELLS BY FILM AND MUSIC THE STORY OF A NATION REBORN

Wonder Production Has Excited Keener Curiosity Than Any Other Offering of the Current Season—Photoplay to Be Seen Here Is Identical in All Respects With Those of New York and Chicago.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Pittsburg and Philadelphia, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Kyle theatre next Wednesday night. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance demand for seats indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the primme cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states, the ball on the eve of Bull Run and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of the federal president, the harsh radical policy to the stricken south, the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox and the South Carolina legislature of 1870 are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

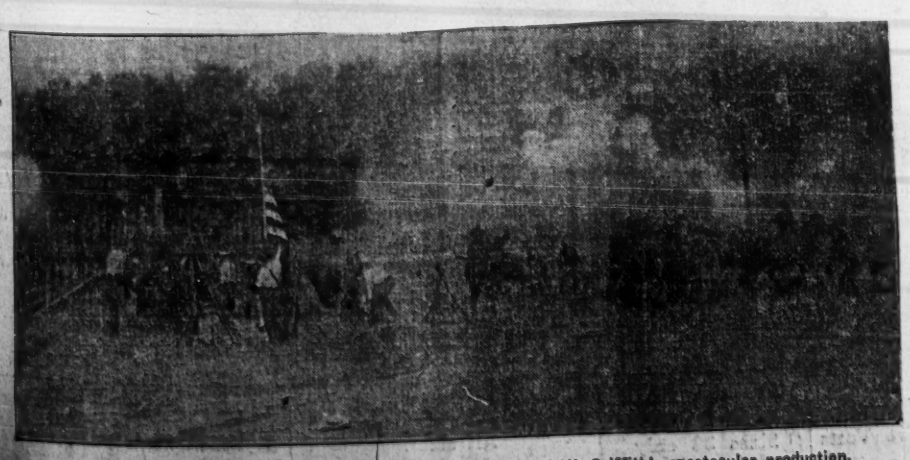
Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay, now sounding the loud diapason of war again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies or the crash of riot and rapine or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall." It fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new are, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret, Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman, Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus, Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth, Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia, John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

D. W. GRIFFITH,
Producer of "The Birth of a Nation."

Gathering of KuKlux Klans in the "Birth of a Nati



The Battle of Petersburg, in "The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's spectacular production.

Danville Register Oct 1

GREAT PICTURE COMING!

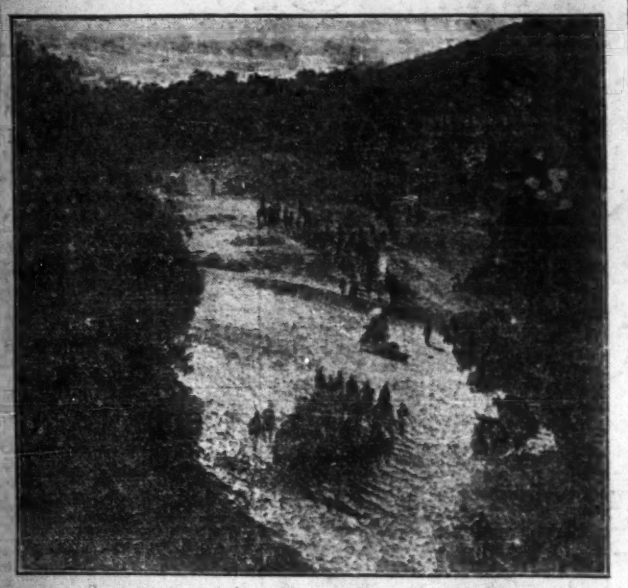
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL BE SEEN AT THE MAJESTIC THREE DAYS, BEGINNING NOVEMBER 1.

With symphony orchestra of thirty, marvelous stage effects and just as it is being shown to record-breaking audiences in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago, D. W. Griffith's mighty historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Majestic Theatre the first half of next week. The engagement will begin on Monday night, November 1 and matinee and night performances will be given Tuesday and Wednesday.

The company opens a week's engagement at the Academy of Music, Richmond, tomorrow night and the advance sale indicates a repetition of the phenomenal business in Norfolk three weeks ago, when the Colonial Theatre in that city was not large enough to hold the thousands who clamored for seats. The spectacle, which is founded upon Thomas Dixon's story of the reconstruction, "The Clansman," is not to be confounded with feature photoplays and similar offerings of the smaller theatres. The services of fifty people are employed in each presentation, twenty of whom are musicians carried by the company. A carload of special stage settings, effects and electrical equipment is also used.

The first half of the great spectacle exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpet-bagging regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain Phil Stoneman with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details.

Seats for the Majestic Theatre engagement will be placed on sale at Booth's drug store Wednesday morning.



Detachment of Gen. Lee's Army as seen in the mighty historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Majestic Theatre the first half of next week.

Record Oct 1

HOSPITAL CORPS NEEDED

Accidents Were Numerous in Making of Battle Scene Pictures.

The realism of war was carried to such an extent in the making of "The Birth of a Nation" that a regularly organized hospital corps of a chief surgeon, four assistant surgeons and a staff of orderlies accompanied the "troops." This was no mere decorative effect, but a grim necessity of an arduous campaign. But for the very scientific and thorough precautions taken there would have been many accidents.

Thousands of men were engaged in a march over 50 miles of rough country representing the scenes of the battle of Petersburg, the Appomattox campaign and (in Reconstruction days) the North and South Carolina raids of the Clansmen. As the forces deployed were far from a railroad, camps had to be pitched nightly, commissariat supplied and wells dug. The ordnance and muskets of civil war type were borrowed from the Government. Where the fields of battle were pitched the trenches extended for miles. For the first time in picture-taking cannon were loaded, not with pyrotechnical powder, but with actual shells. Each shell cost $80, so a round of artillery fire was pretty expensive. To those close up in front the work was terribly dangerous, so all the men were warned to keep from in front of the cannon. In spite of this there were several minor injuries, such as burning, mutilation, etc., which the traveling surgeons promptly treated. In the runs of cavalry the hospital men were at or near the front in an auto-ambulance.

The war was directed exactly as modern war is directed, by field telephones. D. W. Griffith's headquarters was in a high tower overlooking the scene of action—by a coincidence, much like the tower that was an actual feature of the real battle of Petersburg, so several civil war veterans said who helped the "movie" commander with the work.

News Leader Richmond Va

Lovesick Sentry a Laugh-Maker In "The Birth of a Nation"

Paul LeBlanc scores an unexpected hit in a comedy part in Griffith's photoplay.

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith, in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy of Music next week, proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene, gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth, and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864.

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX

The meeting of Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox, one of the striking scenes shown in the film portrayal of "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy all next week.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AN ENTIRE WEEK

Griffith Spectacle to Show at Eleven Performances, Beginning Monday

Historical scenes in which President Lincoln, General Lee, General Grant and other leading statesmen and warriors of the early sixties are impersonated with amazing accuracy, are shown in "The Birth of a Nation," the D. W. Griffith spectacle which comes to the Academy of Music next week.

One of the most striking of these scenes, and the one which has been commented upon by critics everywhere as a marvel of realism, shows the meeting of General Lee and General Grant at Appomattox.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. He sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature, rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots, with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form tower over his conqueror—a statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray, who grasps the extended hand, and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Courthouse is closed.

Seats for the eleven performances of "The Birth of a Nation" will be placed on sale at the Academy of Music box office at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, and it is expected that there will be an unprecedented rush of playgoers who have promised themselves that they will not miss the big Griffith spectacle. The engagement will begin with Monday night's performance and will continue the rest of the week with daily matinees.

Richmond Virginian Oct 20

PACKED HOUSES FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Most Splendid Historical Spectacle Ever Produced Will Be Seen Here Next Week.

It is expected that a long line will greet the box office staff of the Academy of Music this morning when they open the seat sale for "The Birth of a Nation." The Griffith spectacle begins its engagement Monday night and indication are that the audience at the opening performance will be one of the largest of the week. This has been true of every opening night of the company coming to Richmond, and considering the strong local interest in the spectacle, the Monday night performance will probably take on the aspect of a gala "first night" with society present in numbers.

Dealing with historical events of the Reconstruction, the general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and sombre. But love interest and comedy of a refined sort illuminate the spectacle throughout its two hours and forty minutes.

There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disfigured its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home, almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again, there is the scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of the Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw" and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the sombre shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life.

Richmond Dispatch

"BIRTH OF NATION" WORLD'S GREATEST

Spectacle Tells In Vivid Manner the Story of the South In Days of Reconstruction.

When the company which is to present "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music all next week opened its tour of the South at the Colonial Theater, Norfolk, three weeks ago, it was before one of the most brilliant audience ever assembled in a theater in that city. Mayor Mayo, with members of the Council and Board of Aldermen; Admiral Beatty, commandant of the Portsmouth navy yard; Colonel Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe and officers of the Daughters of the Confederacy were conspicuous in the gathering.

While the audience was unanimous in its verdict that the spectacle was

GEN. ROBERT E. LEE,
as he is seen in "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle, which comes to the Academy next week.

one of the most delightful theatrical offerings ever presented in Norfolk, clubwomen, and particularly prominent members of the Daughters of the Confederacy, were most enthusiastic in their praise. So strong was the feeling of Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of the Hope-Maury Chapter, U. D. C., that she wrote a letter to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch the next day, commending the spectacle to all Southerners. Her letter, in part, was as follows:

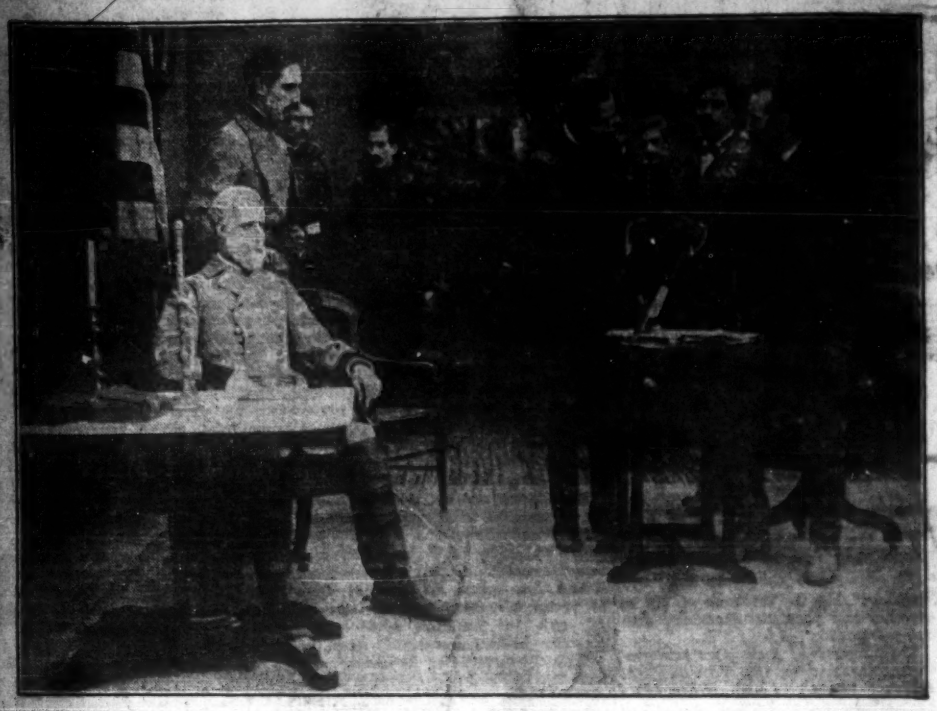
"'The Birth of a Nation' is wonderful! * * * Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a brand of knights sent to make things work out as it was desired and none but these men could have accomplished it. * * * There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for in resolutions adopted a short time before, the members of the John H. Reagan Chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus: "In endorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation,' the John H. Reagan Chapter, U. D. C., feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to Northerners, and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union." The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1128 Logan Street, Lost Angles, acting president of the John H. Reagan Chapter.

Seats for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" will be placed on sale at the Academy box office tomorrow morning.

The Charge, one of the thrilling battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music all Next Week.

Meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox Among Historical Scenes in Griffith's Production



SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

When General Robert E. Lee, at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom.

The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith during his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical facsimile scenes in Griffith's motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Academy of Music next week.

General Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, while General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith, "has been to introduce as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricalism."

Young Confederate Officer Has Northern Girl for Sweetheart

Hospital scene in "The Birth of a Nation." This is one of the most affecting moments in the big Griffith spectacle.

One of the scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music next week, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner," who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the patents office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," said the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish, as Elsie Stoneman, in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful and her eyes, before the camera, are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity, as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studioes where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil war and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early wartime to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

MUSIC IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" GIVEN CREDIT FOR ITS SUCCESS

(By E. E. S.)

"The Birth of a Nation," the picture that has set a new mark in the film world, is never allowed to be shown without the musical score that was written for it. It is safe to say that the picture would never have had the pre-eminent position it now occupies if this precaution had not been taken, for great as the picture itself is few people could sit through three hours of uninterrupted action without weariness. The musical score interprets and explains the picture just as the orchestra interprets and explains grand opera.

It is astonishing that so little attention has been paid to the part music plays in making this picture the sensation of the theatric world. Joseph Carl Breil composed and arranged the score—which is played in Dallas by sixteen capable musicians under the leadership of Earl Schwartz, who describes himself as an "Illinois farmer."

There is only one other American in the orchestra and he is an Irishman. The others are Russians, Germans, Italians, Belgians, French and Scotch.

The "Illinois farmer," Mr. Schwartz, had much to say about the music when questioned.

"The score is no less noteworthy than that of any opera. The themes and motifs are not all original as they are in opera, for the conditions are different and it is not so necessary that they should be. A familiar air is sometimes more interpretative than a new theme, and, when the action is fast, with quick changes, there is no time for the ear to pick up an original motif. When the action on the screen permits there is much new music in Mr. Briel's score that has received the highest commendation everywhere.

"As in opera each important character has his or her musical tag, motive or motif, and this is varied and modulated to suit the mood of the action. As an illustration, when the 'Little Colonel' leaves home after the brilliant ball before the battle of Bull Run, the orchestra plays the 'Rye Waltz,' one of the most beautiful of the old Southern dances. It is one of the inspiring scenes of the play and more than half the effect is due to the musical accompaniment which keeps time to the sway of the dancers. After the war, when the 'Little Colonel' returns home, in the scene of desolation in Piedmont, the horns play in just the same 'Rye Waltz,' which instantly flashes the mind back to the period of four years before and recalls the glitter and movement of the splendid ball, which is in such painful contrast to the wreckage of war to which he returns.

"Again—when the younger Stoneman boy comes South before the war he wears a ridiculous little derby hat to which the young Cameron points with derision and by way of greeting says: 'Where did you get that hat?' and the bassoon plays humorously a line of that well known song. When these two boys, fighting on opposite sides, are killed in battle and die side by side, the bassoon plays again 'Where did you get that hat?' and the surprise of it grips the heart with unnamable pathos.

"The composer drew freely from all sources for his inspiration, but much of it is original. The beautiful love theme which is heard when the 'Little Colonel' looks at the picture of Elsie Stoneman, or whenever they are together, was written by Breil and it is one of the gems of the score. The violin and oboe carry the air with a harp accompaniment, and it is always effective. Another original theme is that which opens the picture, where there is a flash of an old slave market. That hot, pepper pig tune is the negro motif. It has an African tom-tom sound to it, uncivilized and primitive.

[illegible] ...ough enough to [illegible] ...breakdown as danced by the [illegible] ...darky. This is heard [illegible] ...picture from the negro [illegible] ...or when Lynch is on the [illegible] ...elaborate, as piano [illegible] ...matic action as the [illegible] ...light in her room where [illegible] ...in normal tempo, then [illegible] ...ated and accelerated [illegible] ...and smaller of the Klan.

"Many selections from well [illegible] ...overtures are used. During Lincoln's [illegible] ...assassination there is the [illegible] ...overture and 'The President's March' [illegible] ...with a little of Ann's death, [illegible] ...directly. The Light Cavalry overture [illegible] ...played during the assembling of the [illegible] ...Southern troops. The Tannhäuser overture [illegible] ...and parts from The Walkure are played [illegible] ...during the Ku Klux rides. It [illegible] ...impossible, however, to pick out [illegible] ...the shreds of music which are woven [illegible] ...in with the original score. Even [illegible] ...where I've people ask me about it [illegible] ...we play, and I do not know where [illegible] ...of them came from and neither do [illegible] ...players in the orchestra, although [illegible] ...their acquaintance with music is wide.

"The call of the Ku Klux [illegible] ...original and is used like Brunhilde's [illegible] ...war cry or the sword motif in the [illegible] ...Ring. Sometimes on the horn, sometimes [illegible] ...times by both and again and again [illegible] ...with the full brass the cry rings [illegible] ...whenever the Ku Klux appear, [illegible] ...having a horn player up on the [illegible] ...dressing room gallery behind the [illegible] ...scenes the call is made to sound in the [illegible] ...far distance.

"The themes for the Cameron girls [illegible] ...are handled in an interesting way. The [illegible] ...elder one is sentiment and in the [illegible] ...Gloriana's is her tag. The younger one, [illegible] ...son, with her more complex character, [illegible] ...has more than one set of interpretations. Whenever she thinks of her [illegible] ...brother or is with him there is the [illegible] ...pleasing, bubbling, will-o'-the-wisp [illegible] ...waltz movement that sounds like the [illegible] ...part of the Violets' waltz and at other [illegible] ...times she has a more sober waltz [illegible] ...movement, and when out of doors the [illegible] ...flute weaves woodland notes that remind [illegible] ...one of the 'William Tell' Overture. [illegible] ...More good music is invited on her [illegible] ...than on any other one character and [illegible] ...her every mood is echoed.

"The musical themes are not [illegible] ...simple for, at one time there are two [illegible] ...Northern and two Southern airs carried [illegible] ...at the same time and all dominated by [illegible] ...a waltz movement. It is like mixing [illegible] ...pickles or a club sandwich with the [illegible] ...ear catching a bit of 'Dixie' and then [illegible] ...'Bonnie Blue Flag' and a little of [illegible] ...'Yankee Doodle' and 'Marching Through [illegible] ...Georgia.' This is when the two armies [illegible] ...are in conflict and though the music [illegible] ...is martial it is pervaded by a waltz [illegible] ...rhythm.

"Without an elaborate orchestra [illegible] ...score the audience would never appreciate more than half the value of the [illegible] ...scenes. Stoneman has a strong, manly [illegible] ...theme on the strings indicative of [illegible] ...toughness and power, and when he is [illegible] ...talking to Lincoln this music surges [illegible] ...through the house. As soon as Lincoln [illegible] ...begins to speak the music shades softly [illegible] ...to 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee,' played [illegible] ...in minor, and the audience does not [illegible] ...need the spoken word so perfectly does [illegible] ...the music interpret the chafacters of [illegible] ...the two men.

"'Dixie' is played only three times [illegible] ...and then briefly, which shows the restraint in the score, and no air is overworked, although at different times [illegible] ...one hears 'Bonny Blue Flag,' 'Suwanee River,' 'Maryland, My Maryland,' 'Old Kentucky Home,' 'Home, Sweet Home' and 'Auld Lang Syne.' Only a few bars of 'Marching Through Georgia' is played and that is followed by Grieg's 'In the Hall of the Mountain Kings.'

"Many people go once to see the picture and a second time to hear the music and as much praise is heard for one as for the other."

San Antonio Light Oct 24

GREAT SCENES IN THE SPECTACLE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

At top the great peace allegory; in center the Battle of Petersburg; below a plantation scene and Lillian Gish, who plays the role of heroine in "The Birth if a Nation."

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE AT GRAND ONE WEEK

Great Griffith Film Spectacle to Open Monday, November 1.

S COSTLY PRODUCTION

Making of Picture Cost Approximately Half a Million Dollars.

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Grand Opera House for a week starting Monday, November 1. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal president; the harsh, radical policy of the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet bagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Love Story Interwoven.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine.

Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina Legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Music a Feature.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, [illegible] diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitle the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret, Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman, Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro, Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Sportiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

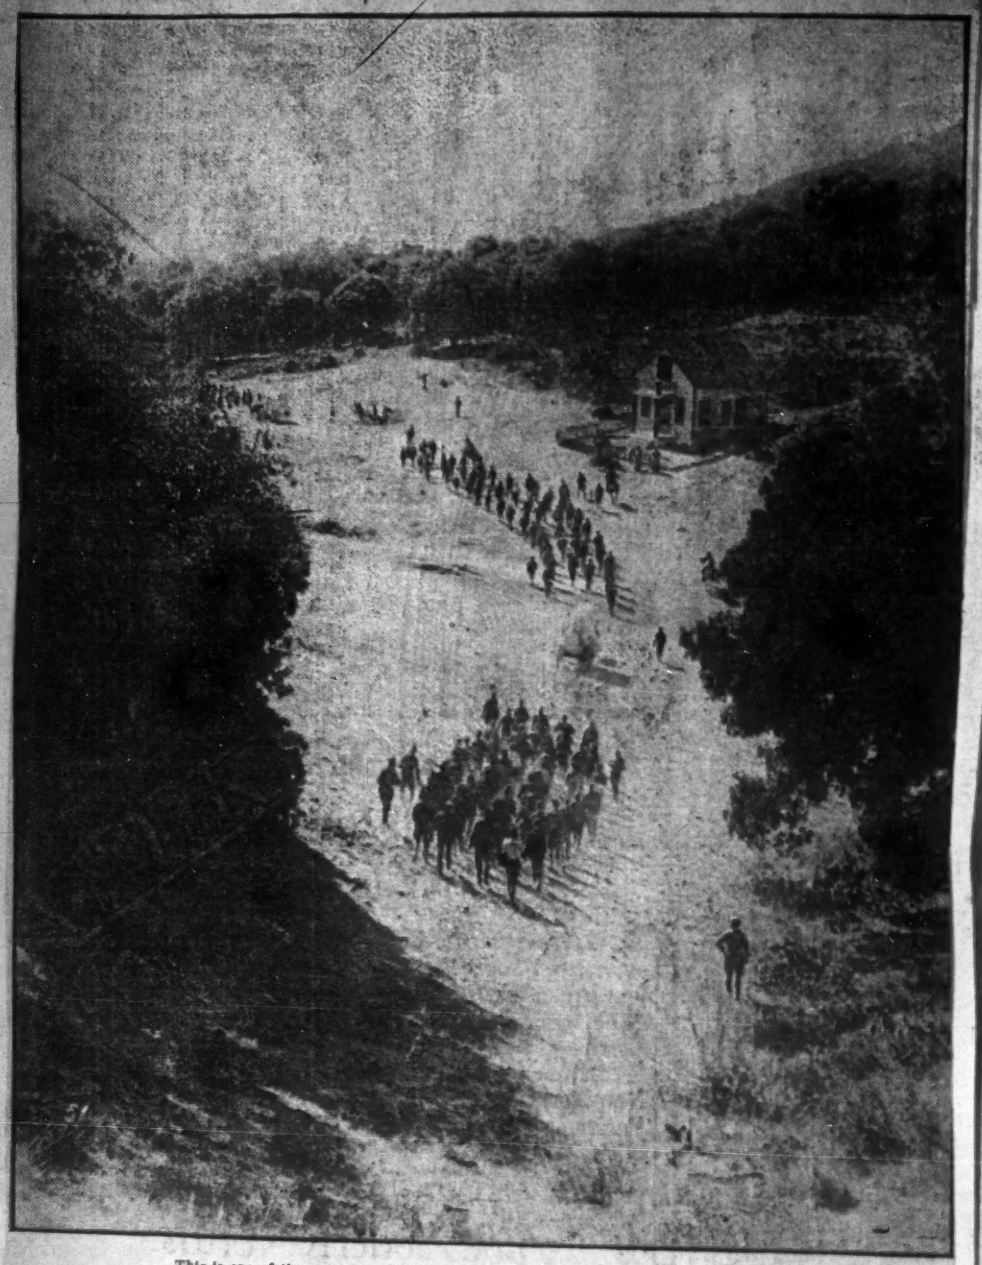
Record Oct 24

Forrest—"Birth of a Nation."

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest Theatre to take note of the fact that this tremendously successful spectacle will never be shown in any but the finest theatres and at prices customarily charged for the best theatrical attractions. D. W. Griffith, creator of this epoch-making film, has made this fact clear in definite statements over his signature, so that it would seem incumbent upon persons who have delayed their witnessing of this picture to make early arrangements for a visit to the Forrest. Continuance of the popularity of this entertainment in Philadelphia is paralleled in other important communities and there is no abatement in interest here or elsewhere as is manifested by the crowded houses at afternoon and evening performances alike. Although daily matinees are given, there seems at times hardly enough opportunity for the public to be provided proper accommodation. However, the arrangement, still in operation, permitting the buying of seats two weeks in advance, has been a means of satisfying many people who otherwise might have been disappointed at the box office.

So many elements enter into the success of "The Birth of a Nation" that an enumeration of the merits of the production might prove tedious. But it should be said that the musical accompaniment to the picture, embracing folk-songs, national anthems, engaging dance melodies and some of the finest compositions of the world's best composers, has no small part in contributing to entertainment. This music is played by a symphonic orchestra and each selection is fitted so closely to the shifting scene as to be an integral part of the exhibition. A finely-selected company of actors is seen in historic and romantic roles, and there are tremendous battle scenes, wonderful night rides by the Ku Klux Klan, delightful bits of comedy and of romance, and, in a visualization of historic events, such incidents as the assassination of Abraham Lincoln and the surrender of Lee to Grant. No such vital picture as "The Birth of a Nation" has yet been placed upon the screen, and it is not at all strange that persons who have once seen the production should return again and again to sit under the spell of the Griffith masterpiece.

Sherman's March to Sea in Birth of a Nation



This is one of the great scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand.

"The Birth of a Nation" a Real $2 Movie Show

D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Grand Opera House six days, starting November 1, matinee daily.

"The Birth of a Nation" is one of the most widely discussed topics in the country. It established an absolutely new art in the realm of the theater—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with music. It also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the same theme as Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The consequence of the Civil War in Southern Reconstruction are fully dealt with, and the nation's union is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed the stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures, accompanying music and effects tell the coherent, logical and moving story.

The magnitude of D. W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older theater. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinchbeck scenery and the petty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" is infinitesimal. For Griffith, in staging "The Birth of a Nation" used Nature for his background, 150 years of American history as his subject, 18,000 people as his actors, and no less than 3,000 mounts of cavalry in the celebrated rides of the Ku Klux Klan. After it was all completed he had an operatic score prepared and provided orchestral music worthy of Wagner. The motion picture spectacle in which these marvelous things are done will be shown here for the first time at the Grand beginning November 1.

"Birth of a Nation" Tells Story of Reconstruction Days

"The Birth of a Nation," the massive spectacle of the South's reconstruction, concerning which so much has been said and written during the last months, will begin a week's engagement at the Academy of Music tomorrow night. It will be seen here exactly as it is being presented in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities, with a symphony orchestra of thirty, and elaborate stage effects. The services of fifty people are employed in each presentation.

Altogether, eleven performances will be given during the local engagement of the spectacle. Except tomorrow, when the whole day will be spent in installing the production and rehearsing local musicians with the company's orchestra, a matinee will be given every day at 2:30. The evening performances will begin at 8:20, and, owing to the length of the spectacle—nearly three hours—all the performances are started promptly on time.

The company coming to the Academy is the one which opened its tour to a week of capacity business at the Colonial Theater, Norfolk, three weeks ago. It is the only one on tour, the seven others presenting the spectacle being installed for indefinite runs in as many large cities in different sections of the country.

Put Him in Hall of Fame.

So wonderful has been Mr. Griffith's achievement in visualizing the story of the South's reconstruction that critics have installed him in the Hall of Fame as the creator of a new art.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular States, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta," and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard Spots" and "The Clansman," and started to develop it.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate, he replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great out-of-doors. In brief, he staged the great battle struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

New and Stupendous Art.

The result of Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate names has been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes, it eptomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage 'unities' 'are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden Josephine Crowell Ralph Lewis Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Lillian Gish, in "The Birth of a Nation" (Film Play) Forrest

VETERANS TO SEE MOVING PICTURES.

Former Confederates Are Invited to Witness Production of Civil War Drama.

Perhaps the most interested spectators to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand Opera House tonight will be the members of Camp Magruder, United Confederate Veterans, who have been invited to attend as guests of the management. To them the show will represent something real—something they have experienced. All members of the camp are requested to meet R. M. Franklin, camp adjutant, in the lobby of the theater at 8 o'clock this evening.

One of the 5,000 HAPPY DAYS IN PIEDMONT BEFORE THE WAR. Scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music all this week.

San Antonio Express Oct 24

Twelve Thousand Feet of Film Presents a Thrilling Presentment of National Upgrowth—Eighteen Thousand People Employed in Taking These Historical Pictures.

DAVID W. GRIFFITH'S most extraordinary achievement with his new photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand Opera House for a week, starting Monday night, November 1, is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of slavery, the War of Secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of Reconstruction and the restoration of the South to its own. These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion picture camera. The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast. Within 12,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and dignified presentment of National upgrowth with a real and human love story based on Thomas Dixon's book-romance, "The Clansman." As it appears to the newspaper and magazine critics, Mr. Griffith has not only surpassed the art of the "indoor" theater, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-style history or historical novel. The best characterization of it so far is that of a very eminent public man who has called it "History by lightning."

Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 people in taking these historical pictures. The battle scenes were actual duplicates of several of the Civil War conflict, and so were the fac-similes of important events. We see Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for volunteers, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the Freedmen's Bureau, the carpetbaggers' excesses and the famous rides of the Ku Klux. The realism is almost uncanny. Often the old war shouts are heard in the audiences from the lips of veterans who momentarily forget that it is only a picture. It is hard to keep one's feet from dancing to the well-beloved tunes of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the pictures are so skillfully managed that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

EPIC FORM SUBSTITUTED

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development, the old dramatic forming having been thrown away and the epic or historical form substituted. The old reproach against the "ten-cent movie" is forever removed. It is a curious sight now in New York to see dozens of speculators asking three and four dollars a seat for a moving picture, whilst inside at the box office the public gladly pays the regular scale of prices at a fashionable metropolitan theater.

The labor involved in this newest sort of picture making is enormous. There are 5,000 separate and individually posed scenes involving about 200,000 interesting details. The musical score is as complex and elaborate as that of any grand opera. Although not a word is spoken on the stage, the musical and mechanical effects employ a hundred flesh-and-blood helpers nightly. In brief, the magnitude of the stupendous film dwarfs the average stage play into significance.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution of the art. Will the cinema replace the text book in the public schools? Will the Walter Scott and the W. M. Thackerays of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historian be replaced by the camera man, and the still life painter by one who, like Griffith, can turn out hundreds of Rembrandt, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment?

Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque. Yet, in view of what is happening around us, it is hard—nay impossible—to set any limits to the future achievements of the motion picture.

The official biographer of Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," asked for some data and got the answer that "he was born in Kentucky, that he grew up in a house like most boys; started out after his school and college days to find his place in the world, and that since he went into the business of producing pictures he has lived most of the time under his hat."

Strangely reticent about his personal affairs, the creator of "The Birth of a Nation" (when you know him) has one of the most interesting personalities in the world. One day he appeared in the office of the Epoch Producing Corporation of New York and put in a requisition for $5,000 cash. It was a Saturday afternoon. All the funds at the Liberty Theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" was playing, had been banked and the cash on hand was required for salaries. But one of the managers made the round of several Broadway hotels and finally got the cash money in exchange for checks. It was all in $100 bills.

BUNDLED MONEY IN NEWSPAPER.

Mr. Griffith bundled the money into an old newspaper, which he tied with a piece of rough string, as he caught the flyer for Louisville, Ky., that afternoon he was observed with a suitcase in one hand and the bundle of "kale" in the other disappearing rapidly in the direction of a train which was starting just as he reached the station.

The next chapter of this little story opens in LaGrange, Ky., a tall, youthful-looking man, with aforesaid "kale" bundle and suitcase, knocks at the door of an ivy-clad cottage. The thin, stately, white-haired woman of the crinoline and hoop-skirt era answers the knock and comes out to meet him. As the tall young man drops his suitcase and embraces the old lady with his good right arm, his left hand holds out a bundle in a newspaper with the commonplace remark: "Here is a little present for you, mother."

The incident, as the managers of the company came to learn about it, surprised them not a little, but it is characteristic of Griffith. Four times a year, on his flying trips between Los Angeles and New York, he visits the old Kentucky home and leaves that same little "memento." It is always the same sum and is always contained in an old newspaper.

"When I was a boy," said Griffith to a chum the other day, "I always had a vision of making a place in the world and bringing back the coin. I didn't know what checks were in those days. I don't think most people in LaGrange know what they mean nowadays. Anyhow, it's just a fad of mine to make a little present in Uncle Sam's legal tender."

Few men owe more to their parents than the famous director does to Brigadier General Jacob W. Griffith and Mrs. Mary Perkins Griffith. The father held distinguished command in the Southern army. He died when D. W. Griffith was but a lad, nevertheless the sixth sense of military strategy that the boy inherited and the vivid depiction of Civil War campaigns that General Griffith used to tell have remained ever with the son. Mrs. Griffith, the mother, has been David's best friend. She gave him a good education, schooled him in the old-fashioned chivalry of Kentucky and has ever watched his welfare and progress with a whole-hearted love and devotion.

Most of the material given below has been picked up from Griffith's intimates and associates, for he will rarely talk about himself.

WANTED TO BE AN ACTOR.

He wanted to be an actor or a dramatist, he did not quite know which. A stock company director named Oscar Eagle gave him his first job at Macauley's Theater, Louisville, from which post he drifted to New York and alternated between playing parts and writing plays. The row of a new playwright is hard to hoe, as only one of the early partly successful attempts young Griffith attempted himself as utility actor and playwright to the Biograph Company. They were taking small productions from him, and when one of the directors got sick they allowed Griffith to make a one-reel picture. His new ideas of the "close-up," "fade-out," "switchback" and "parallel action" revolutionized the technical side of photographic acting. His choice of talent in this field was likewise almost uncanny, so that in five years time he developed a majority of the motion picture actors and actresses who are justly eminent today. Furthermore he had the literary sense, and beside using the stock dramatic material of the routine motion picture director, he invaded poetry, fiction and standard literature for his subjects. The union of these three diverse talents, together with marvelous executive ability, made him the greatest motion picture director in the world.

David W. Griffith is so busy a man that he has no time for the ordinary diversions and avocations of life. While at work in Los Angeles he is up at 6 o'clock every morning. His working day is from 8 or 9 o'clock until midnight. Immense as the plant is, he supervises every part of it, reviews all scenarios, inspects every player and every costume, disproves all properties and structural effects, directs every foot of all films that bear his name, and looks over all the film work of the other directors.

"Lives under his hat" is a true expression. Griffith has a hat in every room of the many score rooms of the studio. He wears fifty hats a day, but his favorites are the enormous Panamas that guard against the excessive heat of the Los Angeles sun. He always keeps in working trim, is hard as nails physically, and while on the directing job wears his hair closely cropped. His favorite instrument is the megaphone. A born commander, he goes out for field work with this enormous speaking tube and directs an army of several hundred persons as easily as a farmer would boss a team of horses. But when he puts on the big battle pieces, like Sherman's march to the sea and the battle of Petersburg, he has to discard that big-voiced instrument for a switchboard and relays of telephone wires.

PERSONALLY FEARS NO DANGER.

While careful for the safety of his people, he personally fears no danger and often takes big chances in the outdoor directing work. One of his high-powered automobiles contains a speed of nearly a hundred miles an hour. With G. W. Bitzer, his photographer, he pushes the speed limit ahead of the wild rides of the Clansmen on their horses in the Ku Klux scenes.

D. W. GRIFFITH.

Best of all, "The Birth of a Nation" producer takes the hardest part of his work as good fun, as exhilirating sport, rather than as a task. His is one of the spirits that find life extremely fascinating, interesting and diverting. His alert intelligence grasps every new phase eagerly.

Back in New York off his studio labors Mr. Griffith would rather dance than do anything else. He believes in dancing as the most ancient and the most beneficial of all exercises. "Note the fighting people of the world," he said. "They are dancers, every one of them. All the conquests have been won by dancing people, and all the great achievements have been wrought by nations that dance."

Griffith gets 500 letters and fifty telegrams every day. It would save a lot of anxious folk some heartburnings to know that he never answers the letters. He opens them and tosses them in huge stacks on his general manager's table, where the faithful clerks sort out the minute grains of wheat from the chaff and attend to the really important things. He tosses the telegrams to his secretary, whose discretion as to answering is final. Griffith rarely carries money except when he is taking home the bundle of "kale" to the old folks. He is known everywhere and appropriates whatever he wants, letting the shopkeepers present their claims later to the keeper of his purse. He never fusses about trifles. He never does a particle of clerical work. He never stops at small or large financial obstacles, but goes right ahead regardless of financial problems. In brief, his one asperation is to make the big picture, the great art product, and in that supreme achievement he is Napoleonic in his methods and results.

Ethel Barrymore Booked by Royal.

Ethel Barrymore in "The Final Judgment," a five-part photodrama by George Scarborough, the talented playwright, will be seen at the Royal Theater on next Thursday and Friday. "The Final Judgment" affords Miss Barrymore unbounded opportunity for the display of her wonderful dramatic gift. The story of the photodrama is virile and gripping and is a masterpiece of screen productions. Miss Barrymore is supported by a superb cast of recognized stage and screen artists, including Percy G. Standing, H. Cooper Cliffe, Paul Lawrence, Mahlon Hamilton and Beatrice Maude.

A synopsis of the story follows: Jane Carlsson, an actress of note, is loved by three men, Murray Campbell, an assistant district attorney; Hamilton Ross, a noted chemist and criminologist, and Henry Strong, a multi-millionaire. Campbell wins in the suit for her hand. Disheartened, Ross accepts an offer to assist in unraveling a mysterious murder in Moscow, Russia. There he discovers that the victim was killed with fumes from a volatile poison of the East. He is about to make known his discovery when he decides to withhold it and use the same poison to kill Campbell, that he may possess Jane. On his return to New York he finds through careful tests that he can saturate a letter with the poison and thereby bring about the death of whoever reads the letter. Jane and Campbell have been living happily, until Campbell returns home unexpectedly and finds Henry Strong and Jane in a supposedly compromising situation, which they explain away. Ross telephones Jane of his arrival and she invites him to a dinner party to be given by her husband. An hour before he leaves for the Campbell home Ross dispatches a letter addressed to Campbell. Jane receives the letter and asks Strong to take it to her husband, who is mixing a cocktail in the dining room. Jane joins Ross and other guests. Campbell asks Strong to open the letter, which he does, and receives the poison intended for Campbell. Strong becomes partially paralyzed and Campbell picks up the letter. It states that Strong has been intimate with Jane Campbell becomes infuriated and is about to strike Strong when the latter topples over, striking a chair and sustaining a fracture of the skull. A maid, hearing the altercation, and seeing Campbell start to strike Strong, summons a policeman. Campbell is arrested for murder, tried and convicted. Jane learns of the poison that Ross used to kill her husband and steals incense from which the poisonous vapors arise, and laboratory notes from the Ross apartments. That night she invites Ross to her home, after a spurious confession of love for him. She secretes a police captain and doctor in her home and tells them she intends to prove her husband's innocence. When Ross arrives she lights the incense in a bowl. It has the same perfume as the poison, but not the deadly effect. Ross tries to escape from the room, but finds all the doors locked. In the madness that overwhelms him, he confesses his guilt and is arrested, while Jane and Campbell are reunited.

Richmond Times Dispatch Oct 24

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT ACADEMY ALL THE WEEK

With a score of electricians and mechanics preparing the playhouse for the reception of the massive "The Birth of a Nation" production when the company arrives to-night the Academy of Music has been a busy spot. Extensive changes in the stage and auditorium are necessitated by the coming of the spectacle that has enthralled New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, and neither effort nor expense is being spared by the local management to provide the company with proper facilities.

In the first place, a large block of seats must be removed from the rear of the orchestra floor, where a booth housing two large projecting machines and other electrical paraphernalia is to be installed. An optical expert sent in advance of the company measured to the fraction of an inch the distance necessary for proper focal adjustment in a theater of the dimensions of the Academy of Music.

Then the stage and orchestra pit require rearrangement. The bewildering array of equipment used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects requires every possible inch of space on the stage. Twenty men are employed "back-stage" in working the effects, not counting a squad of "supers" who do nothing but shout at the command of the stage director. And these commands, be it understood, are not spoken. Colored incandescents are scattered over the dozens of separate "props," and each is controlled from a switch not unlike the keyboard of a piano, which the director operates. The glimmer of a red light on a piece of equipment means to the trained handler that it is to be used for a certain effect, while an instant later, at the sign of a blue light, the same "prop" is to be used for an entirely different effect. The stage staff is kept at high tension throughout the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle, which they never see.

Thirty men in the orchestra, twenty of whom are carried by the company, will also require more room in the musicians' pit than is needed for the average attraction. The pit has been stripped of all its superfluous furnishings, and it may yet be necessary to place one of the harpists in a lower box, as has been done in other cities.

While the extent of the preparations necessary for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in a theater gives a fair idea of the massiveness of the production, it is only after one has witnessed the spectacle that he can appreciate its grandeur and realism. Some facts of its vastness are given herewith:

The play contains 5,000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses, cost $500,000 for actual production expense and took eight months to produce. The story is divided into two acts, and the total time of performance is two hours and forty minues. Some of the greatest battles of the War Between the States are re-enacted. Atlanta, as it was in 1864, is built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant are shown at Appomattox, Ford's Theater, Washington, is reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Events of the reconstruction are pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku-Klux Klan riders that commandeered a county for a day.

Women's dresses used 1,000 yards and Ku-Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Wonderful artillery duels are shown, in which real shells were used. One sees miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—and war as it actually is."

This great spectacle and drama will be shown at the Academy of Music all the week, beginning to-morrow night, with a matinee every day after to-morrow.

RECALLS CHARLES H. HOYT AS PLAYWRIGHT AND PRODUCER

F. R. Zweifel, Manager of 'Birth of a Nation,' One of Managers of Famous Theatrical Man

Tells of Associations With Works and Stage Folk Who Appeared in Them for Many Years

CHARLES H. HOYT, playwright and producer, is dead; but theatergoers who remember the gentle satire of "A Temperance Town," "A Milk-White Flag" or any of his other plays, and theatrical men who were personally associated with him, still enjoy their recollection of the days of his supremacy.

Among the few Hoyt managers who are still active in the theater world is Fred R. Zweifel, manager of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest Theater. Mr. Zweifel entered Hoyt's employ while a young man. He managed the important Hoyt productions for nearly fifteen years and held the confidence and friendship of the author during a great part of his professional life. Before the matinee at the Forrest yesterday, Mr. Zweifel recounted some of Hoyt's famous enterprises.

"I had come up to New York from my home in Galveston looking for a job," he said, "when one day in a hotel I was introduced to Mr. Hoyt. He seemed to take a fancy to me and soon asked me whether I knew anything about bookkeeping. When I told him that I was thoroughly experienced in the keeping of books, he suggested that I enter his employ. The offer was attractive and I went into his New York office.

"At that time, about 1889, he had written 'A Parlor Match' and 'A Rag Baby.' Then came 'A Tin Soldier.' Hoyt and Thomas were the owners, and soon after I had been broken into work around the theater I was sent on the road with the piece. In the cast were Flora Walsh, who was the first Mrs. Hoyt; Paul Dresser, remembered as the composer of the song 'On the Banks of the Wabash'; James T. Powers and Alice Walsh.

"The next play was 'A Brass Monkey.' Flora Walsh was again in that cast, which included also Tim Murphy, Otis Harlan and William Mack, the original 'Razzle Dazzle' trio. Hoyt was making a great deal of money at that time, but he had still greater success when he put out 'A Texas Steer.' That play made $150,000 a season for three years, and we were in Washington with it for four weeks, an unprecedented stay for any theatrical company at the capital. Tim Murphy and Flora Walsh headed the cast, and George Marion was an important member.

Began Plays With 'A'

"Every Hoyt play began with the capital letter 'A'. Hoyt seemed to have a superstition regarding the matter. His next play was 'A Hole in the Ground.' In that Miss Walsh was the leading player and associated with her were Frank Lawton, George Richards and Alice Evans, who became Mrs. Wilton Lackaye. 'A Milk-White Flag' was the next product, and in the cast were Isabelle Coe, who subsequently became Mrs. Frank McKee; Clarice Agnew, later the bride of a millionaire tin plate magnate, and Julian Mitchell, who was seen as the corpse. As you know, there was music, singing and dancing in all the Hoyt plays, and the music was written either by Percy Gaunt or Richard Stahl. The customary arrangement was to have six songs in each play, but 'A Milk-White Flag' was the exception, having a larger number.

FRED R. ZWEIFEL

For many years Mr. Zweifel, who is manager of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest Theater, enjoyed the confidences, professional and personal, of Charles H. Hoyt, the famous playwright and producer. He is one of three Hoyt managers who are still active in the theater world.

"Harry Gilfoil, who is still occasionally seen in vaudeville as Baron Sands, had that role and made his reputation as a comedian in 'A Trip to Chinatown.' That was the next play chronologically in the Hoyt output. Bessie Clayton was in the cast and so was Lois Fuller. Old theatergoers will probably still remember Harry Connor, as Weiland Strong. Other familiar names in that cast are Lucy and Margaret Daly, and John Hyams, musical comedy star.

"'A Temperance Town' had in its cast George Richards and Eugene Canfield. Three actresses played the part of Ruth. One of these was Anna Robinson, who later married a title; Elsie Lombard, widow of John T. Brush, baseball magnate, and Caroline Miskel, who was the second Mrs. Hoyt. Miss Miskel was married to Mr. Hoyt two years after the death of Flora Walsh.

"'A Contented Woman' was written for Caroline Miskel, and I recall in the cast William Currie, now manager for William A. Brady; Lee Harrison, Kate Uart, Richard Dillon, and Gertrude Dawes, who is the present Mrs. Ralph Delmore. 'A Black Sheep' was written for William Hoey, but before production was made Otis Harlan became the star, and he appeared in the play for three seasons. In that cast Eddie Garvey, Eleanor Falk, who is now in vaudeville; William Hatter, William Mack, Nellie Butler, Florence Wicks and William Devere were prominent. 'A Black Sheep' marked the height of Mr. Hoyt's achievements.

"Three plays were written subsequently, but they marked a change in his method. He allowed himself to be influenced by what he thought was a changing public taste, and so he dropped the satire that had been his greatest asset, and sought to please the alleged Broadway taste for tenderloin plays. The first of these new style plays was 'A Stranger in New York.'

Written for Harry Conor

"It was written for Harry Conor, who starred in it for several seasons. Associated with him were Harry Gilfoil, Jeanette St. Henry, John Hyams, Amy and Leah Angeles, Joseph Coyne, who is now a London idol; Sam Marion, Paul Nicholson and Angie Norton, well-known to vaudeville.

"'A Day and a Night' was practically the last of Hoyt's plays, although later he wrote and had produced 'A Dog in the Manger,' which was withdrawn after three days. For the former, Otis Harlan and William Devere were the stars, and in the cast were William Currie, Alma Kremer, Hattie Williams, Grace Rutter (now Grace Elliston), Louise Gunning and Nellie O'Neil.

"During fourteen years and eight months, to be precise, I was manager of the Hoyt plays, and my association with Charles Hoyt was ever a delight. His employes were his friends, and it was a rare thing for his actors or his business office employes to resign. Hoyt died at Hartford, Conn., and is buried at Charlestown, N. H., where his beautiful old home is a legacy to aged members of the Lambs' Club. He was born in Concord, N. H., and before he took up playwriting he conducted the 'All Sorts' column on the Boston Post. The first play that he wrote was called 'Gifford's Luck.' It must have been a sad thing, for Hoyt and William Harris often laughed over it. You see, 'Gifford's Luck' did not have the talismanic capital 'A.'

"There was one thing that Hoyt would not permit and that was the changing of any line or situation in any of his plays without his full sanction. I believe his influence was uplifting and I know he did a great deal for the old-time variety actor, for he brought that discredited player from the Bowery to Broadway and gave him a genuine vogue.

"There are many stories that crowd upon me to show the quick wit of Hoyt. He was never at a loss for a rejoiner nor for a witty remark. You know how some one in the street sometimes will move from side to side as you move in the same direction and how foolish you will feel when there seems no means of passing the other fellow. In Boston one day, Hoyt dodged from side to side to avoid collision with a stranger, who seemed more active even than Hoyt. 'Say,' said Hoyt, 'what is this, a waltz or a schottische?'

The Miserly Music Director

"Boston streets are notoriously crooked and in the business sections they are usually crowded. It was a favorite remark of Hoyt that 'You've got to be a tight-rope walker to walk the streets of Boston.'

He was always doing or saying the unusual. We had a musical director once who was a pretty shabby sort of person. He was well paid, but he was so mean that he would hunt up the cheapest lodging in any city. One day in Boston it was necessary for us to have a rehearsal. We looked everywhere, but we could not find this fellow. No one knew where he was staying. Hoyt was equal to the emergency. 'Come in here,' he said to Otis Harlan and me, and we followed him into a cigar store. 'I want three of those canes,' he said to the man behind the counter. Each of us took a stick and sallied forth. We walked to the corner of the street where several alleys chocked with ash barrels were in evidence.

"You go up there, Otis,' said Hoyt, 'and Fred, you go the other way. I'll go down this street. I want you fellows to jab your canes in every ash barrel you see.'

"'What for?' asked Harlan.

"'He might leap out.'"

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Announcement has been made that Atlantans will be given the opportunity of seeing that great triumph of scenic art, "The Birth of a Nation," early in December.

Following that announcement a committee of three citizens called on Mayor Woodward to ask the suppression of the spectacle. Of this committee only one had seen the picture, the others knowing nothing of it from personal view. The protest was based on the idea that the picture might stir up race prejudice.

Mayor Woodward will doubtless ignore it altogether, inasmuch as the picture has been shown in a number of southern cities already and will be seen in others before coming here. According to the newspapers and authorities in all these cities no disturbance of any character has marred the performances.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been running in New York for a year and will remain there another year, as far as one can predict. It was shown first in the south at Norfolk. Wyndham R. Mayo, mayor of Norfolk, went on record in a telegram to Atlanta as follows:

"'The Birth of a Nation' was shown here a whole week to crowded houses day and night with no disturbance of any kind. The show is spoken of as most wonderful and instructive. The overwhelming sentiment in Norfolk is that it may be shown anywhere in the United States with both pleasure and profit. Before it was shown here I was requested not to permit it. I refused to interfere and it would have been a mistake had I done so."

Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of the Norfolk chapter of the U. D. C., said:

"'The Birth of a Nation' is wonderful. There are a few things that are not agreeable, but to make history correct this has to be with the pleasant. There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness. Tears and sunshine are well coupled. It is a revelation and all southerners should see it and glory in its teachings."

In Knoxville, in Chattanooga, in Asheville, in Spartanburg and in other southern cities, the reception accorded the spectacle has been the same as at Norfolk. It is perhaps the greatest photo spectacle ever made; it teaches a great thought and moral. It is no incendiary, fire-eating picture. As The Americus Times-Recorder says, "There is nothing sensational in it. Sons of the south and sons of the north can join hands in the heartsome feeling of love and good fellowship as they see it. More than one million persons have already seen it in this spirit."

Hundreds of Atlantans have seen and enjoyed the picture. They have told their countless friends of its wonders and its great attractiveness.

THE BIRTH OF THE NATION COMING

The Last Word in Moving Picture Enterprise for an Entire Week at the Court.

D. W. Griffith's supurb spectacle, "The Birth of the Nation," will be placed on view at the Court theatre Monday evening, November first, continuing for the entire week with five matinees and six nights. "The Birth of the Nation" may well be termed the last word in moving picture enterprise. It outclasses everything of the kind that has ever before been attempted. It is doubtful if a more historic picture will ever be produced than this. It is a reproduction of many of the more important scenes and incidents associated with the Civil war. In brief, it places on view—panorama like in an entertainment of about three hours in a most vivid manner events of more than four years duration. This is so forcefully presented that it makes a lasting impression upon all who see it. The intensity of its realism is almost beyond comprehension. A portion of Sherman's march from Atlanta to the sea, which has been made famous in song and story, is vividly portrayed as is also the battle of Atlanta, fought under the glare of the brilliant lights from the cannon's mouth. More than 18,000 persons are shown in this stupendous work to say nothing of thousands of horses. There is intense excitement from the time the curtain goes up until it falls on the final act, when peace again reigns throughout the republic.

In times of great crisis the best and the worst that is in men usually predominates. This has been the history of the world and probably never more forcefully illustrated than during the French Revolution and the four years from 1861 to 1865, covering the period of the Civil war in the United States. The efforts at re-construction was in many respects more injurious to the South than was the war itself. Many of the southern states became over-run with unscrupulous men from the North who sought to take advantage of the 4,000,000 blacks who had been set free, using them for their self agrandizement thus elevating themselves to positions of governors, representatives in Congress and United States senators. It was these disruptable whites in the North who were instrumental in bringing about discord between the two races in the South. South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana fell into the hands of northern carpetbaggers, and it was not until about ten years after that this element was completely dislodged from power and stable government established by those who lived there and who were interested in the welfare and future of the Southland. Race hatred had never before been known until the carpetbaggers exercised their influence over the blacks, from whom Mr. Lincoln had unshackled the chains of slavery.

"The Birth of a Nation," as set forth in the picture, is a faithful representation of events as they took place and have so been verified by historians of both the North and the South. It shows among many of the important episodes of the time, the assassination of President Lincoln and the historic meeting of Lee and Grant under the apple tree at Appomattox, where was signed the Declaration of Peace. The picture begins by first showing the curse of slavery Massachusetts, and concludes by giving a vivid portrayal of the colored man of the present time being his own master, the accumulator of wealth, respected citizenship, living in obedience to the laws of the country and willing to fight and die for its preservation.

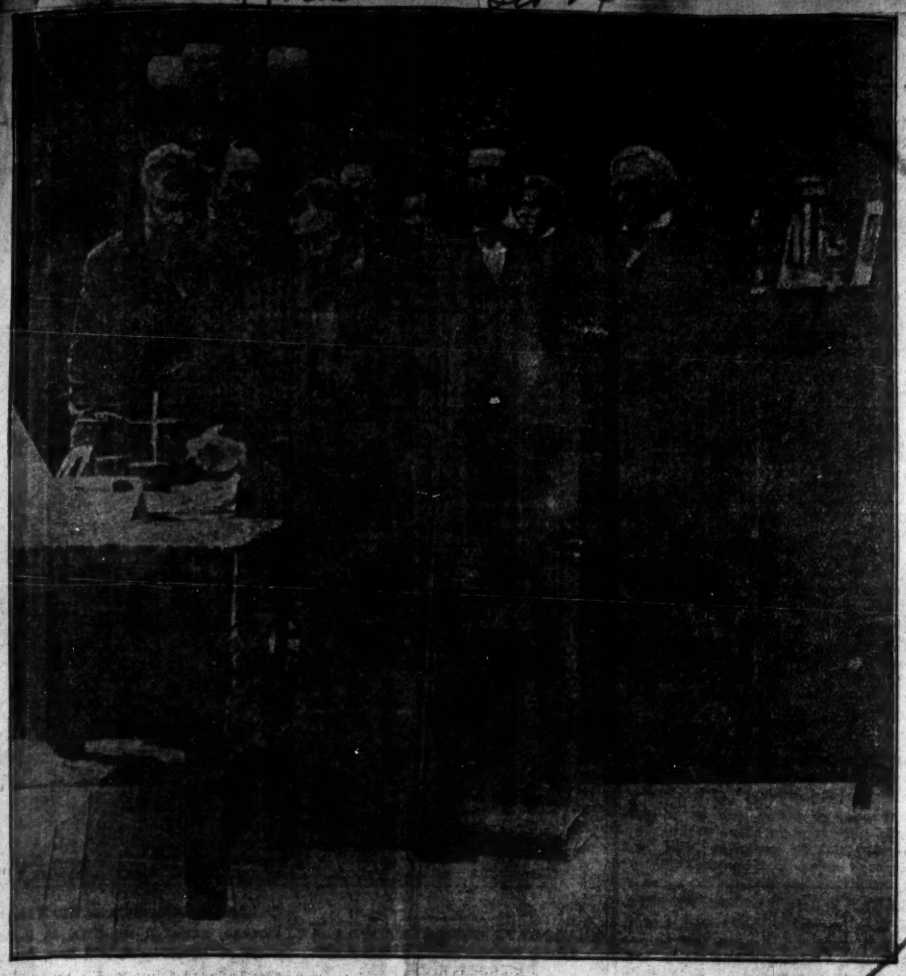
The Birth of the Nation will be on view at the Court theatre for eleven performances, opening on Monday night, matinee daily thereafter. It will be presented here exactly the same as it is in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and other of the large cities

FORREST—It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" to take note of the fact that this tremendously successful spectacle will never be shown in any but the finest theatres and at prices customarily charged for the best theatrical attractions. D. W. Griffith, creator of this epoch-making film, has made this fact clear in definite statements over his signature. Continuance of the popularity of this entertainment in Philadelphia is paralleled in other important communities and there is no abatement in interest here or elsewhere, as is manifested by the crowded house at afternoon and evening performances alike. Although daily matinees are given, there seems at times hardly enough opportunity for the public to be given proper accommodation. However, the arrangement, still in operation, permitting the buying of seats two weeks in advance, has been a means of satisfying many people who otherwise might have been disappointed at the box office.

So many elements enter into the success of "The Birth of a Nation" that an enumeration of the merits of the production might prove tedious. But it should be said that the musical accompaniment to the picture, embracing folk songs, national anthems, engaging dance melodies and some of the finest compositions of the world's best composers, has no small part in contributing to entertainment. This music is played by a symphonic orchestra and each selection is fitted so closely to the shifting scene as to be an integral part of the exhibition. A finely selected company of actors is seen in historic and romantic roles and there are tremendous battle scenes, wonderful night rides by the famous Ku Klux Klan, delightful bits of comedy and of romance, and in a visualization of historic events.

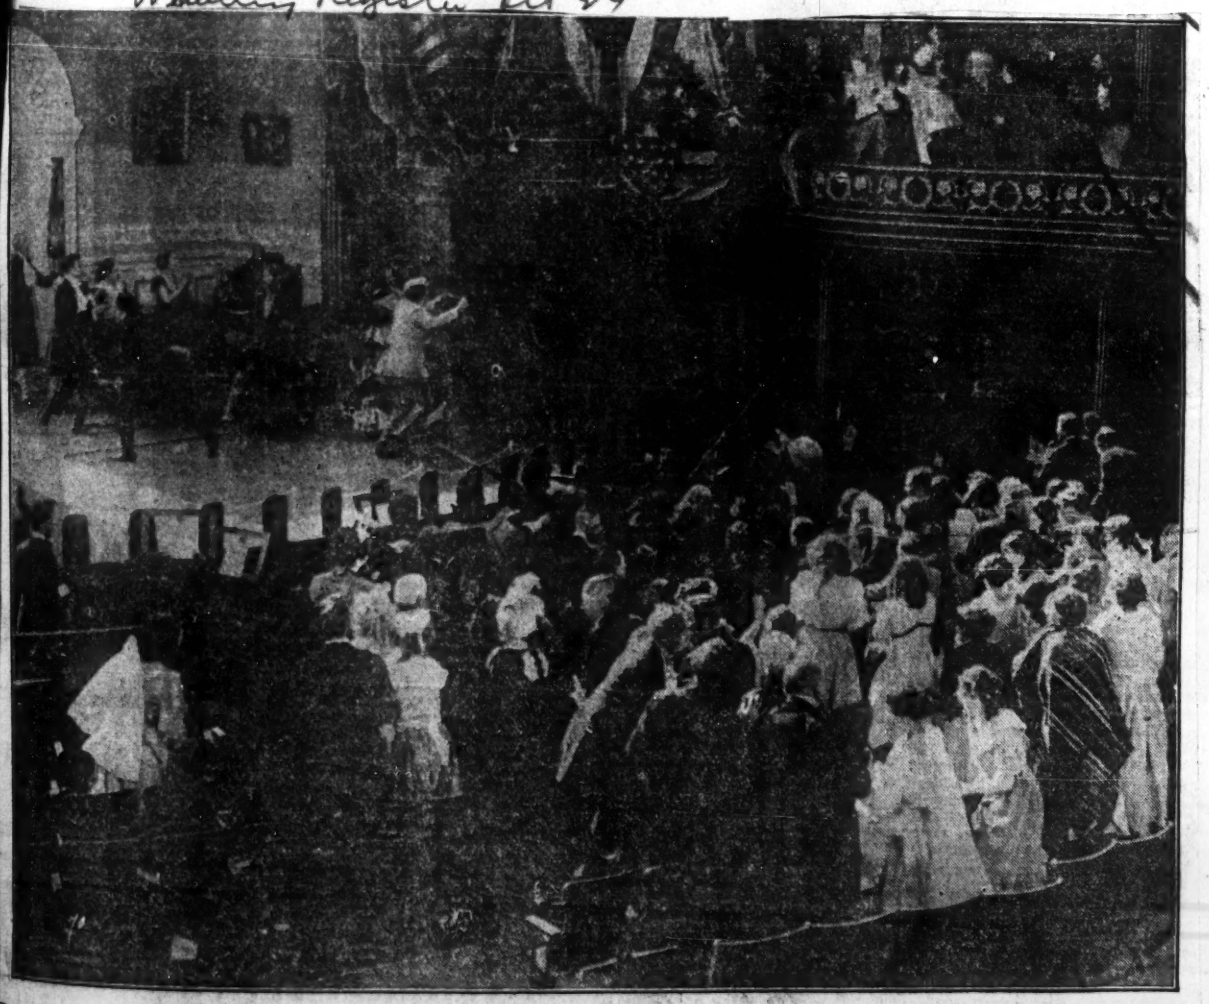
Wheeling Local News Oct 24

235—



President Lincoln singing the first call for Volunteers at the breaking out of the Civil War, as shown in "Birth of a Nation," which begins a weeks' engagement at the Court, Monday evening, November 1st.

Wheeling Register Oct 24



The assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theatre, Washington, as shown in "The Birthof a Nation," which will be seen at the Court Theatre for one week beginning Monday evening, November 1st.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING

GREAT PICTURE SPECTACLE WILL BE SHOWN FULL WEEK AT COURT.

The greatest spectacle that has ever been brought forth in moving pictures is conceded to be "The Birth of a Nation," which was evolved in the fertile brain of Dr. W. Griffith, recognized as the master mind in the moving picture world. This great spectacle will be shown here at the Court theatre for one week, beginning Monday evening, November 1, with matinees Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. "The Birth of a Nation" is founded upon the historical novel, "The Clansman," written by the Rev. Thomas Dixon of New York, though a native of North Carolina.

Mr. Griffith has compressed, as it were, the events of four years' duration into an entertainment of upward of three hours, and during the entire progress of the presentation of the pictures there are continuous thrills of excitement, made so because of the historical importance of the events shown. The battle of Atlanta, fought at night, the field of carnage illuminated by the bursting of the shells and the glare of the flames emanating from the mouth of the cannon—truly a spectacle never before attempted, and certainly never before seen except in real life. Mr. Griffith has portrayed many of the great scenes of the Civil war in so realistic a manner that to see it is akin to living during that period—from 1861 to 1865.

"The Birth of a Nation" has often been referred to as really the eighth wonder of the world, and so it well may be termed, for it surpasses all efforts in enterprises of this character. Historians of both the north and south who have written of the great conflict seem to be unanimous in their opinions that the period of reconstruction did more to inflame the southern people against the north than was brought about during the four years of contest in the open and upon the field of battle.

Reconstruction was unfortunately the work of a few thousand carpetbaggers—men discredited in the north in their own political parties, who went south to prey upon the ignorance and credulity of the untutored blacks who had been suddenly released from bondage, and who were made to believe by the designing carpetbaggers that they would replace their former masters in the political and social life of those states wherein the institution of slavery had existed.

Had there not been this band of political highwaymen—the carpetbaggers—affairs of the south would gradually have assumed their normal condition and race hatred would not have been known. The carpetbaggers were made up of what might be termed "soldiers of fortune," whose ambitions were greed for office, and this most of them succeeded in securing. Some became governors, others, through fraud and trickery, were sent to congress as representatives and United States senators, but the colored people themselves secured practically nothing in the officeholding line, but their votes only utilized to elevate the disreputable carpetbag element into high official positions.

Were in Power.

For almost ten years the carpetbaggers were really in the saddle in the south, and not until they were driven from power did the south begin to progress and a better understanding prevailed between the whites and blacks. The picture illustrates the advancement which has been made by the colored population in the south, where they have become property holders, together with the enormous wealth they have created and has acquired, likewise showing the uplift which has come to them in the matter of education.

"The Birth of a Nation" is said to said to be the most expensive undertaking of this character that has ever been attempted. There are shown in it more people than was ever brought together upon a similar occasion. It is estimated there are probably 18,000 men and women shown in the picture from beginning to end and several thousand head of horses. There is hardly a quiet moment during the time the picture is being shown. The realism which is given by Mr. Griffith makes it one continual round of thrills and excitement. Oftentime audiences break into uproars of patriotic cheering. Mr. Griffith spares no expense in producing "The Birth of a Nation." He utilizes about twenty-five musicians in the orchestra for the purpose of giving to the picture the genuine realism the subject requires.

Beaumont Enterprise Oct 25

Real Comedy in Birth of a Nation

Paul Le Blanc and Miss Lillian Gish.

A great deal of film comedy is horseplay, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Kyle theatre Wednesday night, proves that quiet refined comedy is a big laugh maker and pleases people better than the old-style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the lovesick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul Le Blanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doubles of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Miss Lillian Gish wears her costums of Civil War and reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the manner born and not awkwardly moving about in habilliments to which they are unaccustomed.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 25

"The Birth of a Nation," which enters into the second week of its engagement at the Miles Theater this afternoon, and which also marks the beginning of the ninth week of its stay in this city, has proved to be the most successful theatrical attraction, whether dramatic or motion picture play, on record. No stage offering in the history of the theater has enjoyed the long runs that this photo spectacle is enjoying, not only in this city, but everywhere throughout the country. But D. W. Griffith's spectacle of Civil War and reconstruction periods is intense, vital, gripping and human.

Pittsburgh Post Oct 25

"The Birth of a Nation," the greatest photo spectacle, continues at the Miles Theater, the ninth week of its stay in this city. No show has enjoyed the long runs of this famous photo spectacle.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 25

Starts Ninth Week.

"The Birth of a Nation," which enters into the second week of its engagement at the Miles theater this afternoon, and which also marks the beginning of the ninth week of its stay in this city has proved to be the most marvelous theatrical attraction, whether dramatic or motion picture play, on record. No stage offering in the history of the stage has enjoyed the long runs that this famous photo-spectacle is enjoying, not only in this city but everywhere throughout the country. But D. W. Griffith's spectacle of Civil war and reconstruction periods is intense, vital, gripping and human.

News Leader Richmond Oct 25

"The Birth of a Nation" Tonight.

Everything is in readiness at the Academy of Music for the opening of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" tonight. The company with its carload of equipment arrived late last night and the work of installing the production was begun early this morning. While a score of electricians and mechanics were engaged in setting the stage and removing seats from the rear of the auditorium to make room for the company's elaborate projecting devices, the orchestra of thirty which is to accompany the spectacle through the two hours and forty minutes that it runs, was busy rehearsing. All-day rehearsals are necessary wherever the spectacle is presented because the twenty musicians carried by the company are augmented by ten local men.

The musical score will be appreciated by RICHMOND playgoers as closely approaching grand opera. But the thunderous passages of rapine and battle are softened by quaint old melodies of the Southland which ripple through the score, together with an original strain which is synchronized to all the love scenes.

The Academy stage has never held a more varied assortment of "props" than is used in the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation." Twenty men are employed "back stage" in working these effects. Fifty people, altogether, are employed in each presentation.

San Antonio Ex. Oct 25

ANNOUNCEMENTS

"The Birth of a Nation."

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Grand Opera House all next week, is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through this valley in straggling formation or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, dear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the South. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the Confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox court house with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture, in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

Danville Bee Oct 25

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

NEXT BIG ATTRACTION AT THE MAJESTIC—THREE DAYS, BEGINNING NOV. 1ST.

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner," who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the Patents' Office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

LILLIAN GISH, a starry-eyed beauty, who will be seen as Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic Theatre the first half of next week.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play. Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday by "The Birth of a Nation" Company, making five performances in all at the Majestic and seats for the whole engagement will go on sale at Booth's drug store Wednesday morning.

Galveston Tribune Oct 25

Grand Opera House.

"The Birth of a Nation," the motion picture with music showing at the Grand, has created a profound impression in Galveston, and despite numerous counter attractions yesterday drew capacity houses for both matinee and night. There is another capacity house present for this afternoon's matinee and every indication that it will be a case of sold out early for tonight.

In this offering there has been a wonderful combination of marvelous photoplay and appropriate music. There is no escaping from being interested in the picture once a spectator lets himself get a view of it.

It is safe to say that never before has there been a motion picture which had such powerful effect upon the audience. There are cheers and enthusiastic applause at the thrilling scenes. The people seem to forget that they are just looking at a photographic portrayal of some historical event. They seem to feel that they are living this history themselves.

"The Birth of a Nation" is truly a marvelous spectacle and in every foot of reel reveals the touch of a master hand in photoplay production. Incidentally it opens the way for even greater things to come and there is no doubt that these greater things will come to pass.

Tonight will see the close of this production's engagement at the Grand.

Wheeling Telegraph Oct 25

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL BE HERE FOR A WEEK

Miss Lillian Gish, who plays the part of Elsie Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" which will be seen at the Court Theatre all of next week, the engagement beginning next Monday evening.

One of the dominant figures in the story of "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a week's engagement at the Court Theatre, on Monday, November [illegible], is that of Thaddeus Stevens, at that time a representative in congress from the Lancaster, Pennsylvania district, and for the greater period of the civil war chairman of the ways and means committee in the lower house of congress, therefore practically the leader of his party on the floor of the house. Stevens developed into one of the most pronounced abolitionists in the country. He was a man of many peculiarities. He was born a cripple—club foot—and this may have been the reason why he was not particularly amiable in his temperament.

Mr. Stevens was a man of rare mental power, but historians have said of him that he was not always well balanced, that in some respects he exhibited true statesmanship, while upon other occasions his narrowness of mind obstructed what might otherwise have been a more extended vision of government affairs. Little is known of Stevens's birth. From those who knew him best the information has been handed down that he was, in truth, an illegitimate son of Talleyrand, the great French statesman and diplomat and advisor to Napoleon, who came to this country in the early part of the Nineteenth century, a few years after the French revolution, remaining here some two or three years, and much of his time was spent in and about Lancaster and other portions of Eastern Pennsylvania.

Mr. Stevens had as his housekeeper during his congressional career in Washington, a mulatto woman who shared his confidences both personal and political, and who in many ways he treated as his social equal. It was men of Stevens's type who did much to engender bitter feeling between the north and south. His integrity was never questioned, but his abnormal devotion to members of the black race, and intimate social realtions with colored men and women did much to estrange him from the social friendship of his political associates, particularly men of the class of Charles Sumner, who, while they were opposed to the institution of slavery, could not believe in social equality of the two races. Mr. Stevens was often excluded from the council of his party, though one of its greatest leaders, because many of his political associates would have nothing to do with him on account of his pronounced views on the race question. Mr. Stevens is known in the play as "Addison Stoneman," and is a conspicuous personage almost through the entire progress of the picture.

Kansas City Times Oct 25

FIRST OF THE $2 "MOVIES"

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IS A STUPENDOUS SERIES OF THRILLS.

Big Orchestra Intensifies Wild Scenes of Battle and Swift Vengeance in the Film-Opera at the Grand —Other New Bills.

It is here, the first of the $2 "movies"—the "picture" that is running away with all records of "$2 shows" in New York and Chicago. Is it worth the price? That will be the first question asked. If an entertainment is to be measured by its thrills, it is. A vote of the big audience at the Grand last night probably would have made it unanimous.

In the first place, "The Birth of a Nation" is something more than a motion picture, something more than a photo-play or photo-pageant or whatever pretentious title rings loudest. The real "hunch" of D. W. Griffith, apart from the exploitation of a double-barrel patriotism, was to use music with motion pictures as it has never been used before. What is probably the biggest orchestra ever seated in the Grand gives intensity to every passing emotion of the scenes. The music is so carefully adjusted to the action, and takes such a strong part in enhancing its effects, that it might be accurately described as a spectacular film-opera.

The program ignores the fact that this "picture" is founded on a much read and much hated novel, so a reviewer may do likewise, especially as the essentially impressive scenes are historical rather than fictional. The earlier scenes in the story of those characters that are carried through the two "acts" are indeed moving. The happiness of the old South, the call to arms, the partings and the sufferings of those left behind—these need no fictional setting to drive home the realism of their representation. But the gist of the first part is not the sympathy aroused for these individuals, but the stupendous staging of battle scenes in which veritable armies meet in desperate encounters amidst the din of savage music. A whole battle field is shown with infantry in the trenches and melting in assault on the enemy's lines, and artillery sowing destruction among men and buildings, with incidents carefully planned to call out applause in turn for North and South. The other great scene of the first part is the representation of the assassination of Lincoln, showing the whole theater, audience and spectacle.

This is the tragic climax of the "act," as it was the profoundly tragic climax of the period. The miserable fate of the South under Lincoln's all too inadequate successor is the subject of the second part of the performance. But, since the conditions and means of the reconstruction were not identical throughout the South, differing at least in the intensity of passions they aroused, the story loses some of its historical scope and falls back on the persecution and suffering of individuals in whom we have already been interested. As to the wisdom of parading this terrible page of history before a mixed audience, and particularly some of its incidents, there has been much discussion elsewhere. Again it is largely a matter of locality. The whole act purports to represent the domination of the South by carpet-baggers and their negro henchmen and its suppression by the Ku Klux Klan. This once more invites pictorial pageantry, beginning with the assembling of the clans, their capture of a town and finally the spectacular rescue of the beleaguered whites with whose fate the story is concerned. In this, music plays its loudest part, fierce trumpet calls answering and re-answering each other in wild summons.

There will be a matinee performance of "The Birth of a Nation" every day.

K W

Galveston D. News Oct 26

Grand Audience Likes Battles.

The battle scenes—some of the most elaborate, minutely accurate picturizations of the kind ever made, and surpassing certainly, in magnitude at least—these are the uncorking agents which loose the enthusiasm of the big audiences that have been seeing D. W. Griffith's master motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," at Grand Opera House. Today's matinee and evening performances will be Galvestonians' last chance to see the film. They packed the theater yesterday afternoon and night.

The play is magnified from the drama by Thomas Dixon, "The Clansman," so familiar to book-lovers and theatergoers. Its scenes are stupendous in their scope, infinitesimal in their detail; the action is swift and clean-cut from beginning to end. It weaves a romance through the civil war and the bitter reconstruction period, making use of the best of the innumerable dramatic facts of those troublous times.

The conflict over the crude, raw principles that precipitated that great struggle of the mid-nineteenth century away old and young, irrespective of descent or palitical inclination—for the picture is umbiased and seeks to preach the useless waste of strife.

But it is when the battle scenes are moving on the screen that the blood runs hottest. Always the greatest applause is when "The Little Colonel," the southern Ku Klux Klansman leader who loves the daughter of the great radical abolitionist, wounded, feebly waving his standard, alone charges the federal trench and rams the flag into the cannon's mouth. Then pandemonium reigns, furnished by the corps of supers—the "mob" back stage.

Kansas City Post Oct 25

'BIRTH OF NATION,' TWO DOLLAR FILM, SCORES AT GRAND

Great American Silent Drama Holds Rapt Attention of Big Crowds.

AWES AND THRILLS

Tells in Graphic Scenes Stirring Periods of United States History.

Kansas City accepted the $2 movie last night when a thronged house witnessed the spectacular film, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand. From the moment the first picture was thrown on the screen at 8:15 o'clock until 11:05 o'clock, when the last scene died away, the audience was all attention. Applause, the like of which few plays receive, rang out through the theater time and again.

There is only one way to get any idea of the greatness of "The Birth of a Nation," and that is to see it. Never before has such a masterpiece been thrown on the screen in Kansas City. It is just what every Eastern critic has said, "a masterpiece of masterpieces."

Sets Pace for Future.

"The Birth of a Nation" sets a pace for the mummers' art for the future. It is a superb achievement in which more drama is shown than was ever before seen on the stage of a theater in the same number of hours.

Ten years of strenuous times, the period just previous to the great Civil war, and the years of struggle between the North and the South, with brothers facing each other on the firing line, are covered in the three hours of film. One sees the armies stretching twenty miles through the valleys, the deadly work of the infantry and artillery, the dead and wounded in heaps in the trenches and between the lines, as first one side and then the other charges in the face of the deadly fire, and the devastation of the South as Sherman's successful army swept all before it on the march to the sea.

Love Story Adds Interest.

And then the war ends. President Lincoln signs the proclamation freeing the slaves, signs pardons for many southerners for whom radical members of the senate advocate the rope. Then the fateful night in the Ford theater when President Lincoln was assassinated.

The radicals in power, conditions follow which result in the organization of the Ku-Klux Klan, a force of 3,000 southern white men. These horsemen, dressed in their white flowing garbs, make a spectacular sight, riding here and there.

A beautiful love story runs through the entire length of the film, giving it an added interest. Sketches of the life of a typical southern family are more forceful than all the melodramas ever written around that great period of American history.

The film will be shown twice daily for an indefinite period at the Grand.

Richmond Virginia Oct 25

5-29

MOVIES SUPREME IN POETRY, ART AND ACTING

SAYS DAVID W. GRIFFITH

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

MOST remarkable of recent changes in the theatre has been the appearance of "kings that knew not Joseph"; of sceptres seized from dying dynasties and wielded by new hands; of rules with Aladdin-like fortunes who dash from coast to coast, build translucent cities, engage and dissolve armies overnight and create ephemeral enterprises—all to make an American holiday—beside the magnitude of which much historical pioneering and concoction of actual events seem but child's play.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement magnates—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Wark Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision dominating Griffith undoubtedly comes from some obscure Welsh bardic strain.

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The Birth of a Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the plot. In this case there was a previous stage play. If we are wise we forget that as much as we can, for picture is a narration of [illegible] the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, nation. By the way, twenty-four 'Lincoln actors' were rehearsed before the right Lincoln was found! The Blue and the Gray, and the Southern white gentry all have been drilled under their respective leaders. And then film making begins.

"At an early stage of the work—after the rough outlines have been filled in—the scenario is thrown away. The building and rebuilding of the story, the piecing of intimate bits and the discarding of the useless go right on while we are living the history, so to speak, from day to day. Nearly twenty-eight miles of pictures—140,000 feet of film—are taken. And how much of these are used? At the finale we discover that we have thrown away eight-tenths of our product—we have remaining 26,000 feet, or, say, five miles of consecutive story. But that is twice too long. We condense, condense, condense. At the end of two months more of hard labor we have edited 'The Birth of a Nation' to 12,000 or 13,000 feet—two and a half miles—or, in theatre wise, two hours and forty-five minutes' stage entertainment."

"How about the cavalry and war effects?"

"We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked up everywhere.

"Our thousands and thousands of cavalry-of today may similarly seem unnatural or impossible to the people two hundred years hence. But the immortal stories will be there, the world's legacy of great characters and great scenes, to be picturized according to the changed ideals of the succeeding generations."

"What is your principal requirement as to motion picture actors?"

"Actors with souls!" was the emphatic response. "I know there is much talk of picture types, blonde types and all that, but over and above technical requirements, so called, is the demand for people of great personalities, of sincere, true emotion and the untheatrical expression thereof.

"Somehow, most of the stars who come to us from the regular stage lack the sincerity, at least in their earlier efforts before the camera. Mrs. Fiske, in 'Tess,' was a notable exception. I know she drew from me the tribute of tears. The Comedie Francaise actors, notably Coquelin and Le Bargy, who appeared in some of the French pictures, were wonderful in the breadth and strength of their exquisite character portrayals. On the other hand, some of the most widely advertised and most admired spectacular pictures from abroad suffered from the defect of mediocrity in [illegible] scenes. Of course, [illegible] masters? Here in America we are [illegible] a school of silent actors who bid fair to surpass the finest efforts of the Old World schools.

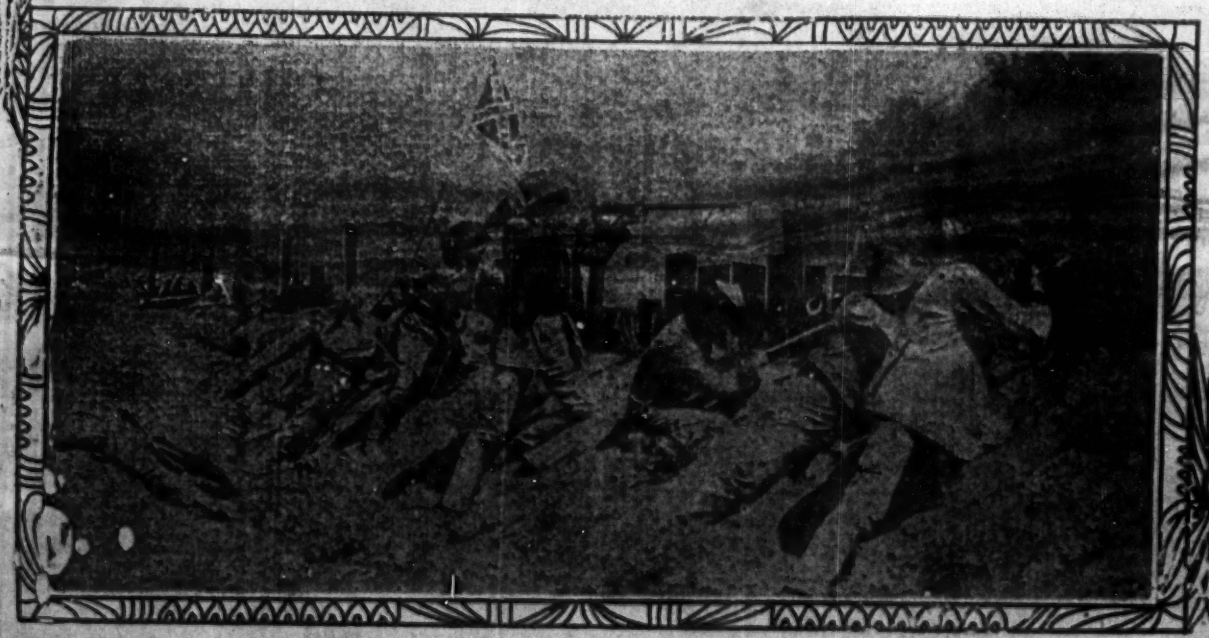
idea of the tremendous technical difficulties involved."

"Will the motion picture ever develop into a true work of art?" was the next question, somewhat rudely asked of this wizard of the nature theatre.

David Griffith laughed—not a laugh of offended vanity or condescending superiority, but the easy, natural mirth of a master who expects to encounter many skeptics and doubting Thomases in the day's work.

"Why," he said, "the makers of pictures have already surpassed in many ways the art of the speaking stage. The old school are coming to us, are they not? And appropriating such of our devices as the 'cut-back' and the parallel action. And I could name one actress with a tremendous New York hit of two years to her credit who built up her justly famous part from close study of the methods of our Los Angeles picture actresses!

"Already it is admitted that as to scenic beauty the motion picture entertainment is far ahead of the stage play. Poetry is an only beauty but thought is our goal, for the silent drama is peculiarly the birthplace of picture play was laid out in facto[illegible] unity of time and place being always observed, the



"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg.

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards, and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER the Most Stupendous, Dramatic and Spectacular Enterprise that the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Realized!

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A [illegible]

Richmond Times Dispatch

BIRTH OF NATION IS THE ACME OF PICTURE ART

Combining history, drama and spectacle, the "Birth of a Nation" held spellbound for three hours an immense audience at the Academy of Music last night.

Time and again tears were wrung from the eyes and cheers from the throats of those present, and who can tell what emotions swelled in the breasts of those who passed through the dark days of civil strife and the reconstruction period which followed it. Words can hardly express the wonders of this picture. There is no picture by which comparisons may be made, and the pen falters when attempting to do justice to the mighty mind of D. W. Griffith, whose master mind conceived and produced the picture. Opinions may differ as to the propriety of reopening old sores and starting a discussion of scenes and deeds best forgotten, yet all must agree the subject has been handled and produced on the screen in a manner calling only for the highest admiration.

Griffith offers as his justification for the picture that he is giving "the viewpoint of the South on the stirring events of the late unpleasantness, and the horrible reconstruction period which followed, and which has never been impartially given in history." Nothing more stirring has ever been shown than the realistic battle field scene before Petersburg, the burning of Atlanta, or the ride of the Ku Klux Clan. So much has already been written of the picture that every one who reads the newspapers is familiar with the fact that the dramatic story is taken from Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The picture first introduces the strong friendship existing between the children of two families, North and South, and the easy, free-going life in the South before the war; then rapidly goes into the whirl of the Civil War, and from there on mingles the spectacle of war with the story of love and hatred engendered by it; shows the desolation it laid with a heavy hand on the South and brings out boldly the attempted foisting by the radicals and carpet baggers of the North of negro equality on the people of the South.

Nothing can surpass the scenes showing the miles of opposing trenches, the belching cannon and the bodies of blue and gray soldiers, surging back and forth in hand-to-hand conflict in the battle of Petersburg, and the march of Sherman to the sea is a masterpiece of moving picture art.

The Ford Theater scene, depicting the assassination of Lincoln; the surrender at Appomattox; and the gathering of the Ku Klux Clans are all historically accurate, and acted out with perfect technique. Various scenes take in the troubles with the ignorant negroes, spurred on by scalawags and political influences in Washington; the dangers besetting the whites in endeavoring to successfully combat them; and the final triumph of the Ku Klux Clans in restoring law and order, and the white man to his place and land.

The acting is superb. Henry Walthall, who enacts the role of Colonel Ben Cameron, is at all times thoroughly in the spirit of the part. Ralph Lewis, as the hated Stoneman, is entirely natural as the radical who wishes to place the blacks in power, and George Seigman is repulsively realistic as Silas Lynch, the mulatto Lieutenant Governor of South Carolina; in fact, every actor in the cast, including the army horses used in the great battle scenes, seems to be thoroughly in the spirit of the picture.

Richmond Evening Journal

WONDERFUL PHOTODRAMA IS HISTORY OF A PERIOD

Looking at it merely as a spectacular motion picture, no man can view "The Birth of a Nation" without being stirred and thrilled to the marrow of his bones; looking at it as a retelling, in living scenes and figures, of a chapter of American history, no Southern man can see it without a lump in his throat one moment, a blaze of vicarious resentment in his heart the next, and a glow of undying pride racing through his veins always.

It is a motion picture, a great motion picture, so great that all others shrink and pale before it. For acting, action, spectacle, scenery, lighting and photography, it is the last word in the art of producing silent drama, and doubtless will remain the last word for many a year. But it is a vast deal more than that: it is a vivid and enthralling presentment of a period. And this presentment is so fashioned that it impresses itself upon the spectator as all the reading in all the years could not impress him. Not even the first-hand information that this generation is old enough to have gathered from its fathers and mothers has seemed half so real, so alive, as the splendid and hideous incidents thrown upon the screen during the progress of this wonderful narrative.

As to the wisdom, the advisability, the desirability, of making the blacker pages of this chapter tell themselves again, the same question arises as was presented by the production and revival of Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and that is for others to determine, not a play reviewer. Certainly, there can be no reason for police interference. There is not an immoral scene in the whole twelve reels, and, though the picture tells a fearful tale of things as they were in the dark days of reconstruction in the farther South, it exaggerates them very little, if at all. For witness to this, one need not confine himself to the sensational Mr. Dixon and his "The Clansman," but need turn only to Thomas Nelson Page's "Red Rock," for instance.

The first part of the photodrama is not much out of the ordinary; it shows a pretty little story of friendship between two families, one of the North and the other of the South. Love springs into being, ripens and blooms. And then comes the War, and, with it, the picture becomes tremendous, overwhelming. The earlier scenes have laid the foundation on which is based the horror of friend killing friend, and this is sustained in order to form a continuous narrative. But the incidents, the glimpses of individuals, are almost lost sight of in the clashing, thundering immensity of the battle scenes, which far surpass, in size, realism and actual danger, anything of the character ever shown on a film.

Yet, even in the midst of these huge canveses, a man, a deed, a moment, stands out here and there. When the audience that filled the Academy of Music last night saw the Little Colonel—as Ben Cameron of "The Clansman" is known—lead his charge, stumble and fall, pick up the battle flag, rush up to the mouth of the enemy's cannon and literally ram its staff down the cannon's throat before he fell, it yelled in a manner that would have thrilled such a little co'onel fifty years ago.

There is not space—in one review—to dwell on the appearance of Mr. Lincoln, which, by the way, was greeted here in Richmond with salvos of applause, learned long ago by people of the South; there is room only to mention the breathless realism of the scene in Ford's Theater, when he was murdered by a madman; there is time only to refer to the Stoneman of the play, the execrated Stevens of the day. For the play rushes into the heart of the South, infested by carpetbaggers, torn by misrule and trod beneath the feet of the vengeful and villainous.

And from that point up to the end, except for some closing allegorical scenes and a bit of anticlimactic educational film, the story is "The Clansman," amplified, elaborated and intensified, almost beyond the point of endurance. The rule of the carpetbagger and the renegade and their ignorant following is set out in all its fearfulness, and the results—particularly the death of the little girl—are portrayed with the utmost dramatic effectiveness.

But, in accordance with the truth, as well as in mercy to the spectators, the lawless lawfulness of the Ku Klux Klan is displayed with a prodigality and artistry that grip the spectator by the throat, so that he can hardly cheer. Though, if a man can only half cheer and the man next to him can only half cheer and so on down row after row, when they all try together they can still sound a shout. And that is what they did last night. As the hundreds of men of the Klan raced into sight again and again, bound on some errand of primitive and necessary justice and retribution, with the cross of Scott and blazing on their breasts, the house raced with them; and while they rode in silence, the audience shouted in excitement.

Much of this excitement was enhanced, if not created, by the music of Joseph Carl Breil's arrangement, which an orchestra of some thirty played throughout the performance. How much, it is difficult to say; certainly a great deal. And the music itself is so good and so well played that another story will have to cover that.

Meanwhile, it must be said that "The Birth of a Nation," picture and production, deserves the crowded houses that it undoubtedly will draw throughout the week. There will be performances every afternoon and night.

Douglas Gordon.

Pittsburgh Post Oct 6

MILES—"Birth of a Nation," Photo Spectacle.

The ninth week in Pittsburgh of D. W. Griffith's masterful motion picture history of Civil war days found many viewing this photo spectacle in the Miles Theater yesterday. The stirring musical accompaniment by the orchestra, augmented by the big pipe organ, contributed to the interest as much as when this production was shown in the Nixon.

Ev. Telegram Oct 6

At the Liberty Theatre "The Birth of a Nation" eclipses in the length of its run all other dramatic productions in this city.

Ev. Telegraph Phila Oct 6

"Birth of a Nation" Remains.

D. W. Griffith's photospectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which is on view at the Forrest, shows no sign of terminating its already long engagement. The picture marks an epoch in photoplays and is the most elaborate ever attempted by an American producer. It tells a story of the Civil War and reconstruction period, with scenes in North and South and in its course most of the prominent persons of the most strenuous period of the nation's history are thrown on the screen.

N. Y. Press Oct 6

Thirty-six weeks of crowded houses is the record of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 6

MILES.

David Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" yesterday entered upon its ninth consecutive week in Pittsburg, and in its present appearance at the Miles all the wonderful musical and incidental effects are as elaborate as when it was shown at the Nixon. Patrons of the Miles are being attracted from many distant points in nearby counties, as well as from the Pittsburg district, as everyone seems desirous of seeing this Civil War picture. The film really is in four parts: The prosperous days of the south before the war; the four years' struggle, bringing untold sacrifices by north and south; the period of reconstruction when the Ku Klux Klan overthrew the "Carpetbaggers" and the negroes, and finally, as a port of postscript, present day scenes, showing how the negroes are progressing at Hampton and Tuskegee institutes. Civil war battle scenes, a raid by the Clansmen, and the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's theater, are splendidly portrayed on the screen.

329

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 6

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

This Griffith spectacle and semi-historical photoplay, after eight weeks in Pittsburgh, continues to draw large audiences. While the business has declined to some extent, it is still large enough to constitute a source of surprise to theatrical people and the public. No theatrical entertainment can be recalled in the history of the city that has played so long an engagement at such enormous receipts. The thrill of the story and the scope and excellence of the photography, along with the graphic nature of the acting and the appropriateness of the musical setting, account for this unusual engagement.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Oct 6

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

In spite of an eight weks' run in this city, "The Birth of a Nation," that great semi-historical photoplay, continues to attract large audiences at the Miles theater. The thrill of the entire performance and the broad scope which it includes together with the graphic nature of the acting and appropriateness of the acompanying music make the pictures so impressive that they create an everlasting effect on the mind.

Sun Antonio Light Oct 6

Griffith Overcomes Difficulty.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the civil war and reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Grand Opera House all next week, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area was required about as large as the corner of Belgium, occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. In this emergency the county authorities were appealed to and consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen and to forbid traffic along all the roads within this area, while the film people worked. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye, and the race of the northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. It cost about $25,000.

Beaumont D. Journal Oct 6

"The Birth of a Nation" History by Lightning

David J. Griffith's most extraordinary achievement with his great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Kyle theatre next Wednesday night, is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—slavery, the war of secession, the surrender at Appomatox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of recontsruction, and the reconciliation of the North and the South.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the scope of the motion picture camera. But the master producer has successfully combined, in 12,000 feet of celluloid, a thrilling, consecutive presentation of national greatness with a vital and human love story. According to experts who have viewed the work, Griffith has not only surpassed in many ways the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-fashioned history or historical novel. A very eminent public man has nicknamed it "history by lightning."

Danville Bee Oct 26

GREAT PICTURE COMING!

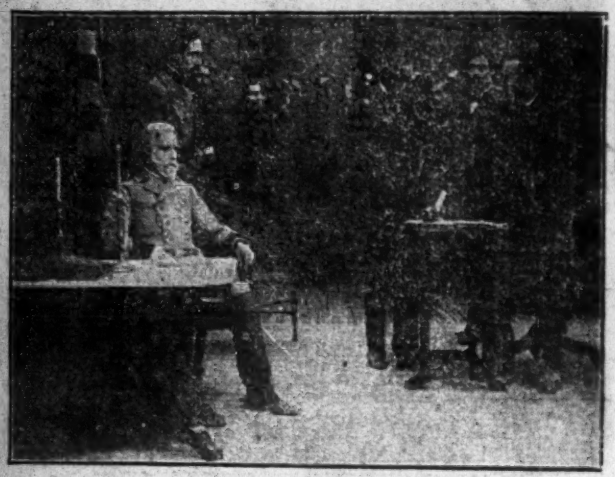
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL BE SEEN AT THE MAJESTIC THREE DAYS, BEGINNING NOVEMBER 1.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature, rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of statute and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in grey who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Courthouse is closed.

Seats for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" will go on sale at Booth's drug store tomorrow morning. Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday.



WHEN LEE AND GRANT MET.
One of the interesting historical scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Majestic next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Peace Group Scene from the "Birth of a Nation" which begins a week's engagement at the [illegible] Theatre next Monday night.

THE WHEELING INTELLIGENCER

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 26.

San Antonio Express Oct 26

Great Spectacle Coming to Grand.

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Grand Opera House next week, was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington —April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him. The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the War President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his Cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands, as if in prayer. Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain, middle-aged woman dressed in somber black, who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her. Reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son. After the Appomattox surrender the leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away!" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theater, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's mad act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity, and pathos of his characterization.

Beaumont Enterprise Oct 27

"Birth of a Nation" Tonight.

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Kyle theatre tonight, is of necessity sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the states. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls," and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not a comedy; it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle—comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

There is the typical southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each others arms.

Then there is the young daughter of a southern home, almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when, to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again there is the scene in "the quarters," where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing, "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw" and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the somber shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life.

Buffalo Express Oct 27

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles Theater continues to demonstrate its appeal to all of the people by attracting twice daily the large audiences that have so noticeably featured its nine-weeks' record-breaking engagement in this city. The Miles policy of accepting orders for seats by telephone and holding seats so ordered until patrons can conveniently call for them is meeting with the same interest and favor as is the ticket mail order service of this theater.

N. Y. Tribune Oct 27

"The Birth of a Nation" will end its long run at the Liberty on November 27.

Richmond Times-Dispatch Oct 27

Growing Crowds See Great Picture.

As has been the case wherever "The Birth of a Nation" has been shown, attendance at the Academy of Music yesterday increased by the hundreds. The house was filled on Monday night, but by last night there were few vacant seats in the theater. By to-day or to-morrow, it is safe to say, those who have not already booked seats will have more than a little difficulty in securing the number they may require. The end of the week hundreds will be turned away.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 27

Appeal of Play Is Wonderful.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles theater continues to demonstrate its wonderful appeal to all of the people by attracting twice daily the large audiences that have so noticeably featured its nine-week record-breaking engagement in this city. The Miles policy of accepting orders for seats by telephone and holding seats so ordered until patrons can conveniently call for them is meeting with the same interest and favor as is the ticket mail order service of this theater. Out of town patrons—and they constitute a large proportion of the attendance of the notable spectacle—are given quite as much attention by mail as if they came to the box office window.

Kansas City Journal Oct 27

The performances of D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle drama, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand opera house, commence promptly at 2:15 for the matinees and 8:15 for the evenings. There are two performances daily, including Sundays. Owing to the long line of ticket purchasers and the crowded condition of the lobby before each performance, it is advisable to purchase the seats in advance. The new theatric art invented by Mr. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation" has enabled him to surpass any previous stage spectacle. This epic of American history has 5,000 scenes, 18,000 people, 3,000 horses and 200,000 details, and represents the result of eight months of work and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

Richmond Ev. Journal Oct 28

"The Birth of a Nation" at Academy.

It is not surprising that this week's offering at the Academy of Music is attracting capacity audiences both afternoon and evening.

"The Birth of a Nation" is one of the most widely discussed topics in the country. It established an absolutely new art in the realm of the theater—the art of pantomimic screen spectacle with music. It also created a tremendous sensation because of its vaster and more forceful treatment of the same theme as Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The consequences of the Civil War in Southern Reconstruction are fully dealt with, and the nation reborn is apotheosized. Mr. Griffith, pioneer among directors, managed the stupendous achievement without the aid of dialogue or speech, for motion pictures, accompanying music and effects, tells the coherent, logical and moving story.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 28

MILES.

At the Miles theater "The Birth of a Nation" is observing the ninth week of its wonderful run here to a twice daily patronage that indicates that only a portion of the Pittsburg public have as yet seen this remarkable spectacle of our nation's birth and infanthood, and will open its tenth week on Monday. Lovers of the photo-drama, and their names are legion, are keen critics; what they do not endorse by their presence cannot be successful; that an army of them here over 100,000 strong have already expressed their admiration of this masterpiece is convincing proof that Mr. Griffith has produced something unusual, a distinct novelty in ideas, patriotic in [illegible] magnitude.

Norfolk Leader Richmond Oct 24

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," which is attracting capacity audiences to the Academy of Music this week, affords a new vision of the possibilities of teaching history in the public schools by means of motion pictures. In the 5,000 scenes of the spectacle there are 200,000 historical details. Besides the achievement of the picture itself, the exhibition of it employs fifty flesh and blood helpers at each performance.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution. Will the motion picture replace the text book in the public schools? Will the Walter Scott's and the W. M. Thackery's of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historian be replaced by the camera man, and the still-life painter by one who like Griffith can turn out hundreds of Rembrandt, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment?

Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque. Yet in view of what is happening around us, it is hard —nay, impossible—to set any limits to the future achievements of the motion

Danville Register Oct 28

ENDORSED BY U. D. C.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS COMMENDED BY NORFOLK AND LOS ANGELES CHAPTERS.

When the company which is to present "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday opened its tour of the South at the Colonial Theatre, Norfolk, three weeks ago, it was before one of the most brilliant audiences ever assembled in a theatre in that city. Mayor Mayo, with members of the Council and Board of Aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth navy-yard; Col. Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe, and officers of the Daughters of the Confederacy were conspicuous in the gathering.

While the audience was unanimous in its verdict that the spectacle was one of the most delightful theatrical offerings ever presented in Norfolk, clubwomen, and particularly prominent members of the Daughters of the Confederacy, were most enthusiastic in their praise. So strong was the feeling of Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of the Hope-Maury Chapter, U. D. C., that she wrote a letter to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch the next day commending the spectacle to all Southerners. Her letter, in part, was as follows:

"The Birth of a Nation" is wonderful! * * * Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a band of knights sent to make things work out as it was desired and none but these men could have accomplished it. * * * There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. "The Birth of a Nation" is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for its resolutions adopted a short time before, the members of the John H. Reagan Chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus: "In endorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation,' the John H. Reagan Chapter, U. D. C., feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to Northerners, and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union." The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1123 Logan street, Los Angeles, acting president of the John H. Reagan Chapter.

"Birth of a Nation" Appeals to Big Audience; Brings Powerful Message

Wonderful Motion Picture Drama of War Between North and South Stirs Crowd to Tremendous Ovation. Other Productions Pale Into Insignificance When Compared to It.

There were moments at the Academy of Music last night when it seemed certain that the roof was going to be blown off and sent sailing into the middle of the next block. It didn't seem possible that one roof could contain the tremendous volume of enthusiasm that was being stirred up by W. D. Griffith's motion picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation."

The magnificent production, which had been advertised like a circus and which derived considerable desirable free publicity because of objections to its presentation voiced by a delegation of negroes who called on Mayor Ainslie, was everything the audience expected it to be, judging from the noisy approbation throughout the performance.

The house was crowded to its capacity with an audience that included scores of persons of social prominence. Mayor Ainslie and party occupied one of the boxes and the orchestra seats were filled with many men identified with the city's professional and political life.

Thirty in Orchestra.

An orchestra of thirty musicians, twenty of whom are carried by the producing company, worked wonders with the musical score of Joseph Carl Briel. The musical accompaniment was the big outstanding feature of the performance. The filmed play ran last night from 8:30 until 11:30 and there was scarcely a moment during that entire time that the orchestra was idle. And it wasn't so long ago that a piano and a drum comprised the "orchestra" for a motion picture.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an historical drama in two acts, and while it has many admirable features considered as a motion picture spectacle alone, there is no doubt that its effectiveness is tremendously enhanced by the superb musical accompaniment and realistic mechanical effects produced by a corps of workmen hidden by the screen.

There is a class of theatre-goers of no mean dimensions in whose lives motion picture productions mean nothing at all. They have tried to like the cinema, but have always found themselves more than a little bored. To this class, especially, will Mr. Griffith's photoplay prove a revelation. It is so far ahead of anything heretofore attempted in motion pictures that comparisons are futile. "Cabiria," "Quo Vadis?" and other films which were shown at the high-class houses at increased prices pale into insignificance.

Has Powerful Appeal.

The Griffith drama is bound to exert a powerful appeal over Southern audiences. It is full of heroisms and sufferings growing out of the war between the North and the South. Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," was utilized by Mr. Griffith for the basic idea for his play, and as the Dixon story is a familiar one, many who witness "The Birth of a Nation" will know what to expect.

There is a pretty love story woven into the scenes and there are passages that depict the quiet and peace of old-fashioned Southern households before the war, but the real interest is developed by the wonderful representations of battle fields and the riding of the Klux clans.

The battle scenes, including the last stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, are marvelous from every standpoint. The meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford's theatre and the forceful pictures of the carpet-bag days are extraordinarily impressive.

The riding of the clans is like nothing that ever before was shown on the screen. The horsemanship, reckless and daring in the extreme, is splendid and may be depended on to arouse any audience to a high pitch of excitement.

There is no disputing that the drama conveys a powerful message for universal peace.

There will be performances every afternoon and every night this week. No one can afford to miss "The Birth of a Nation."

Danville Register Feb. 28

TO SHOW FAMOUS FILM.

Negro Delegation Protest to Mayor Against Showing "Birth of a Nation."

A delegation of fifty negroes comprising ministers and the best class of colored citizenry appeared before Mayor Wooding yesterday afternoon bearing a petition that he should prevent the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," a film production, at a local theatre during the first three days of the coming week. The mayor granted the audience in the courtroom at four o'clock and for half an hour W. P. Allen and John Carter, two negro attorneys presented their cause deferentially, but nevertheless ably, asking first of all that the picture be shown before a board of censors before it is allowed to be given publicly and that what they termed the most objectionable features of the film eliminated.

Mayor Wooding in answering the deputation stated that he had followed the course of the film since it started its tour and taking the action of the mayors of Richmond and Norfolk as a precedent, he stated that he knew no law whereby he might prevent the film from being shown, and that he felt the scenes of the play were too farremoved to create an racial feelings, but promised that should any actual obscenity mark the run of the production, he would have the curtain lowered.

Besides nearly all of the colored ministers present at the presenting of the petition were Revs. C. J. D. Parker, E. Y. Poole and J. G. Unruh, who listened with interest to the speeches made by Carter and Allen, who claimed that The Birth of a Nation, which is founded on Thomas Dixon's book, "The Clansman," represents the negro race in a light which is humiliating to the present generation and in a way calculated to cause a breach of the peace. They also spoke of the demoralizing effect it would have on the younger people of the city. Carter, in his talk, scored the producer of the film as being a friend of "neither the white nor the colored race."

Below will be found a clipping from the Times-Dispatch of a recent issue, giving the position of Mayor George Ainslie, of Richmond, on the same kind of protest against the play from prominent colored people of that city:

"Protest against the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," a photoplay booked at the Academy of Music this week, was filed yesterday by a delegation of prominent colored citizens and a body of students from the Union University, a colored institution. The mayor stated to the delegation that he had statements from a number of Southern cities where the picture has been shown and that no trouble resulted. He said that he had been advised by several local citizens, who have seen the play, that there is nothing objectionable, and no steps will be taken to prevent its appearance here."

Times-Leader Richmond Feb

GIVE SPECIAL PERFORMANCE OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Though eleven performances are included in the week's engagement of the "Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music this week, all the people who want to see the great spectacle could not be accommodated. Therefore, it was decided this morning to give an extraordinary performance at 10 o'clock Saturday morning.

The Saturday morning prices will be the same charged for the regularly scheduled performances. Tickets will probably go quickly.

San Antonio Feb. Dist 28

Mae Marsh in Griffith Spectacle.

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Opera House beginning Monday night, is a prodigy of filmdom. The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear-holding with the "merry, merry," was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed, for wasn't Mae Marsh awkward and freckle-faced and unprepossessing, the very antithesis of motion picture charm?

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkwardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a "biddy" in a kitchen. This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh.

San Antonio Light Dec 27 '14

Griffith's Greatest Film Coming.

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film, but impossible for the "indoor drama" is illustrated by the Ford's Theater scene in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand next week. The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's Theater in April, 1865, but also the auditorium of the theater, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes. Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman, whose head has fallen back in the stage box and at the assassin, Booth, who is leaping from the box to the

Danville Bee Oct 28

ENDORSED BY U. D. C.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS COMMENDED BY NORFOLK AND LOS ANGELES CHAPTERS.

When the company which is to present "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday opened its tour of the South at the Colonial Theatre, Norfolk, three weeks ago, it was before one of the most brilliant audiences ever assembled in a theatre in that city. Mayor Mayo, with members of the Council and Board of Aldermen; Admiral Beattie, commandant of the Portsmouth navy-yard; Col. Haynes, in command at Fortress Monroe, and officers of the Daughters of the Confederacy were conspicuous in the gathering.

While the audience was unanimous in its verdict that the spectacle was one of the most delightful theatrical offerings ever presented in Norfolk, clubwomen, and particularly prominent members of the Daughters of the Confederacy, were most enthusiastic in their praise. So strong was the feeling of Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke, president of the Hope-Maury Chapter, U. D. C., that she wrote a letter to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch the next day commending the spectacle to all Southerners. Her letter, in part, was as follows:

"'The Birth of a Nation' is wonderful! * * * Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a band of knights sent to make things work out as it wes desired and none but these men could have accomplished it. * * * There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for in resolutions adopted a short time before, the members of the John H. Reagan Chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus: "In endorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation,' the John H. Reagan Chapter, U. D. C., feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to Northerners, and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union." The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1128 Logan street, Los Angeles, acting president of the John H. Reagan Chapter.

HAPPY DAYS IN PIEDMONT BEFORE THE WAR.

One of the scenes which helps to relieve the intense moments in "The Birth of a Nation," the great historical spectacle which comes to the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

San Antonio Light Dec 27 '14

"Birth of a Nation."

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand Opera House next week, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner" who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded Confederate officer in the Patents' Office hospital. "I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displays a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands. Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second Southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of Northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous

It is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman. Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type, which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful. Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work.

History Lives In "The Birth of a Nation," Grand Spectacle, a Play Within a Play

Twelve Thousand Feet of Film Presents a Thrilling Presentment of National Upgrowth—Eighteen Thousand People Employed in Taking These Historical Pictures.

DAVID W. GRIFFITH'S most extraordinary achievement with his new photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand Opera House for a week, starting Monday night, November 1, is that of making history live. He has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of slavery, the War of Secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of Reconstruction and the restoration of the South to its own. These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion picture camera. The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast. Within 12,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and dignified presentment of National upgrowth with a real and human love story based on Thomas Dixon's book-romance, "The Clansman." As it appears to the newspaper and magazine critics, Mr. Griffith has not only surpassed the art of the "indoor" theater, but he has also developed a new art-form far superior to the old-style history or historical novel. The best characterization of it so far is that of a very eminent public man who has called it "History by lightning."

Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 people in taking these historical pictures. The battle scenes were actual duplicates of several of the Civil War conflict, and so were the fac-similes of important events. We see Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for volunteers, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the Freedmen's Bureau, the carpetbaggers' excesses and the famous rides of the Ku Klux. The realism is almost uncanny. Often the old war shouts are heard in the audiences from the lips of veterans who momentarily forget that it is only a picture. It is hard to keep one's feet from dancing to the well-beloved tunes of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the pictures are so skilfully managed that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

EPIC FORM SUBSTITUTED

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development, the old dramatic forming having been thrown away and the epic or historical form substituted. The old reproach against the "ten-cent movie" is forever removed. It is a curious sight now in New York to see dozens of speculators asking three and four dollars a seat for a moving picture, whilst inside at the box office the public gladly pays the regular scale of prices at a fashionable metropolitan theater.

The labor involved in this newest sort of picture making is enormous. There are 5,000 separate and individually posed scenes involving about 200,000 interesting details. The musical score is as complex and elaborate as that of any grand opera. Although not a word is spoken on the stage, the musical and mechanical effects employ a hundred flesh-and-blood helpers slightly. In brief, the magnitude of the stupendous film dwarfs the average stage play into significance.

Theatrical producers and observers are wondering what will be the next evolution of the art. Will the cinema replace the text book in the public schools? Will the Walter Scott and the W. M. Thackerays of the future do pictures instead of novels? Will the historian be replaced by the camera man, and the still life painter by one who, like Griffith, can turn out hundreds of Rembrandt, Corot and Turner-like scenes in an evening's entertainment?

Some of these queries seem daring now, even grotesque. Yet, in view of what is happening around us, it is hard—nay impossible—to set any limits to the future achievements of the motion picture.

The official biographer of Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," asked for some data and got the answer that "he was born in Kentucky, that he grew up in a home like most boys; started out after his school and college days to find his place in the world, and that since he went into the business of producing pictures he has lived most of the time under his hat."

Strangely reticent about his personal affairs, the creator of "The Birth of a Nation" (when you know him) has one of the most interesting personalities in the world. One day he appeared in the office of the Epoch Producing Corporation of New York and put in a requisition for $5,000 cash. It was a Saturday afternoon. All the funds at the Liberty Theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" was playing, had been banked and the cash on hand was required for salaries. But one of the managers made the round of several Broadway hotels and finally got the cash money in exchange for checks. It was all in $100 bills.

BUNDLED MONEY IN NEWSPAPER.

Mr. Griffith bundled the money into an old newspaper, which he tied with a piece of rough string. As he caught the Flyer for Louisville, Ky., that afternoon he was observed with a suitcase in one hand and the bundle of cash in the other, hurrying rapidly in the direction of a train which was starting just as he reached the station.

The next chapter of this little story opens in Louisville, Ky., a typically rough-looking man, with aforesaid "kale" bundle and suitcase, knocks at the door of a country-club cottage. The plain, stately, white-haired woman of the aristocratic and hospitable manner who answers the knock and comes out with a welcoming smile is Mrs. Rumsey. Despite his suitcase and shuffling gait, Griffith, with his good right arm, his left hand full of cash, a twinkle in a newspirations with the commonplace remarks of callers in the drawing-room. Louisville, from which post he drifted to New York and alternated between playing parts and writing plays. The row of a new playwright is hard to hoe, so after one of the early partly successful attempts young Griffith attached himself as utility actor at $5 a day to the Biograph Studio. Soon they were taking small scenarios from him, and when one of the directors got sick they allowed Griffith to make a one-reel picture. His new ideas of the "close-up," "fade-out," "switchback" and "parallel action" revolutionized the technical side of photographic acting. His choice of talent in this field was likewise almost uncanny, so that in five years time he developed a majority of the motion picture actors and actresses who are justly eminent today. Furthermore he had the literary sense, and beside using the stock dramatic material of the routine motion picture director, he invaded poetry, fiction and standard literature for his subjects. The union of these three diverse talents, together with marvelous executive ability, made him the greatest motion picture director in the world.

David W. Griffith is so busy a man that he has no time for the ordinary diversions and avocations of life. While at work in Los Angeles he is up at 6 o'clock every morning. His working day is from 8 or 9 o'clock until midnight. Immense as the plant is, he supervises every part of it, reviews all scenarios, inspects every player and every costume, approves all properties and structural effects, directs every foot of all films that bear his name, and looks over all the film work of the other directors.

"Lives under his hat" is a true expression. Griffith has a hat in every room of the many score rooms of the studio. He wears fifty hats a day, but his favorites are the enormous Panamas that guard against the excessive heat of the Los Angeles sun. He always keeps in working trim, is hard as nails physically, and while on the directing job wears his hair closely cropped. His favorite instrument is the megaphone. A born commander, he goes out for field work with this enormous speaking tube and directs an army of several hundred persons as easily as a farmer would boss a team of horses. But when he puts on the big battle pieces, like Sherman's march to the sea and the battle of Petersburg, he has to discard that big-voiced instrument for a modern switchboard and relays of telephone wires.

PERSONALLY FEARS NO DANGER.

While careful for the safety of his people, he personally fears no danger and often takes big chances in the outdoor directing work. One of his high-powered automobiles contains a speed of nearly a hundred miles an hour. With G. W. Bitzer, his photographer, he pushes the speed limit ahead of the wild rides of the Clansmen on their horses in the Ku Klux scenes.

D. W. GRIFFITH.

Best of all, "The Birth of a Nation" producer takes the hardest part of his work as good fun, as exhilirating sport, rather than as a task. His is one of the spirits that find life extremely fascinating, interesting and diverting. His alert intelligence grasps every new phase eagerly.

Back in New York off his studio labors Mr. Griffith would rather dance than do anything else. He believes in dancing as the most ancient and the most beneficial of all exercises. "Note the fighting people of the world," he said. "They are dancers, every one of them. All the conquests have been won by dancing people, and all the great achievements have been wrought by nations that dance."

Griffith gets 500 letters and fifty telegrams every day. It would save a lot of anxious folk some heartburnings to know that he never answers the letters. He opens them and tosses them in huge stacks on his general manager's table, where the faithful clerks sort out the minute grains of wheat from the chaff and attend to the really important things. He tosses the telegrams to his secretary, whose discretion as to answering is final. Griffith rarely carries money except when he is taking home the bundle of "kale" to the old folks. He is known everywhere and appropriates whatever he wants, letting the shopkeepers present their claims later to the keeper of his purse. He never fusses about trifles. He never does a particle of clerical work. He never stops at small or large financial obstacles, but goes right ahead regardless of financial problems. In brief, his one asperation is to make the big picture, the great art product, and in that supreme achievement he is Napoleonic in his methods and results.

Chaplin Feature of Queen Theater Bill

A great program has been arranged for the Queen Theater today. Charlie Chaplin will be seen in his very latest Essanay comedy "Shanghaied," which is by far the best of all his many comedies. The scenes of "Shanghaied" are a continuous riot of laughter, filled with unexpected splashes in the ocean, hard falls and knocks, but, more than anything else, running over with Mr. Chalin's personality. Edna Purviance, the comedian's leading woman, plays opposite him and adds a touch of romance. The big thrilling feature on the program is a beautiful Universal feature entitled "A Wonderful Fight to a Finish," with beautiful Marie Walcamp. The movie patrons always expect Marie Walcamp to do the unexpected, and they will not be disappointed in this thrilling drama in which Marie as a humble telegraph operator plays a heroic part. To prevent the holdup of a treasure train Marie chases it on a small gasoline track car, afterward making a daring rescue of her brother from the engine. Thrill follows thrill, and all to good purpose, for the climax comes in a manner to bring about a satisfactory ending, and that Marie Walcamp has again lived up to her daring reputation. Another three-reel feature which will be sure to please is a Broadway star feature entitled "The Reaping," featuring the great V. L. S. E. stars, Richard C. Travers, Lillian Drew, Francis Wood and several other favorites. This is a beautiful story of love and romance that is pleasing. The other feature to complete this program is a laughable one-reel comedy entitled "Pete's Awful Crime."

STARS AT QUEEN THEATER.

Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, Ruth Stonehouse, Warren Kerrigan and Henry B. Wathall stars at the Queen Theater this week.

The management of the Queen Theater announces that in the future all of the daily programs are going to be made up from ten to twelve new reels of pictures from the General and Universal services, and every picture shown in this popular little picture house is going to be brand new, as not a foot of film on these programs was ever shown in San Antonio before. This week's features are going to include some of the biggest and most popular stars appearing on the screen.

FRANCIS FORD AND GRACE CUNARD.

On Monday the big feature is going to include Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, the two stars who featured in "The Broken Coin." They will apear in the greatest feature of its kind ever made, "The Campbells are Coming." This thrilling photoplay has aptly been called "the military spectacle of the year. It is seldom one sees so much of the spectacular in a four-reel feature. Seldom that so much of the spectacular comes as a necessary part of the story of a play. The result is a picture that rings true; that has a punch such as a vigorous director like Francis Ford knows how to get into every act and every scene. Ford's experience in handling big serials has served him in good stead in this dramatic play by Grace Cunard. The story deals with the relief of Lucknow, in 1857, at the time of the Indian mutiny against English occupation. Francis Ford plays the part of an Indian prince who is responsible for the revolt of the native soldiers and the subsequent massacre of the English colony. How the famous Scotch regiment of the Clan Campbell carved their way through shot and shell and in hand-to-hand conflict to the rescue of the brave company of defenders, makes a story that keeps one absorbed every tense moment for four reels. Grace Cunard as the Scotch school teacher, captured and imprisoned by the prince himself, gives a wonderful portrayal of a difficult emotional role. Altogether "The Cambells are Coming" is a fine picture that will enchant any movie audience. Other good features on for Monday are "A Springtime Stirl," "A Test of Courage," which is one of those wonderful "Hazards of Helen" features, and "The Third Party."

JACK WARREN KERRIGAN.

On Wednesday Jack Warren Kerrigan the big Universal star, will be seen in one of his great thrilling dramas, "A Life at Stake." The heroic personality of the popular Universal star, J. Warren Kerrigan, appears to great advantage in this thrilling and absorbing story of a man's conflict with himself when torn between revenge and a duty of humanity. The story is by the crucial moment bigger, and the acting of Mr. Kerrigan dominant and powerful. Every lover of a fine human interest drama and of the splendid characterization of this much loved actor will welcome this splendid photoplay. Another two-reel feature on for Wednesday is "The Apaches of Paris." An extraordinary thrilling feature in which Joseph Smith and Laura Hamilton, the two famous Apache dancers, are featured.

RUTH STONEHOUSE.

"The Spider" is a great Essanay feature featuring Ruth Stonehouse, which will be one of the features on for Friday. The story of The Spider is very interesting. The phase of the eternal triangle, made up of the underpaid shop girl, her poor but honest lover, and the designing rogue, is so trite that any new presentation of it would seem de trop. But this senile theme is revivified into an absorbing story through the efforts of Ruth Stonehouse, John Lorimer. When they learn that the supposed gypsy is Lady Babbie they withdraw their suit, but the earl sends both him and Babbie away. But neither of them worries much about this. The principals have been selected remarkably well. Dorothy Bernard is more than charming in her gypsy costume, and her bright and airy personality whirls through the five reels in the most fascinating sort of way. Thurlow Bergen, as the minister, depicts accurately the character of the virile and human man of God.

Ethel Barrymore Booked by Royal.

Ethel Barrymore in "The Final Judgment," a five-part photodrama by George Scarborough, the talented playwright, will be seen at the Royal Theater on next Thursday and Friday. "The Final Judgment" affords Miss Barrymore unbounded opportunity for the display of her well-known dramatic gifts. The story of the photodrama is virile and gripping and is a masterpiece of screen productions. Miss Barrymore is supported by a superb cast of recognized stage and screen artists, including Perry G. Standing, H. Cooper Cliffe, Paul Lawrence, Mahlon Hamilton and Beatrice Maude.

The synopsis of the story follows: Jane Carlsson, an actress of note, is loved by Steven Moss, Mistress Campbell, an assistant district attorney; Hamilton Rose, a noted criminal, and Christopher Strong, a multi-millionaire. Campbell wins in the suit for her hand, whereupon Rose accepts an offer to assist in unraveling a mysterious murder in Moscow, Russia. There he discovers that the victim was killed with fumes from a vial—the poison of the East. He returns to the States, secures a vial of the poison and gives it to Mildred to drink and she the same evening is found dead in bed. Rose is accused of the murder by Campbell, but the latter's second term that Rose had substituted a bottle with the poison for the one containing the sleeping draught. Rose is arrested for the murder of Mildred, whereupon Rose makes a confession in a letter. Jane and

Jane Cowl Grand Opera House

Sherman's March to Sea in Birth of a Nation

This is one of the great scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Grand.

X23 /

The ball room scene in Piedmont, S. C., at the breaking out of the Cival War, as seen in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Court Theatre next week, the engagement beginning Monday evening

THE WHEELING TELEGRAPH.
WEDNESDAY, OCT. 27, 1915.

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Griffith Spectacle Favorably Received in Richmond.

No theatrical offering presented in Richmond in several years has created as strong a sensation as "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, which is playing to capacity audiences at the Academy of Music in that city this week and which comes to the Academy of Music, Lynchburg, the last three days of next week.

Douglas Gordon, the Richmond Times-Dispatch critic, who ranks as one of the South's most distinguished play reviewers, had this to say of the spectacle Tuesday morning:

"No man can view "The Birth of a Nation" without being stirred and thrilled to the marrow of his bones; looking at it as a retelling, in living scenes and figures, of a chapter of American history, no Southern man can see it without a lump in his throat one moment, a blaze of victorious resentment in his heart the next, and a glow of undying pride racing through his veins always.

"It is a motion picture, a great motion picture, so great that all others pale before it. For acting, action, spectacle, scenery, lighting and photography it is the last word in the art of producing silent drama, and doubtless will remain the last word for many a year. But it is a vast deal more than that; it is a vivid and enthralling presentment of a period. And this presentment is so fashioned that it impresses itself upon the spectator as all the reading in all the years could not impress him. Not even the first-hand information that this generation is old enough to have gathered from its fathers and mothers has seemed half so real, so alive, as the splendid and hideous incidents thrown upon the screen during the progress of this wonderful narrative.

"Much of the excitement was enhanced, if not created, by the music of Joseph Carl Breil's arrangement, which an orchestra of some thirty played throughout the preformance."

Daily Advance Lynchburg Va

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Symphony Orchestra of 30 Accompanies Griffith's Spectacle.

Music lovers will find in the score of "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy next week, more haunting melodies than have come to light in any musical comedy of the last ten years, excepting, perhaps, "The Merry Widow." The score is synchronized to the 5,000 scenes of the big Griffith spectacle, and it is played by an orchestra of thirty—the largest symphony organization being heard on tour with any attraction this year outside of the large theatrical centres. Twenty of the musicians are carried by the company, and the others are drafted from local talent.

The score runs the entire gamut of human emotion, and, in combination with the film, it portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the Old South, quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the War Between the States. Then the first intimation of a national storm that is brewing, followed closely by the grim realism of war itself. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation slips by in swift panorama and the gaunt specter shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. Then the work of rebuilding the South; the dark days of negro supremacy, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

Quaint melodies of the South, forgotten by except of the older generation; majestic strains from grand opera; light, rippling airs from the semi-classics—all are blended into a masterpiece of descriptive music running the two hours and forty minutes required for the presentation of this spectacle.

The engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy will begin next Thursday night and will continue the rest of the week, with a matinee Friday and Saturday. Seats for the entire engagement will go on sale at the box office Monday morning. •

Boys' clothes must be made right and must be all wool to stand the rough use a healthy boy gives them. We have the right kind. Moderately priced.

• HARRY S. HIRSH & BRO.

Richmond Times Dispatch

Saturday Morning at Ten o'Clock.

Nothing is needed now to attract people to "The Birth of a Nation"; the only difficulty is to keep them from "rushing" the theater. In order to prevent this—and, incidentally, to make a few more millions of dollars—the management has arranged to give a special performance on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, in addition to the regular matinee at 2:30.

To save, if possible, the manager and treasurer of the house from going screaming crazy, this column certifies that the house is literally sold out for to-day's matinee and the regular matinee to-morrow. The last time this column saw the ticket-rack, there appeared to be a few seats—but very few—left for to-night and to-morrow night, and a number for the 10 o'clock performance on Saturday morning. That, however, was before 9 o'clock last night; they may have sold seats on the chandelier by the time this is

Beaumont O. Journal Oct 28

Birth of a Nation' Stirs Great Audience

"The Birth of a Nation," the picture that has set a new mark in the film world, was presented at the Kyle theatre Wednesday night and witnessed by the largest audience that ever attended a moving picture exhibition in Beaumont.

The spectators sat enthralled for more than three hours while D. W. Griffith's stupendous spectacle of ante-bellum days, civil war and reconstruction revived historic scenes.

The musical score interprets and explains the picture just as the orchestra interprets and explains grand opera. Familiar airs are used for the most part with an original motif worked in when the action on the screen permits.

Founded upon Thomas Dixon's "Clansman," and employing throughout a love story—a human interest tale in the fortunes of the Stoneman and Cameron families—Griffith has used only this structure around which to summon up again the scenes and incidents of half a century ago.

The drama is set forth in two terrific acts, the first culminating in the battle of Petersburg and the second in the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans on their errands of vengeance and mercy.

Griffith's genius pictures with telling effect the mighty cataclysm that convulsed a nation. Southern chivalry and northern valor are portrayed in striking colors and the audience is brought into close touch with Lincoln as they see him relieve a mother's agony by pardoning her son, unjustly condemned. Then the conflict over, the assassination of the great war-time president is presented with faultless detail.

This mighty spectacle next takes up that black period in the nation's history when, deprived of Lincoln's restraining hand, the South groans under the heel of political oppression—the negro, the carpetbagger and the scalawag rule supreme.

Into this chaos springs the Clansman to right the South's wrongs. At last the Ku Klux works out the redemption of the South and side by side and heart by heart, old wrongs are righted, old grudges forgotten and the Mason and Dixon's line is wiped out forever.

Gazette Oct 30

LIBERTY—The final four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre was announced from D. W. Griffith's offices yesterday. This means that the wonderful run of the spectacle will close on Saturday night, Nov. 27. At the end of that engagement Griffith's masterpiece will have been seen for 725 consecutive performances in New York, making the greatest run in the history of the American stage for a continuous engagement.

Daily Advance Oct 28

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle at Academy Next Week.

While it is still being presented before capacity audiences in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and St. Louis, Lynchburg playgoers will enjoy the privilege of witnessing D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music the last half of next week. The engagement will begin Thursday night and matinees will be given Friday and Saturday. Seats for the five performances will go on sale at the box office Monday morning.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. The formation o fthe Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, battle at Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theatre April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith's drama. In the second hand the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpet-bagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel, Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, a South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of the immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

A symphony orchestra of thirty will accompany the spectacle. •

Journal of Com Oct 30

The last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre is announced, which means that the great photoplay will end its long run on November 27. At that time it will have had 725 consecutive performances in New York, the greatest number of any attraction.

Pitts Chronicle Tele Oct 30

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," now at the Miles Theater, announces that Monday will commence the last four weeks of the engagement in this city. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment.

News Oct 29

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Griffith Spectacle Is Most Valuable Theatrical Attraction in the World.

When D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Academy of Music next Thursday, Friday and Saturday Lynchburg playgoers will see the most widely discussed as well as the most valuable theatrical offering in the world. The spectacle has been witnessed by millions in the large cities of the East and West and his broken record for consecutive performances, total attendance and gross receipts wherever it has been shown.

While it has met with opposition at times—people seldom agree in their views on big subjects—it has been suppressed nowhere, and in the few instances where it has been necessary to appeal to the courts it has been sustained as a highly moral and artistic production. The National Board of Censorship, together with various State and municipal boards, have pronounced "The Birth of a Nation" the best offering of its kind ever played before the American public. Clergymen of all denominations, statesmen, teachers and clubwomen have recommended it as a wonderful lesson in history and musical critics have pronounced the score which accompanies the spectacle a genuine masterpiece. Seats for the engagement will be on sale at the box office Monday morning. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday. •

Womens wear Oct 30

Liberty.

The last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation," the most famous of motion pictures, is announced by the management. If you have not seen it do not miss these last chances.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 28

World's Greatest Spectacle, "The Death of a Nation---By Sherman.

Conductor of "Birth of a Nation" Orchestra

The score of "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Mllea, notwithstanding its many adaptations of well-known airs and its liberal draft on the works of the world's greatest composers, must be known as the first significant accompaniment written for a photodrama. To correctly interpret this score of skillfully blended, popular, classical and original compositions, a conductor is required who has achieved distinction in the world of music; a musician of unusual experience and exceptional ability in the leadership of large symphony orchestras. Such a conductor is Albert Pesce, master in charge of the Griffith spectacle's orchestra, here, whose work has been so favorably commented upon locally.

Mr. Pesce is a native of Naples, Italy. Before he was 21 he was conducting for grand opera at the Theater Fiorentini, Naples. In 1888, for the Italian exposition, Mr. Pesce went to London as conductor of the principal orchestra of Naples. In 1889, at Paris, he conducted this same orchestra during the International exposition. His first American engagement was with Emma Trentini for her New York appearance in "The Firefly." Last season Mr. Pesce was with Mizzi Hajos in "Sari." His compositions, both vocal and instrumental, are widely known.

Danville Register Oct 30

GREAT SHOW NEXT WEEK

"BIRTH OF A NATION" THREE DAYS AT THE MAJESTIC NEXT WEEK—FIFTY FLESH AND BLOOD PEOPLE IN HISTORICAL SPECTACLE.

Strong local interest is being shown in the engagement of D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Majestic theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and it is expected that the business of the attraction in Danville will compare favorably with that in Richmond this week, where the company has played to absolute capacity at the Academy of Music. Matinees are to be given Tuesday and Wednesday and seats for all performances are now selling at Booth's drug store.

The management urges that patrons obtain tickets for the Monday night and Tuesday performances because in other cities where the spectacle has been shown hundreds have been turned away at the final performances, unable to secure even standing room.

"Birth of a Nation" is not a mere "picture show," as it is sometimes characterized by persons who have not seen it. It is a gigantic combination of music, motion pictures and marvelous stage effects, presented by fifty flesh-and-blood people. The company which comes to the Majestic carries twenty musicians and ten of Danville's best artists will be added, giving a fine symphony orchestra of thirty for the local engagement. The company also carries a carload of stage settings and electrical equipment.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Newspaper Tender

735—

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" ATTRACTS NEW CROWDS

Wonderful Spectacle Continues to be Reigning Theatrical Sensation in Film Presentation

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" to take note of the fact that this tremendously successful spectacle will never be shown in any but the finest theatres and at prices customarily charged for the best theatrical attractions.

D. W. Griffith, creator of this epoch-making film, has made this fact clear in definite statements over his signature.

Continuance of the popularity of this entertainment in Philadelphia is paralleled in other important communities and there is no abatement in interest here or elsewhere, as is manifested by the crowded house at afternoon and evening performances alike.

Although daily matinees are given, there seems at times hardly enough opportunity for the public to be given proper accommodation.

However, the arrangement, still in operation, permitting the buying of seats two weeks in advance, has been a means of satisfying many people who otherwise might have been disappointed at the box office.

So many elements enter into the success of "The Birth of a Nation" that an enumeration of the merits of the production might prove tedious.

But it should be said that the musical accompaniment to the picture, embracing folk songs, national anthems, engaging dance melodies and some of the finest compositions of the world's best composers, has no small part in contributing to entertainment.

This music is played by a symphonic orchestra and each selection is fitted so closely to the shifting scene as to be an integral part of the exhibition.

A finely selected company of actors is seen in historic and romantic roles and there are tremendous battle scenes, wonderful night rides by the famous Ku-Klux Klan, delightful bits of comedy and of romance, and in a visualization of historic events.

Oct 29
Richmond Times Dis

The Veterans Will See It.

At a late hour last night, there were still seats to be had for to-night's performance of "The Birth of a Nation," but both matinees were sold out completely. And here comes the prettiest thing in connection with the whole record-breaking engagement of this great spectacle-concert. Yesterday, while the seat sale was at its height, a gentlewoman who keeps the flame of the Confederacy ever burning in her heart and who heads many movements that look to the care of the aged men and women whom its cause left destitute came to the box office.

She had spent the morning collecting cheerfully-given money with which to buy seats for the veterans at the Soldiers' Home and the old ladies at the Confederate Home for Aged Women. She had got enough to buy some sixty seats, which would accommodate all who were strong enough to come, and had waited patiently in line. There were, at that time, only about 156 seats left for the 10 o'clock performance this morning, and the management knew that hundreds would be turned away. But as soon as the management of the picture and the management of the house learned her purpose, they put their heads together and refused to take a penny. Therefore, a brave, if worn, company of survivors of those days pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" will see and hear its splendors to-day as honored guests.

Further, there will be something worth hearing from those old men this morning when they see the charges in battle and the riding of the Klan. It is likely that even that amazing trumpet will be overwhelmed.

And this leads to a good-by notice, without which mention of this production would be incomplete. After all is said of the picture, the author and the composer, another man still deserves warm praise—the musical director of the company, Arthur Moulton. Aside from the fact that he is an artist, who has trained his own and the auxiliary musicians to a high point of efficiency, so that the volume and tone, phrasing and shading, are a sheer delight to the ear, he is also a "show musician" extraordinary. He plays that tremendous show without the score, timing it and "cueing" it with such unerring accuracy that the quickly lifted foot of a girl comes on the accented beat of a measure. In comparison with this, his work with "The Merry Widow," with which he last appeared here, is like playing chop-sticks.

Once more—such a trumpet player as that wonderfully "lipped" Russian who sounds the Klan call and reaches notes that few sopranos dare attempt has never been heard in this town before.

—Douglas Gordon.

Danville Register Oct 29

GREAT PLAY HERE SOON!

ACTOR THAT PORTRAYS LINCOLN IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" SELECTED FROM TWENTY OTHERS.

Jose Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and manenernisms were carefuly counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth atacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the war President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

Matinees are to be given Tuesday and Wednesday by "The Birth of a Nation" company and seats for all performances are on sale at Booth's drug store.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND HIS COUNSELLORS.

One of the impressive historical scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

BIRTH OF A NATION PRODUCED IN SOUTH.

(Special to The Dramatic News.)

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Birth of a Nation has invaded the South, and, contrary to general predictions, there has not been a flurry, except at the box offices of the theatres where the pictures are being shown. While it had not been anticipated that the showing of the piece in Southern cities would lead to any conflict between the races, it had been suggested that some action be taken to prohibit the performances. The pictures so far have been shown in several large cities, including Richmond, Birmingham and Chattanooga, and have completed their run without the slightest friction, the censors allowing them to be produced without any changes.

The pictures, it is argued, have a distinct advantage over The Clansman in that the latter is purely propaganda, while the former bases its right to exist on the argument that it is history. The South quite naturally wants the country to know what she had to undergo in the days of the Reconstruction. It is not likely, however, that the pictures will pass all the boards of censorship without revision.

The Birth of a Nation goes into its twenty-first Chicago week at the Colonial. It is still a sensation.

N. Y. Dramatic News Oct

Oct 31

The sensational success of "The Birth of a Nation" will always be remembered as the most notable ever achieved by any moving picture. Now the last month of its engagement at the Liberty Theatre has been announced. It has been acted longer than any spoken play ever acted here.

N. Y. Telegraph Oct 31

The final four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre was announced from D. W. Griffith's offices yesterday. This means that the wonderful run of the spectacle will close on Saturday night, November 27. At the end of that engagement Griffith's masterpiece will have been seen for 725 consecutive performances in New York, making the greatest run in the history of the American stage for a continuous engagement. The nearest approach to this was "A Trip to Chinatown," which ran for 670 nights, from November 1, 1891, to August 13, 1893. A few years before Henry E. Dixey, in "Adonis," ran for 650 performances. The longest run of recent record was that of "Peg o' My Heart," in which Laurette Taylor was seen for 604 consecutive performances at the Cort Theatre. At the termination of its present engagement in the Liberty, "The Birth of a Nation" will have exceeded by 55 performances any other consecutive run in the history of the New York stage.

N. Y. Press Oct 31

Liberty.

The final four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre will begin with to-day's presentations, and when the spectacle closes on Saturday, November 27, it will have been seen for 725 consecutive showings in New York, making the greatest run in the history of the American stage for a continuous engagement. The nearest approach to this was "A Trip to Chinatown," which ran for 670 nights, and Henry E. Dixey, who played "Adonis," ran for 650 performances. The longest run of recent record was that of "Peg o' My Heart," in which Laurette Taylor was seen for 604 consecutive performances.

Phila. Public Ledger Oct 31

"The Birth of a Nation" lingers at the Miles, where daily large audiences continue to witness the Griffith story of Reconstruction. Announcement is made of the possible termination of the engagement in four weeks and it looks as though this prediction will run the full time. Entertainments in the other theaters last week were of the usual type so far as burlesque, vaudeville and moving pictures were concerned and will remain so during the present week

Pall Mall Phila Press Oct 31

MAE MARSH.

N. Y. Sunday Oct 31

"The Birth of a Nation," which tells a thrilling tale of the reconstruction period in characteristic Griffith fashion, begins its final four weeks. It will have been seen in New York for 725 consecutive performances, which is a record.

N. Y. Herald Oct 31

Theodore Mitchell, representing D. W. Griffith, yesterday announced the last four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre. The spectacle will close its long engagement on Saturday night, November 27.

News Leader Oct 30

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" CLOSES ENGAGEMENT HERE TONIGHT; BREAKS RECORDS.

Tonight's performance at the Academy of Music will witness the passing from the local theatrical map of "The Birth of a Nation" after a week of unprecedented business. The receipts and attendance figures have surprised even the theatre management, and they are making strenuous efforts to secure a return engagement. Thus far they have not succeeded, and it is doubtful that they will, considering that cities throughout the South are clamoring for the spectacle, and that the company now at the Academy is the only one on tour below the Mason and Dixon line.

In connection with the local engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" it is of interest that at the termination Nov. 27 of this photoplay's run at the Liberty theatre, New York, it will have exceeded by fifty-five performances any other consecutive run in the history of the New York stage. The Griffith masterpiece will then have been seen for 725 performances in New York.

The nearest approach to this record was "A Trip to Chinatown," which ran for 670 nights. A few years previously Henry E. Dixey in "Adonis" ran for 650 performances, and "Peg o' My Heart," with Laurette Taylor, established a record of 604 consecutive performances.

News Oct 30

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Griffith Spectacle Playing to Capacity In Richmond.

"The Birth of a Nation," the massive spectacle of the South's reconstruction, concerning which so much has been said and written during the past months, will be seen next Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Academy of Music, exactly as it is being presented in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities, with a symphony orchestra of thirty, and elaborate stage effects. The services of fifty people are employed in each presentation.

Altogether, five performances will be given during the local engagement of the spectacle. Except on Thursday when the whole day will be spent in installing the production and rehearsing local musicians with the company's orchestra, a matinee will be given every day at 2:45. The evening performance will begin at 8:15, and owing to the length of the spectacle—nearly three hours—all the performances will be started promptly on time.

The company coming to the Academy is the one which is playing to capacity in Richmond this week, to a week of capacity business at the Colonial Theatre, Norfolk, three weeks ago. It is the only one on tour, the seven others presenting the spectacle being installed for indefinite runs in as many large cities in different sections of the country. Seats for the engagement will go on sale at the Academy box office Monday morning.

Globe & Com. Oct 30

LIBERTY.—The final four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, was announced from D. W. Griffith's offices yesterday. This means that the wonderful run of the spectacle will close on Saturday night, Nov. 27. At the end of that engagement Griffith's masterpiece will have been seen for 725 consecutive performances in New York.

Evening Oct 30

"Birth of a Nation" Record.

The final four weeks of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre, was announced from D. W. Griffith's offices yesterday. This means that the remarkable run of the spectacle will close on Saturday night, November 27. At the end of that engagement Griffith's masterpiece will have been seen for 725 consecutive performances in New York, making the greatest run in the history of the American stage for a continuous engagement. The nearest approach to this was "A Trip to Chinatown," which ran for 670 nights, from November 1, 1891, to August 13, 1893.

St. Louis Times Oct 30

Four More Weeks of "The Birth of a Nation."

It is announced that an end has been set for the phenomenal run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Garrick Theater. The Griffith spectacle will enter upon the first of the last four weeks of its engagement Sunday, the final performance being given on November 27, after a stay in St. Louis of thirteen weeks.

N. Y. Telegraph

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 31, 1915.

MAE MARSH

Sunday Amusements

Sunday Amusements

LAST FOUR WEEKS

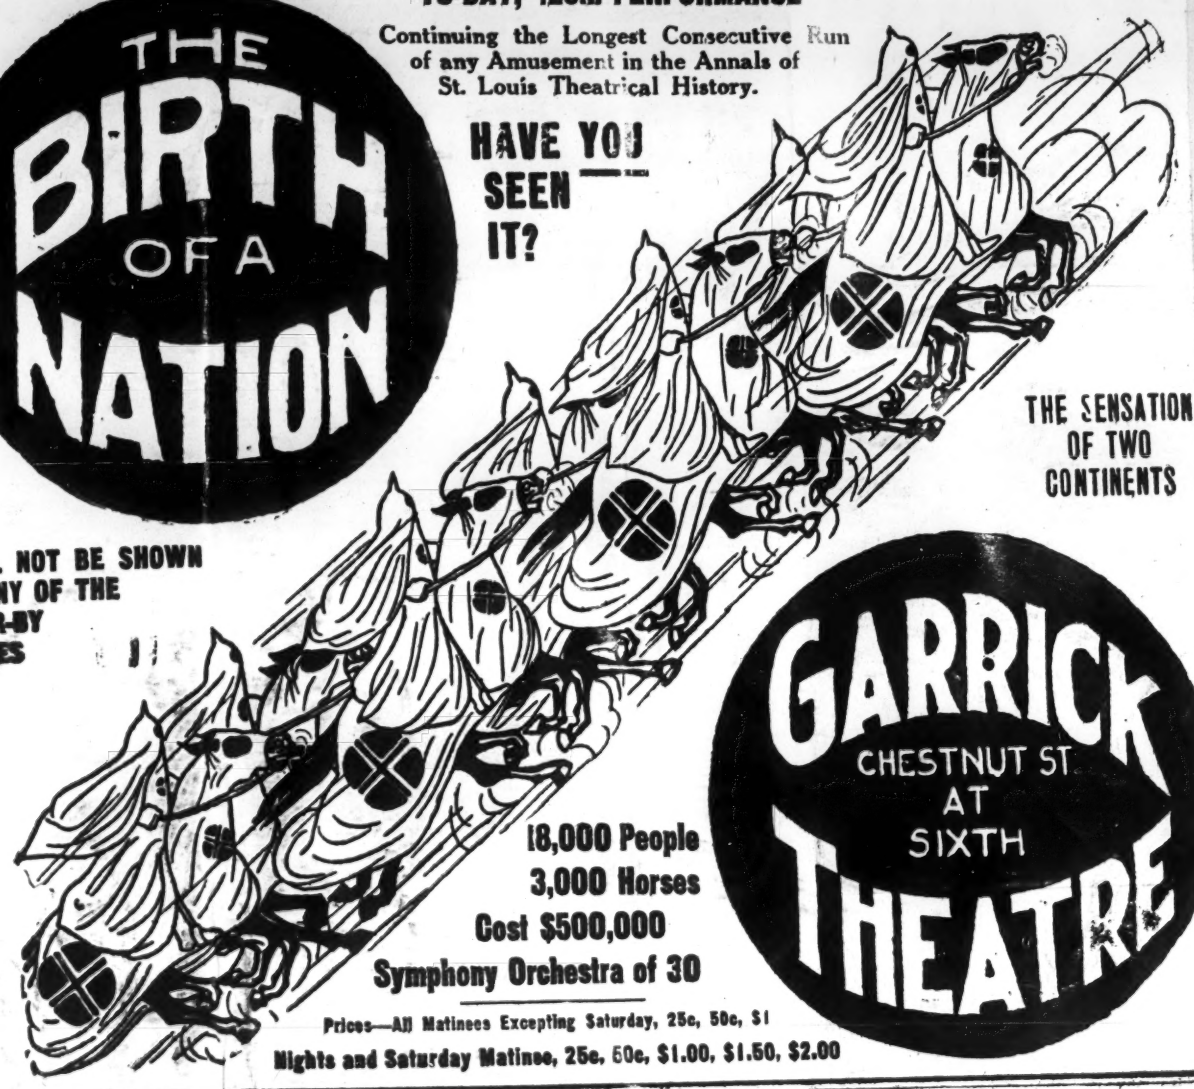
ENGAGEMENT POSITIVELY TERMINATES NOV. 27

TO-DAY, 126th PERFORMANCE

Continuing the Longest Consecutive Run of any Amusement in the Annals of St. Louis Theatrical History.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

HAVE YOU SEEN IT?



THE SENSATION OF TWO CONTINENTS

WILL NOT BE SHOWN IN ANY OF THE NEAR-BY CITIES

GARRICK CHESTNUT ST AT SIXTH THEATRE

18,000 People
3,000 Horses
Cost $500,000
Symphony Orchestra of 30

Prices—All Matinees Excepting Saturday, 25c, 50c, $1
Nights and Saturday Matinee, 25c, 50c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00

PROOF FROM THE ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC

237

Pittsburgh Press Oct 31

"BIRTH OF A NATION," At the Miles.

San Antonio Light Oct 30

"The Birth of a Nation."

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago will be seen in next week's engagement of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three-quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo-entertainment combines a pictorial survey of civil war history and of Ku Klux days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences.

Pittsburgh Press Oct 31

MILES.

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Miles theater, to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate Saturday, Nov. 27. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow which inaugurate the tenth week of the record-breaking run here but four weeks remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle whose popularity here, as manifested by crowded houses twice daily, shows no abatement of interest. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one half hours of entertainment. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux-Klan.

Pitts. Gazette Times Oct 31

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

It is important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Miles Theater, to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate Saturday, November 27. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow, which inaugurate the tenth week of the run here, but four weeks remain in which to view this spectacle. So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed repetition of its many notable features would prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's interesting story, will be adequately interpreted by a symphony orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production. The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of Reconstruction days in the South.

Evening Mail Oct. 29

Personal Side of David W. Griffith as Human as His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Who Has Risen So High Above His Fellows, Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

There is a human interest story in Griffith; who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices, and has got the so-called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in Lagrange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

It's an old story now that Griffith was a failure as a road actor, a barnstormer even in tank towns. That doesn't matter so much. To-day he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life and blends the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage, even if the manager of the road company failed to agree with him. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself, but he is a bunch of nerves. His whole speed and power but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his studio one wonders if he is ever going to let up, but on observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain just as he does the crashes of his "Birth of a Nation" battle situations. He is followed by a flash of field flowers or golden grain, or pictures at play.

Griffith is a director up to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he is irresistible. If this director has a fad it is for relaxation. His conception is big, and he seeks relaxation in things that tell a story going along ager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trottery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen-hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

David W. Griffith.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh and he is clubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the silent drama. He looks upon it as the youngest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to every action, and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has syncronized so well to this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil, while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work, and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation, and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a bitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier, who came into view on the film, so tragic in all decked out in a epic and span uniform.

"Great heavens, what were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, you've been fighting through the fall of two forces for hours with a half-starved and half-clothed army. Go back and get a tattered old uniform and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising, in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas of the silent drama. It may be said that Darwin's theory of the law of that the man with fine imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. The moment that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in Finland and then pass out the magnificent others distinctive-ness was noticed. They surpassed minor features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

What was there to do to find an outlet? The time came when he had never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabelle Lee," and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as super fine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived."

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact—that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their opwer and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense East with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the East in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing for Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work, and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus of the men ahead of him was temporarily stilled, which is the true sound of Broadway and Second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle failed to be altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen was launched, and many changes through which it could pass and then it was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the picture men and he wanted to break from this gummy clutch and knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man ahead of his time. Many of his temporaries who had evolved the big spectacle upon which he had multiplied detail until it was staggering and with this behind him the forbearance was not surprising.

There were so many theatres and so many changes and many changes through which it could pass and then it was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations of the picture men and he wanted to break from this gummy clutch and

San Antonio Ex. Oct 29

Griffith Picturized Dixon's Book

Many critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to. This will be the unique offering at the Grand Opera House all of next week.

David Ward Griffith has developed a theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman." A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's play is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate he replaced speech by music and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of the thousands of players in the great out of doors. In brief he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861 and 1870 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace. Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Ralph Lewis, Donald Crisp and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 5,000 horses and no less than 3,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Oct 29
San Antonio Light

"Birth of a Nation."

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Grand Opera House all of next week, has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle, "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird," supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions, sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5000 scenes, 18,000 character, 3000 cavalry, 200,000 details—the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his monmental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theaters of the country. Dallas and Houston have fallen in line with the cities of the North, and "The Birth of a Nation" has established new records in the first two Texas cities it has played. "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku-Klux-Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 29

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Wheeling is very fortunate in being given the opportunity to see the highest development of the moving picture business in that marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Court Theater for one week, beginning next Monday. The pictured scenes are striking reproductions of historical scenes and events, of a political evolution which are not familiar to the younger generation. This is especially true of the great tragedy that stunned the nation just as it was emerging in triumph after great tribulation—the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

What follows in truthful pictorial narrative, the so-called reconstruction period of the South, has stirred up some criticism as an unnecessary revival of sectionalism. As painful as this may be to some over-sensitive spirits, it is nothing more than a strict adherence to the text of impartial history. It is not a beautiful page in our chronicles, but it bears its own comment and its lesson, and neither that both sections interest in the memorable regenerating contest may be mistaken. Time has softened all asperities and enmities of that period and the truth can no longer hurt by its blame. As a picture, it is a wonderful production, artistic, educational and entertaining.

LIBERTY THEATRE, 42nd ST., W. of BROADWAY

NOW PLAYING

Twice Daily, Including Sunday
Evenings at 8.15 Matinees at 2.15
Prices: Eves. & Sat. Mat., 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00 & $2.00
All Other Mats., 25c, 50c & $1.00

Farewell to New York After the Longest Run in the History of the American Stage

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
8TH WONDER OF THE WORLD

N. B.
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL NEVER BE SEEN ANYWHERE EXCEPT IN THEATRES PLAYING THE HIGHEST CLASS OF DRAMATIC PRODUCTIONS AND AT A CORRESPONDING SCALE of PRICES.
D. W. GRIFFITH.

LAST FOUR WEEKS

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Engagement Positively Terminates Sat., Nov. 27th

ON THIS DATE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL HAVE PLAYED 725 CONSECUTIVE PERFORMANCES IN NEW YORK, EXCEEDING THE LONGEST PREVIOUS RUN BY 55 TIMES.

SEATS NOW SELLING FOR ALL REMAINING PERFORMANCES UP TO AND INCLUDING SATURDAY NIGHT, NOVEMBER 27TH.

Enquirer, Wheeling Oct. 29

Personal Side of David W. Griffith as Human as His Professional Achievements Are Inspiring

Genius of the Screen, Who Has Risen So High Above His Fellows, Gentle, Unassuming, Neighborly and Altogether a "Regular Guy."

There is a human interest story in Griffith, who has screened an American epic. His work is known to millions, but the man himself is not known. He has kept himself back of the camera, out of the picture, but now that he has made Broadway sit back and look at the films at Broadway prices, and has got the so-called classes to drop their venerated classics and join the masses at a "movie" exhibition, the blue stockings and men of books rise to inquire what manner of man is he.

In the first place, Griffith was born in Lagrange, near Louisville, Ky. He is thirty-five and has a strain of the Celt. The blend of the canny Scot and the bubbling Irishman that came down to him from his overseas ancestry shows at times in his climaxes. His father served under Lee in the Civil War, and the man who now stands at the head of his profession in this country, and perhaps the world, has not lost the spirit of the old Southland.

It's an old story now that Griffith was a failure as a road actor, a barnstormer even in tank towns. That doesn't matter so much. To-day he stages the great outdoors and blends the purr of a kitten with the crash of artillery, runs the whole scale of emotion in his film portraits of life and he sets the heartbeats of the poet and the orator. He had designs on grand opera when he looked about for a career, but he found his voice suited for the speaking stage, even if the manager of the road company failed to agree with him. Griffith's friends say he was better than the average as an actor, but he stuck to the stage for two years and quit for a place with a film company. Here is where he began to develop his talents and get his grip on the psychology of the world of make believe.

Blessings of Dramatic "Pep."

No one questions his dramatic instincts. He "puts over" his scenes. Every "movie" fan knows that. But to see him at work! He takes excellent care of himself, but he is a bunch of live wires. He has speed and power, but he never wastes energy. Working night and day at his side one wonders if he is ever going to let up, but on observing closely one sees that he is easing the strain just as in the big crashes of his "Birth of a Nation," the tense situation is relieved by a flash of field flowers or golden grain, or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad or specialization. His occupation is ager of a restaurant cabaret for $250 a week to perform in the trottery. The director enjoyed the compliment, but he did not tell the Boniface why he couldn't afford to take the job. This offer came at the close of a fourteen-hour day of hard work in the studio, and he rested by dancing and making good at it.

Griffith is about five feet ten inches in height. He carries no superfluous flesh and he is clubby when off duty. He has written several short stories, but he is committed absolutely to the silent drama. He looks upon it as the youngest sister of the fine arts, and he hates censorship.

His Sense of Tone Colors.

The director has a fine appreciation of the tone and color of good music. He sees dramatic situations in blending of tone and color. It was this attribute which supplied the musical score to "The Birth of a Nation." In the tedious and torturing months when he was putting the finishing touches to this great production he correlated tone to every action, and unconsciously hummed the several tunes and chords which now form a part of the wonderful score which Breil has syncronized so well to this stirring action. These notes were caught on the fly, as it were, by Breil, while Griffith was working like a Trojan to finish his work, and then blended into the whole with its present startling effect. This is another Griffith innovation, and the first time in history that a score was conceived and utilized under such circumstances.

Griffith's memory is highly disciplined. He directed the great spectacle without a scrap of paper before him and after taking portions of it in odd lots all over the country he sat down in the late nights in the studio in California and there worked out in dramatic sequence the story as it is unfolded on the screen.

One statistician has figured out Griffith kept in mind a million scenes, actions, incidents and details before he ever began the work of assembling it in narrative form. Not a hitch or an inaccuracy got by him. As an evidence of this his secretary tells of a soldier who came into view on the film as a bugler all decked out in a spic and span uniform.

"Great heavens, what were you thinking of?" cried Griffith from the dim shadows of the projecting room. "Why, my boy, you've been fighting through the hell of war for four years, with a half-starved and half-clothed army. Go back and get a battered old uniform and let's do it all over."

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising, in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas that the man with fine imaginative faculties has won out. Griffith grew fast with the development of the silent drama. He got too big for the battered trenches, and he leaped out into the open. He wanted to spread himself and had to have room.

David W. Griffith.

His larger pictures had run the customary course of "feature releases" with increasing success, but after all they were confined within the limitations of the business side of the presentation of motion pictures. This meant that they would be seen over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only knew he had a fine piece of work. His vision extended further than that of the men who control the finances of the motion picture business. A great sum of money had been invested in this undertaking—more than was ever expended in the making of a great spectacle. Nearly a year of ceaseless toil lay behind this enormous expense, and here was the man who had seen ahead of his contemporaries—who had evolved the great American epic—who had multiplied detail until it was staggering, and with this behind him the foreglance was not inspiring.

There were so many theatres and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations never seriously regarded the motion picture as an art possibility.

Behind him he had the record of several great pictures which had been hidden like the lights under a bushel. There was "Judith of Bethulia," as fine a piece of poetic imagery and rhythmic grouping as the art had ever developed in America.

For contemporary study of the seamy side of American life he had vastly improved upon the late Paul Armstrong's somewhat superficial study in heredity, "The Escape," and made a virile thing of punch and power. He had combined the short story by Poe, "The Telltale Heart," with the fanciful and lyrical quality of "Annabelle Lee," and brought forth a classic in weird mysticism which he called "The Avenging Conscience." In the trade channels these had been recognized as super fine works, but they had never gained that measure of recognition given many plays that were vastly inferior in art and poetry and power.

When He "Arrived"

With "The Birth of a Nation" completed, the man found himself facing the inexorable fact—that he had created an art which his associates and contemporaries had been unable to breast up with in their advancement. He must conquer a new world if he would meet with a return in finances and artistic recognition commensurate with the thing he had done.

He demanded an outlet. His business affairs had always been looked after by others. These men were appealed to. They were willing to do everything within their opwer and resources, but the motion picture resources had not progressed as rapidly as Griffith. There was not a channel open which looked appealing to him. He insisted that there must be a way. In desperation it is said that Griffith was told he would be given a free rein and could go ahead with his own plans.

Having completed his big work, it seemed piling it on to put the burden on his shoulders. Griffith's success in direction had been enhanced by his uncanny ability to select able lieutenants and players. He brought this sense East with him after his labors in California. Quietly he set about sizing up the field, and he selected a young man who had been associated with the old line dramatic offerings. This man was J. J. McCarthy, who looks after all of Griffith's business interests in the East in the capacity of general manager of the controlling company which owns "The Birth of a Nation."

Playing for Big Stakes.

Then Griffith set about with this beginning to gather other forces about him, and in a month's time "The Birth of a Nation" was launched. It's an old story now of how the wiseacres all predicted a dismal failure. Griffith was undaunted, for he had nothing to lose. He knew he had a fine work and he desired it seen and understood. He was playing for higher stakes. The anvil chorus rang with all that mellows depth which is the true sound of Broadway and Forty-second street. The plans for launching the big spectacle were never altered. The greatest promotion campaign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He the risk—he worked as hard to get it under way as he had in the making of it. The people he had been trying for so long to reach discovered a new genius in the field. The man had been compelled to climb out of the narrow rut and the trenches onto a higher plane, and in doing it he raised the tone and standing of the cinematographic art with him. There is to be no going back. Griffith proved to his own satisfaction that it could be done. He looks ahead now with a clearer vision, for he knows that the best is none too good for the world if you have an opportunity of letting the people know.

"The Birth of a Nation" is nearing the end of the most phenomenal run New York has ever seen. With the end of November it will have been seen for 725 consecutive performances in New York. If you would have a comparative idea of what this means look at some of the records. It is now the only $2 attraction in town which has stretched through the summer from last season without a break and is still the talk of the town. It has played to nearly 700,000 persons here. It is touring the country in the first class theatres, and old line attractions are changing their routes to get away from its opposition. It is estimated that more than 4,000,000 persons have seen the production in this country.

It cost half a million dollars to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like

---

San Antonio Ex. Oct 29

Griffith Picturized Dixon's Book.

Many critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last.

Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to. This will be the unique offering at the Grand Opera House all of next week.

David Ward Griffith has developed a theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman." A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffith's play is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. Perhaps words had cramped rather than aided previous fictionists and dramatists. At any rate he replaced speech by music and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of the thousands of players in the great out of doors. In brief he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861 and 1870 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new and stupendous art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes it epitomizes the life of a nation. This is something the old art could never do. The obsolete so-called "stage unities" are thrown to the winds, and Griffith carries the magnificent story from the introduction of African slavery right down through Civil War and Reconstruction days to the final real union of South and North in the bonds of love and peace. Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Ralph Lewis, Donald Crisp and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

San Antonio Light Oct 29

"Birth of a Nation."

The new theatric art invented by David W. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Grand Opera House all of next week, has enabled him to surpass by far any previous stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird," supposed to be the high-water mark of such productions, sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5000 scenes, 18,000 character, 3000 cavalry, 200,000 details—the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars. The great director is being repaid for his mondental effort in motion picture spectacle by "capacity" business at first-class prices in the principal theaters of the country. Dallas and Houston have fallen in line with the cities of the North, and "The Birth of a Nation" has established new records in the first two Texas cities it has played. "The Birth of a Nation" is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America. Petersburg and Atlanta, Appomattox and Ford's Theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku-Klux-Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 29

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Wheeling is very fortunate in being given the opportunity to see the highest development of the moving picture business in that marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Court Theater for one week, beginning next Monday. The pictured scenes are striking reproductions of historical scenes and events, of a political evolution which are not familiar to the younger generation. This is especially true of the great tragedy that stunned the nation just as it was emerging in triumph after great tribulation—the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

What follows in truthful pictorial narrative, the so-called reconstruction period of the South, has stirred up some criticism as an unnecessary revival of sectionalism. As painful as this may be to some over-sensitive spirits, it is nothing more than a strict adherence to the text of impartial history. It is not a beautiful page in our chronicles, but it bears its own comment and its lesson, and testifies that both sections involved in that memorable regenerating contest made mistakes. Time has softened all the asperities and enmities of that period, and the truth can no longer hurt or inflame. As a whole, it is a wonderful production, artistic, educational and entertaining.

golden grain, or kittens at play.

He can tune up a player to the highest pitch of nervous energy, and when he strikes the right key he relaxes. If this director has a fad it is relaxation. His occupation is

The evolution of the motion picture that measured up to the Broadway standard of dramatic worth is not surprising, in view of the big strides of the mechanical and the concentration of big minds with the big ideas on the silent drama. It may be said over the different circuits that are laid out in filmland and then pass out the same as others. Their distinctiveness was noticed. They surpassed other features, but after all they were just Griffith features and could only go so far.

glance was not inspiring.

There were so many theatres and so many states and so many channels through which it could pass and then he was done. Griffith is not an easy going sort. He knew the limitations paign in the way of publicity and advertising New York had ever seen for a show enterprise went merrily ahead. Then came the opening and the result. Once more Griffith was right. He had made an outlet. He duction in this country.

It cost half a million dollars to make and launch this success. That money has been earned twice over, and those who financed it originally are possessors of an Eldorado the like

LIBERTY THEATRE, 42nd ST., W. of BROADWAY

NOW PLAYING

Twice Daily, Including Sunday
Evenings at 8.15 Matinees at 2.15
Prices: Eves. & Sat. Mat., 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00 & $2.00
All Other Mats., 25c, 50c & $1.00

Farewell to New York After the Longest Run in the History of the American Stage

D. W. GRIFFITH'S
8TH WONDER OF THE WORLD

N. B.
"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL NEVER BE SEEN ANYWHERE EXCEPT IN THEATRES PLAYING THE HIGHEST CLASS OF DRAMATIC PRODUCTIONS AND AT A CORRESPONDING SCALE of PRICES.
D. W. GRIFFITH.

LAST FOUR WEEKS

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Engagement Positively Terminates Sat., Nov. 27th

ON THIS DATE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WILL HAVE PLAYED 725 CONSECUTIVE PERFORMANCES IN NEW YORK, EXCEEDING THE LONGEST PREVIOUS RUN BY 55 TIMES.

SEATS NOW SELLING FOR ALL REMAINING PERFORMANCES UP TO AND INCLUDING SATURDAY NIGHT, NOVEMBER 27TH.

Pittsburgh Sunday Post Oct. 31

KU KLUX CLAN in the galloping rescue that is a triumph of musical effect stirring the spectators into thunders of applause at "The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle in th Miles Theater.

"Birth of a Nation" Film Miles

Daily Advance Oct 30

DETACHMENT OF LEE'S ARMY, AS SEEN IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE ACADEMY NEXT THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY.

Daily Advance

'BIRTH OF A NATIO

Academy Management Expects H for Seats Monday Morning.

The box office of the Academy Music will be a busy spot Mon morning, when the seats for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nati go on sale. The engagement of big Griffith spectacle begins Thu day night and will continue for th days, with matinees Friday and S urday, making five performances all. To handle an advance sale such proportions means a period hard work for the box office staff.

The extent of local interest in coming of the big Griffith specta has been a surprise even to the Ac emy management. Mail orders h been received from towns fifty mi distant, and there have been many quiries by long distance telephone to the prices, time of performance other details of the engagement. the spectacle is being shown only the large cities, due partly to the adequate stage facilities in the sma er towns, it means a long journey many people from the outside w are determined not to miss seeing

The first half of the spectacle, whi was suggested by Thomas Dixo "The Clansman," exhibits the salie events of the War between the Stat The formation of the Confedera Lincoln's Call for Troops, Sherma March to the Sea, the battle of P tersburg, Lee's surrender to Gra and the awful tragedy of Lincol assassination at Ford's Theatre, A ril 14, 1865, live before the spectat of the Griffith drama. In the seco half the South's "second uprising" this time against the carpet-bagg regime—is shown in a thrilling sto of Reconstruction days. The roman of the "little Confederate Colonel Ben Cameron, with the Northerne Elsie Stoneman, and that of the U ionist captain, Phil Stoneman, wit Margaret Cameron, the South Car lina lassie, maintains two threads continuous love-interest throughou the story.

But the great out-of-doors is M Griffith's special field. Tremendou battle scenes and the wild rides the Ku Klux Klan are staged wit thousands of participants. Eightee thousand human actors and 3,00 horses were employed in the makin of the picture, which cost half a mi lion dollars and took eight month to produce. Some of its immensit is gained from the fact that there ar no less than 5,000 distinct and indivi ual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith at tempted what was previously unhear of in connection with motion picture This was the synchronizing of a com plete symphonic score with the ap pearance of the important character and the enactment of the priacip scenes. This magnificent instrumen al music is played by a large orches tra of experts who are carried o tour in the traveling company

Oct 31

"The Birth of a Nation"

IT IS important for intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Miles Theater, to take note of the fact that the engagement in this city will positively terminate Saturday, November 27. This means that commencing with the two performances tomorrow, which inaugurate the tenth week of the record-breaking run here, but four weeks remain in which to view this wonderful spectacle whose popularity here as manifested by crowded houses twice daily shows no abatement of interest.

So many elements enter into the success of this romantic drama that a detailed enumeration of its many notable features might prove tedious. But it should be said that the music accompaniment of the pictures, embracing folk songs, national airs, engaging dance melodies, excerpts from some of the world's most famous compositions, as well as original works adds no small part to the enjoyment of the two and one-half hours' of entertainment. That this score, which is so important to the development of the play's thrilling, interesting story, will be adequately interpreted by a symphony orchestra of 30 is made a feature of the production.

The first half of this Griffith masterpiece unrolls scenes and incidents from the Civil War on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half is a pictorial chronicle of reconstruction days in the South, including the carpet-bagger Negro excesses and the rise and triumph of the Ku-Klux-Klan. Interwoven with the whole is a double romance of the Blue and the Gray.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Oct 31

PEOPLE GO TWICE

"Do you mean to say people go twice to 'The Birth of a Nation?' recently questioned a portly individual as he passed the box office man at the Miles Theater a ten-dollar bill in payment for five seats.

"Yes, indeed," came the answer, "hundreds of them and I know many people who have seen it more than twice. One of the most important railroad officials in this country, who is located here, is already a four-time visitor. He's particularly interested, however, in the wonderful horsemanship displayed in the battle scenes and the riding of the Ku Klux Klan. Of course, we have many local people who have seen the play in other large cities, come here with their families or friends. But from what most of the two-time patrons say the reason that prompts the second visit is the desire to see the big spectacle thoroughly."

What a tribute to D W Griffith, whose genius made "The Birth of a Nation" possible, is embodied in that final sentence. What a compliment to his labor for perfection of detail and fidelity of reproduction.

Most people are so overwhelmed by the magnitude of the piece that they go away completely satisfied—but there are others who realize that "The Birth of a Nation," like a tragedy of Shakespeare, should be seen more than once if one is to fully appreciate it at its full value.

Pittsburgh Gazette Oct 31

The long stay of "The Birth of the Nation" in Pittsburgh has been the cause of such great lonesomeness on the part of Claud Percy Saunders that the manager hiked off to New York last Sunday to get acquainted once more with his wife and little son.

* * *

It is currently reported on the Rialto that William Nevermore Patch has been induced to remove his bone-rimmed glasses in order to watch more closely and accurately the large receipts pouring in from "The Birth of the Nation."

* * *

"The Birth of a Nation" lingers at the Miles, where daily large audiences continue to witness the Griffith story of Reconstruction. Announcement is made of the possible termination of the engagement in four weeks and it looks as though this prediction will run the full time. Entertainments in the other theaters last week were of the usual type so far as burlesque, vaudeville and moving pictures were concerned and will remain so during the present week.

Kansas C. Journal Oct 31

Scene from the Birth of a Nation Grand

Beaumont Enterprise Oct 31

Great Crowd Cheers Stirring Drama Enacted on Screen

By Joe Webb.

They said the silent drama could never take the place of the play with the spoken lines. But they knew not whereof they spoke. For that was before David W. Griffith produced "The Birth of a Nation."

Last night as many as could get seats in the Kyle theatre watched the wonderful story unfold before them on the screen and for three hours, with but a single short intermission, hundreds cheered the ragged knights of the linen robe and the Scotland cross as the deathless characters of those heroes of unfading glory and undimmed memory enacted the stirring scenes that gave to this reunited nation its supremacy of government by uncrowned kings.

While the principal scenes were laid in the old south, in the days of carpet-baggers and misguided negro rulers, the production shows no trace of sectionalism, and when Phil Stoneman, eldest son of the northern congressional leader responsible for tragic conditions in the south, offered his life to protect Margaret Cameron, a true daughter of the Confederacy, he was as loudly chered by the cosmopolitan audience as was Col. Ben Cameron, brother of Margaret, when he led a forlorn charge across a bloody field and rammed the Stars and Bars down the cannon's mouth.

And in both thrilling moments the orchestra impartially played the stirring notes of the war melody of Lee's tattered hosts and the South's fondest hopes—the "Dixie" that can never die.

The story is familiar to all who will read this. Everybody has read "The Clansman." The play simply tells its thrilling story. The portrayal of the characters is good, as it should be, for the foremost stars of the world were paid great prices to make it good. Hundreds of thousands of dollars went into this production and "The Birth of a Nation" is worth all it cost. Incidentally, it is the first time a $2 motion picture show has been offered in Beaumont, and to say the house was crowded and the audience went home happier for having seen the play, expresses volumes.

The first scenes show the happy homes of north and south before the nation was torn asunder by the civil war. Then the great Lincoln is shown signing the call for volunteers. The first part of the show is concluded after some of the most realistic battle scenes imaginable have been shown on the screen.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a sermon against war. "War's Peace" is a pile of butchered sons, fathers, sweethearts. The orchestra plays the minor notes of "Taps" as they are shown in ghastly heaps. And then it crashes into the music of Mars as the shells burst and the night is made hideous by the bursting flames on every side.

The second part of the show depicts the reconstruction days.

Col. Ben Cameron, after being wounded, captured, sentenced to hang and pardoned by the "Great-Hearted" a short time before the assassin's bullet ends his career, returns to the ruins of his home in South Carolina. He finds Stoneman, the political power after Lincoln's death, has sent the carpet-baggers to his beloved southland to plant in the hearts of negroes hopes that never can be realized while manhood remains in the Anglo-Saxon. He endures much. Then his pet sister, Flora, exquisitely portrayed by Mae Marsh, is pursued by a lustful black and chooses death by leaping from a precipice rather than the nameless fate which threatens.

Brooding over the tragedy of her death, he sees a number of negro children frightened by forms enveloped in a sheet to represent ghosts. The superstition of the negro suggests to him the garb which later made the Ku Klux Klan so feared by the blacks.

Silas Lynch, mulatto, protege of Stoneman, becomes lieutenant governor of the state. He puts spies to work to learn the members of the Klan. Death is to be the penalty. One of the spies finds some of the robes in the home of Dr. Cameron, father of Ben.

The aged southern aristocrat is arrested and led in chains before the negroes who formerly had been his slaves. Two of the faithful old darkies, loyal unto death, effect his rescue. Stoneman's son aids in the escape and then, in a cabin where he finds two former Union soldiers, fights off the blacks until help comes, robed in white and bringing vengeance.

Cameron's daughter, in the meantime, has appealed to Elsie Stoneman to ask her father to save the aged southerner. Stoneman can not be found. Elsie, played by Lillian Gish, the star, decides to appeal to the negro lieutenant governor her father has placed in power. The negro official, drunk with wine and power, takes advantage of her visit to try to force her to marry him. Her father's arrival does not alter the negro's determination. Elsie, though, has succeeded in breaking a window and screaming for aid. Two members of the Ku Klux Klan, disguised as negroes, hear her cry and dash for help.

Follows then the thrilling ride of the hundreds upon hundreds of white-robed knights, through the moonlight, over the fields and meadows, through silvery streams, until at last the lieutenant governor's mansion is reached. A spectacular charge puts the negro troops in flight. Ben Cameron knocks the burly negro to one side and clasps Elsie Stoneman in his arms.

The play closes with a double honeymoon scene, down by the sea, featuring Ben Cameron and Elsie Stoneman, Phil Stoneman and Margaret Cameron, a nation reunited, a people "one and inseparable."

Then an allegorical interpolation shows the god of war waving overhead his brutal club, disregarding the pleas of breaking hearts, which fades away to be replaced by the sweetly serene face of the Prince of Peace.

Danville Bee Oct 29

GREAT PLAY HERE SOON!

ACTOR THAT PORTRAYS LINCOLN IN "BIRTH OF A NATION" SELECTED FROM TWENTY OTHERS.

Jose Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Majestic Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and manenerisms were carefuly counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth atacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the war President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

Matinees are to be given Tuesday and Wednesday by "The Birth of a Nation" company and seats for all performances are on sale at Booth's drug store.

Pittsburgh Leader Oct 31

RARE MUSICAL SETTING IN "BIRTH OF A NATION

(Written to Fit the Story by Joseph Carl Breil).

One of the most effective features of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Miles, is its really brilliant musical setting, which was arranged by Joseph Carl Breil, of this city. During the two hours and a half which the big spectacle requires, the orchestra plays an arrangement which perfectly fits the unfolding story and which includes many of the finest melodic compositions extant. In addition to the many original airs written especially for this drama by Mr. Breil, one can recognize many of the celebrated songs and ballads of the '60's, as well as excerpts from the works of the celebrated old masters. This score is considered the first significant accompaniment written for a photo drama. So important is the score to the action of the drama, and so vital its correct interpretation, that only picked musicians, directed by leaders of the high standing and reputation of Albert Pesce, who is in charge of the company orchestra here, are engaged by Mr. Griffith.

When the beaux and belles of '61 danced the small hours away, they did not have the hesitation, the tango or the fox trot; instead it was the waltz and polka, the schottische and lancers and the Virginia reel that put rhythm in the feet and tingle in the blood. So David W. Griffith, in his marvelous reproduction of the Piedmont ball in "The Birth of a Nation," has the young people pancing to the strains of "Comin' Thro' the Rye" changed to waltz time.

On this lovely, almost sensuously intoxicating scene is brought the tattered flag that had been through the first battle of Bull Run when the Confederates drove the Federals headlong before them and baptized the Stars and Bars in glory.

As Johnny Rebs exult and the women cheer as the flag is displayed one hears the strains of the "Bonnie Blue Flag" succeeding the waltz music. But soon comes the news that the young officers at the ball must go to the front. A scene of wild confusion follows upon the joyous dance, and at daybreak, when the ballroom is deserted and everyone is racing about the streets, the chaos and alarm of approaching strife are reflected by the strains of Suppe's "Light Cavalry Overture." The little town of Piedmont has its early share of the horrors of war which Weber's "Der Freischutz Overture" suggests to the ear as they are pictured on the screen.

Thus the big moments of the early part of "The Birth of a Nation," laid in the southland, revert to "Dixie," "My Maryland," "Marching Through Georgia," "Kingdom Coming," "Girl I Left Behind Me" and "Home, Sweet Home." To what other tune should the southerners, bound for war, march than to the ever-familiar "Dixie?"

What more splendidly typifies the rescue of the Piedmonters from the guerrilla troops by their own men than the glorious "Maryland, My Maryland?"

When piquant little Elsie Stoneman decides to become a nurse and solace gallant wounded youths back to health, even as cabinet officers' daughters have done in the present war, her goings and comings are accompanied by a most adorable air which she is supposed not only to sing but also to pick on the banjo. In the close-ups you can see the dainty lips fashioning the words of the song and in the full figure you can see her working the banjo a little overtime, while the handsome sufferer on the pillow manages to turn his head about three-quarters in order to get a look at her. Many persons have asked what this tune is. It is Henry C. Work's "Kingdom Coming," otherwise known as "Massa's Jubilee," one of the most fetching ditties that was ever picked out of banjo or guitar.

To return to the great war scenes. There is a magnitude about Griffith's representation of war and battle that demands the most elaborate effects. The scenes themselves are enormous, panoramic; the action is both marvelously complex and marvelously vivid; the music must reproduce this immensity, complexity and thrill at once.

Then there is the wild, chaotic tune that marks the entry of the negro carpetbagger mobs and the racket of the rioters. Perhaps Mr. Griffith got this out of the semi-musical cries of the negro dancers on the old plantation in Kentucky when he was a boy.

But above all and everything else the biggest thing in the second part of "The Birth of a Nation," and indeed of the whole play, is the welcome Ku Klux Klan call, the signal that the fiery cross of St. Andrew has been borne from South to North Carolina and back again, and that the little band of oppressed whites, including the hero and the heroine of the story, are to be saved by these highlanders from the fury of the riotous elements unloosed upon them.

The final Piedmont scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are very strenuous. It seems almost impossible to conceive how Griffith could have got action of such lightening-like speed, involving such enormous numbers of people and carried on with such apparent defiance of the rules of order yet with a strange logic of its own.

These fine bits of allegory are accompanied by the "Gloria" from Mozart's Mass in C, and as the last Utopian scene fades out and the immortal words of Daniel Webster on liberty and union appear on the screen "The Star-Spangled Banner" rings out in all its splendor and the scenes that have made "The Birth of a Nation" are done.

Pittsburgh Gazette Times Oct 31

"Dixie" Is Most Popular of All

THE score of "The Birth of a Nation," which is the first significant accompaniment written for a photo drama, includes many of the best melodic compositions extant. In addition to the original music supplied by the composer, Joseph Carl Breil of this city, one hears such popular songs of the years ago as "Comin' Thro' the Rye," "Bonnie Blue Flag," "Dixie," "My Maryland," "Marching Through Georgia," "Kingdom Coming," "Girl I Left Behind Me," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," "Hail to the Chief," "The Cocoanut Dance," "In the Gloaming," "Home, Sweet Home" and "The Star-Spangled Banner." Those familiar with the music of the world's most famous masters recognize excerpts from Suppe's "Light Cavalry Overture," Weber's "Der Freischuetz Overture," Bellini's "Norma Overture," "Greig's "Peer Gynt" suite in "The Hall of the Mountain King," Wagner's "Die Walkure," "Rienza Overture," "Zampa Overture" and "The Ride of the Valkyries," Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" and Mozart's Mass in C.

Despite the many sympathetic and martial melodies prompted by the Civil War none proved so popular in the South as "Dixie," a song composed prior to the war, which had no particular significance to the period of strife following '61, and no patriotic appeal such as distinguished national songs of other countries. Yet "Dixie," a negro minstrel melody composed by Dan Emmett in 1859, for use by him as a Southern character song and dance in Bryant's Minstrels, whose subject matter merely referred to the South, became the rallying cry of the Confederate troops and is today the representative air of that portion of our country south of the Mason and Dixon line. No stranger example of how a national song came into being exists than the case of "Dixie."

Dan Emmett, one of the most famous minstrels of his time, told Thomas F. Kirk, Sr., of this city, that the title of the song was suggested by "Dixon's Line," as the Mason and Dixon colonial boundary was familiarly called—Dixie being a corruption of Dixon. Due to Emmett's prominence as an entertainer the song had attained national popularity before the war, and Mr. Kirk relates the humorous incident of how he as one of the Ninety-sixth Ohio Volunteers taught the song to a quartet he organized in his regiment, only to experience the chagrin after the quartet had learned how to make the welkin ring with the composition, of having the piece banished by headquarter's orders because the "Johnny Rebs" were using it as their rallying song.

Lawrenceburg Ex Oct 30

Griffith's Spectacle at Grand Monday.

The next attraction at the Grand Opera House will be D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Monday evening and is for seven nights and six matinees. This is the great production which is still making a record run of over 600 performances in New York City, where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over 2,000,000 people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the East. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit. Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story into pictures. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses, and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of $500,000.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme, but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score, which is synchronized to the drama, is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of thirty trav-els with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation. That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Griffith has built his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things, which are a part of war.

PEACE ALLEGORY IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE ACADEMY NEXT THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Seat Sale for Big Spectacle Opens Tomorrow Morning.

It is expected that a long line will greet the box office staff of the Academy of Music tomorrow morning when they open the seat sale for "The Birth of a Nation." The big spectacle is coming for three days, beginning next Thursday night with Friday and Saturday matinees, and indications are that the audience at the opening performance will be one of the largest of the week. This has been true of every opening night of the company coming to Lynchburg, and considering the strong local interest in the spectacle, the Thursday night performance will probably take on the aspect of a gala "first night" with society present in numbers.

Dealing with historical events of the reconstruction, the general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and sombre. But love interest and comedy of a refined sort illuminate the spectacle throughout its two hours and forty minutes.

There is a typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarm have not yet disfigured its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is a young daughter of the Southern home, almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from the fate worse than death she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again, there is a scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of the Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing, "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkies delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the sombre shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life.

Kansas City Journal Oct 31

Grand—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, starts today on its second successful week. The historic features of this presentation have attracted wide attention. In pictorial form are shown such stirring events in American history as Sherman's march to the sea, the last gallant stand of the Confederates at Petersburg, the surrender at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln and the saving of the South by the Ku Klux Klan.

Mere words can never give a realization of the dramatic scenes, the lifelike and vivid reproduction of the past. Thousands of soldiers are seen in the trenches, battling at breastworks, charging over fields with cold steel, masked batteries in action, a panorama of marching and counter-marching troops, shells exploding in the air and in the midst of struggling men, the carnage of war as it really is. There could be no more potent argument for peace.

There are two romantic love episodes in which a colonel of the South loves the sister of an officer of the North, and the officer of the North loves the sister of the colonel of the South. The proud spirit of the Southern girl and the equally proud spirit of the Northern maid are shown in as thrilling and soul-gripping a story as was ever staged. Love turns to hate and then to love again as each girl watches the grim struggle with partisan eyes and remains loyal to the land of her birth. These love themes are taken from Thomas Dixon's world famous stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots."

The cast includes such favorites as Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Spottiswoode Aiken, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Ralph Lewis, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed and others.

The symphony orchestra of thirty is a pronounced feature of every performance. The score by Joseph Carl Breil is a masterpiece of illustrative music.

There are two performances every day, including Sunday, at 2:15 and 8:15 and while it is said to be the best $2 worth of entertainment ever shown in the theater there are also plenty of seats at prices to suit all purses.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 30

BIG SPECTACLE AT THE COURT

"BIRTH OF A NATION" OPENS A WEEK'S ENGAGEMENT MONDAY NIGHT.

With Daily Matinees Beginning Tuesday—Production Interesting and Instructive.

The clientel the Court Theatre are manifesting a great deal of interest in the forth coming engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a week's engagement at that house on Monday evening. The sale of seats which began yesterday has been very large which serves to indicate that this attraction will have splendid patronage during its stay here.

There has not been a dissenting voice against "The Birth of a Nation" so far as realism and stupendous undertaking is concerned. It has been proclaimed wherever it has been seen as the admitted sensation in the theatrical affair of the current season. It has received from the dramatic critics the same attention they are accustomed to giving to the productions of the legitimate stage. Their endorsement has proved but a repetition of the praise that has been bestowed upon this wonderful work by men in every walk of life. Jurists, senators, representatives in Congress, artists, writers, illustrators and men of every profession have seen it and pronounced it by far the greatest that they had ever witnessed. "The Birth of a Nation" is without doubt a masterpiece and the production is something in dramatic art that has never before been given to the stage. Seeing is believing—and in this wonderful play one actually sees the birth, growth and coronation of this King of Nations. This giant of the Powers of the earth—a people compared with whom the Romans were but mere pygmies. As if by the waving of the magician's wand the grear scenes are, one by one, unrolled. David W. Griffith and his associates were eight months in creating the production. They traveled over the sections in which the story is located and reproduced the scenes with rigid fidelity. Thousands of works of historical and official value were carefully read to get all the full and exact particulars. It is not to be wondered, in the light of all these facts, that the making of the production involved an expenditure approaching a half a million dollars.

Eve Folger Oct 30

Wanted—Screen Conventions

Lubin is also to be credited with an interesting attempt to improve the change of scene by fading the picture black and then bringing up the light again on the new setting and new characters. In this regard there seems to be no fixed convention. Some films fade, some jump, some use the vignette opening. "The Birth of a Nation" uses all three methods in a single film. It is perfectly plain that there ought to be a specialized work for each of these methods to do. One of them certainly should be kept to indicate a "vision." Nowadays you see it indicated by any number of devices. It is to Pathe's credit that it is working out a method by which the vision may be "vignetted" over a portion of the original picture, with enough left to show the person in whose mind the vision is supposed to be arising.

• • •

When, Oh, When?

But when will the producers get rid of their absurd red fire scenes? If anyone lights so much as a match in front of the camera, they promptly stain the whole film a bright red. The sky, miles off, takes on the hue of a San Francisco fire. There are exceptions, of course. The burning of Atlanta in "The Birth of a Nation," the many fire scenes in "Cabiria" and those in "Comrade John" are excellent. But that is because the scenes were taken in such a way that the light came from the burning spot, and hence took red naturally.

And why does the camera, like the soldier, "see red" when a battle starts?

• • •

Young Movie Man, Go East!

Is California to lose her movie laurels? The last month has been full of signs of an exodus of photoplay producers to the East. The Quality Pictures, which features Francis X. Bushman, have moved their studios to the Atlantic seaboard. Other companies are establishing or enlarging Eastern branches. The Fine Arts or Griffith corner of the Triangle has two or three companies working steadily in and around New York. California's climate will never be beaten for photographic purposes—the brilliance of sun, the freedom from rain. But the life of the East, the big cities, the famous localities, the familiar trees, which are not, like Los Angeles', semi-tropical, all these are in big demand. The only place to get them is here where they grow.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 30

MISS MAE MARSH

As Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," Court Theatre, One Week Beginning Monday Evening, November 1st.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 30

MISS LILLIAN GISH

Who plays the part of the Northern Girl in "The Birth of a Nation," Court Theatre, One week beginning Monday evening, Matinee Daily, beginning Tuesday.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 30

D. W. GRIFFITH,

The author and producer of "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Court Theatre one week, beginning Monday evening, Matinee Daily, commencing Tuesday.

Wheeling Intelligencer Oct 30

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" TO BE SEEN AT THE COURT THEATRE ALL NEXT WEEK

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," Court Theatre, One Week Beginning Monday, November 1st.

Wheeling Sunday News Oct 31 — Danville Register Oct 31

BIRTH OF NATION IS GREAT PLAY

GREAT PRODUCTION WILL BE SHOWN AT COURT THEATER ALL THIS WEEK.

LOVE STORY RUNS THROUGH PLAY—REAL ARTISTS ENGAGED IN ALL PARTS.

The greatest blight that could possibly have befallen the republic of North America, better known probably as the United States of America, was the establishment of the institution of slavery. From the time the first ship brought a cargo of slaves from Africa there began numerous troubles. In the light of reason of the present day slavery is contrary to the higher instincts of humanity. Abolition was subsequently advocated and the only way the institution could be abolished on this continent was by resorting to arms. That was the trend of public thought at that time, but today a question of this import would no doubt be settled through the channels of diplomacy. The idea of social equality was never considered even by the most pronounced advocates of abolition at the North. William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, bitter as they were against human slavery, never dreamed that the time would come when social equality would be advocated. The slavery question precipitated the Civil war, and from this historic event there has been created a great historic drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen in this city at the Court theater for a week beginning tomorrow evening. Matinees during the engagement will be given Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

This will be the first and last visit of this mammoth spectacle to this city. The story of the play, as will be presented during the engagement, represents the "Stoneman" boys of Pennsylvania, who had been house guests at Piedmont, S. C., of their school chums the "Cameron" boys. Phil Stoneman and Margaret Cameron, "fair as a flower" had looked, longed and loved. Ben Cameron had never met Elsie Stoneman, yet the daguerreotype of her, which he had pilfered from her brother Phil, seemed to him about the dearest and sweetest thing in all the world.

Most charming and lovable of all the Cameron clan was the Doctor and Mrs. Cameron's youngest daughter, Flora, which is played by the famous Mae Marsh. There were two younger boys of the two houses not old enough for affairs of the heart, who form part of the historic picture. When the war casts its shadow over the land, Phil and Tod Stoneman are summoned to fight for the Stars and Stripes; Ben Cameron and his two younger brothers for the Stars and Bars. The grim war drags along.

Give Up Lives.

In the meantime two of the Cameron boys have given up their lives for their country's cause, one of them face to face with his dying chum, Tod Stoneman. Sherman has made his famous march from Atlanta to the sea. Grant is pressing the Confederacy in his famous campaign around Petersburg. When Confederate supplies are running low, one of their provision trains is cut off and the "Little Colonel," Ben Cameron, is called upon by General Lee to lead a counter attack, and thus by diverting the enemy aid in the rescue of the train.

Then comes the panorama of a battle field flung over many miles of mountain and valley, the opposing entrenchments and the artillery fire, Colonel Cameron and his men forming for the advance, their charge over broken ground, the grim harvest of death that swept most of them away, the bayonet rush of the devoted few right up to the trenches, with the physical hand grapple with the enemy and Cameron, the "Little Colonel," the sole survivor, gaining the crest of the Federal works and falling wounded into the arms of Captain Phil Stoneman of the Northern forces, his erstwhile bosom friend. Space will not permit an extended detailed description of the great pageantry, but there are compressed, as it were, into three hours' entertainment a most vivid, living history of passing events from 1861 to 1865 and for some years after incident to the period of reconstruction.

Romances End Happily.

The two romances between the Southern boy and the Northern girl and the Northern boy and the Southern girl of course turn out happily. The surrender of General Lee to General Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth at Ford's theater in Washington are among the many historic scenes which are splendidly set forth and so handsomely presented that on viewing them seems like real life. Austin Stoneman is a leader in Congress and a power at Washington. He believes in social equality between the races. He goes South after President Lincoln's death to assist in installing a colored Republican lieutenant governor in South Caroline with the presumable hope of establishing an empire governed by the blacks in which the latter were ecouraged by the treachery of many carpetbaggers—men from the North hunting and securing office.

Greensboro Daily News Nov 1-1915

Police Quell Crowd Eager to Witness "Birth of a Nation."

So tremendous was the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" during its engagement at the Academy of Music, Richmond, last week, that a special matinee was played on Saturday morning to accommodate the overflow. From the normal capacity of the theater early in the week the crowds kept swelling as the engagement progressed until, at the Thursday night and Friday performances, it became necessary to station six policemen in the lobby to quell the confusion and prevent the crowd from storming the entrances and taking possession of the theater. No such scenes had ever been witnessed in a Richmond theater.

In announcing the special Saturday morning matinee, Douglas Gordon, the distinguished Times-Dispatch critic, had this to say in his column last Friday morning:

"Nothing is needed now to attract people to 'The Birth of a Nation;' the only difficulty is to keep them from 'rushing' the theater. In order to prevent this—and, incidentally, to make a few more millions of dollars—the management has arranged to give a special performance on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, in addition to the regular matinee at 2.30.

"To save, if possible, the manager and treasurer of the house from going screaming crazy, this column certifies that the house is literally sold out for today's matinee and the regular matinee tomorrow. The last time this column saw the ticket-rack, there appeared to be a few seats—but very few—left for tonight, and a number for the 10 o'clock performance on Saturday morning. That, however, was before 9 o'clock last night; they may have sold seats on the chandelier by the time this is printed."

The company which played to this phenomenal business in Richmond is the same one that will begin a three days' engagement at the Grand opera house, Greensboro, a week from tonight. Fearing a repetition of the Richmond congestion at the Tuesday and Wednesday performances, Manager Harrison urges all who can possibly do so, to obtain tickets for Monday night. The advance sale will open at the opera house box office Friday morning. No seats will be sold at the Fariss-Klutz drug store.

BIG SHOW HERE MONDAY

EXTENSIVE CHANGES IN STAGE AND AUDITORIUM OF MAJESTIC TO ACCOMMODATE THE "BIRTH OF A NATION."

With a score of electricians and mechanics preparing the playhouse for the reception of the massive "Birth of a Nation" production when the company arrives tonight, the Majestic Theatre will be about the busiest spot in Danville tomorrow. Extensive changes to the stage and auditorium are necessitated by the coming of the spectacle that has enthralled New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, and either effort nor expense is being spared by the local management to provide the company with proper facilities.

In the first place a large block of seats must be removed from the rear of the orchestra floor where a booth housing two large projecting machines and other electrical paraphernalia is to be installed. An optical expert sent in advance of the company measured to the fraction of an inch the distance necessary for proper focal adjustment in a theatre of the dimensions of the Majestic, and the regular stage employes were at work all last week carrying out his orders.

Twenty men are employed "back stage" in working the effect not counting a squad of "supers" who do nothing but shout at the command of the stage director. And these commands, be it understood are not spoken. Colored incandescents are scattered over the dozens of separate "props" and each is controlled from a switch not unlike the keyboard of a piano, which the director operates. The glimmer of a red light on a piece of equipment means to the trained handler that it is to be used for a certain effect, while an instant later, at the sign of a blue light, the same "prop" is to be used for an entirely different effect. The stage staff is kept at high tension throughout the two hours and forty minutes of the spectacle which they never see.

Thirty men in the orchestra, twenty of whom are carried by the company, will also require more room in the musician's pit than is needed for the average attraction. The pit has been stripped of all its superfluous furnishings and it may yet be necessary to place one of the harpists in a lower box, as has been done in other cities.

While the extent of the preparations necessary for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in a theatre gives one a fair idea of the massiveness of the production, it is only after one has witnessed the that he can appreciate its and realism. It is the most ous undertaking ever visio realized by a human being w realm of dramatic art. Some its vastness are given herew

The play contains 5,000 presents 18,000 actors a horses; cost $500,000 for p duction expense, and too months to produce. The st vided into two acts and the of performance is two hours minutes.

Some of the greatest battle Civil war are re-enacted. A it was in 1864 is built up t stroyed by fire, in the picture

THE BATTLT OF THE CRATER.

One of the most thrilling scenes in D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which gins a three days' engagement at the Majestic Theatre tomorrow night.

Wheeling Sunday News Oct 31

D. W. GRIFFITH

Author and producer of "The Birth of a Nation," Court theatre all this week.

Wheeling Sunday News Oct 31

MISS MAE MARSH

Who impersonates the South Carolina girl in "The Birth tion," Court theatre, one week, beginning Monday evenin ings daily, commencing Tuesday.

Wheeling Sunday News Oct 31

A scene from "The Birth of a Nation," Court Theatre all this week. Daily Matinees, beginning Tuesday.

Wheeling Register Oct 31

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," Opening a Week's Engagement at the Court Theatre, Tomorrow Night, Matinees Daily, Begining Tuesday.

The Wheeling Register Oct 31

"The Birth Of a Nation" At Court Theatre Entire Week

The poetic imagination of David W. Griffith, author and producer of the famous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins an engagement at the Court theatre tomorrow evening with matinees every day, commencing on Tuesday stretches across dreamy dales, through swaying trees, back to distant mountains with their snow crested tops blazing in the sunlight, it reaches across the lapping waves of the deep blue sea to what may seem the end of the universe, and then in a flash there is seen great plains and on them nations grappling in their death throes and worlds battling for military supremacy. Such sequences and multiplicities of action appear quite simuple now, yet they had to be carefully thought out. America should be proud that one of its sons who invented the technique required to produce them.

Mr. Griffith's aim is to produce natural acting. In less than six years Mr. Griffith has worked a complete revolution on the subject of acting in the open and all of his creations have become formidable rivals of the stage upon which walk men and women in real flesh and blood. These developments are but the details of the forward movement of the art of motion. The old stilted forms have passed. Mr. Griffith has the poetic imagination and the technique to give expression to his dreams. With these requisites he ins capable of producing the superartist of the new movement.

This is Griffith whose vision leaps to the furthest ends of the world of fancy. "The Birth of a Nation" is a chronical of human passion. It is true to fact, based upon historical accuracy. It is a representation of a former time. All of its phases are over and done, and most of the people of its time have passed beyond. It is a brilliant, vivid, thrilling masterpiece of historical fiction. Thwarting its prosperity, would, in the opinion of millions who have seen it, be a crime against creative art and a menace to its freedom. Wherever it is seen it is accompanied by an almost incessant murmur of approval and comment, roars of laughter, gasps of anxiety and outbursts of applause. It is certainly not a silent drama so far as audiences are concerned.

The scenes change with the velocity of lighting, yes of thought. For one moment there is seen a vast battlefield with the enemies like midgets in the big world, the next is shown probably some small group filling the whole space with its personal drama; then just one or two faces big with emotion, but always a story is being told with every device of suspense, preparation, relief development and crisis. One cannot imagine a human emotion that is not included somewhere in this story from the biggest national psychology to the smallest whom of a petulent girl; from the lowest depths of ruthless villiany to the upmost grandeur of patrotic ideal.

There are two love romances permeating the story, a Southern boy and a Southern girl,—brother and sister, a Northern girl and a Northern boy,—sister and brother. Notwithstanding the intense hate between the people of the North and South the romances of the four lovers run current with nature. The political feature of the play is not without its tragedy and comedy.

Upon the great event of the Civil war hinges the real story of the production. Some of the events which fairly shook the foundation of the republic are graphically portrayed, particularly that of the assassination of the martyred president, Abraham Lincoln.

The surrender of General Lee to General Grant at Appomattox, the attempt of one of the leaders in the lower house of congress to set up social equality between the whites and blacks of the South, and to establish there a black republic.

"The Birth of a Nation" presents many lovable character of the black race who win hearty applause from the audiences. It presents also some exceedingly hateful ones. But American history has the same fault and there are bad whites as well as good, who are represented in the production. The misbehavior of the blacks during reconstruction days was brought about by scheming white men from the North, who sought office at the expense of the colored man, the latter receiving nothing in return. The colored man of today could not be so influenced, fully realizing the people of the South are his friends. The tensity of the realism in "The Birth of a Nation" has never been equaled. Upon seeing the production it is like witnessing an event in real life so pronounced is the reality.

Wheeling Register Oct 31

D. W. G RIFFITH,
Author and Producer of "The Birth of a ..ation," Court Theatre, One Week Beginning Monday evening, Matinee D aily, commencing Tuesday.

San Antonio Light Oct 31

HENRY WALTHALL IS HERO OF STORY

Is leading player in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand this week.

Oct 30 Danville — San Antonio Light Oct 31 — 297

EAT SHOW NEXT WEEK

IRTH OF A NATION" THREE DAYS AT THE MAJESTIC NEXT WEEK—FIFTY FLESH AND BLOOD PEOPLE IN HISTORICAL SPECTACLE.

Strong local interest is being shown the engagement of D. W. Griffith's storical spectacle, "The Birth of a ation," at the Majestic theatre next onday, Tuesday and Wednesday d it is expected that the business the attraction in Danville will com- favorably with that in Richmond not seen it. It is a gigantic combination of music, motion pictures and marvelous stage effects, presented by fifty flesh-and-blood people. The company which comes to the Majestic carries twenty musicians and ten of Danville's best artists will be added, giving a fine symphony orchestra of thirty for the local engagement. The company also carries a carload of stage settings and electrical equipment.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and cov-

THE CHARGE.

A thrilling battle scene from "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle which begins a three days' engagement at the Majestic Theatre Monday night.

k week, where the company has ayed to absolute capacity at the adamy of Music. Matinees are to given Tuesday and Wednesday th seats for all performances are w selling at Booth's drug store.

The management urges that pa- ons obtain tickets for the Monday nd Tuesday performances be- n other cities where the spec- le has been shown hundreds have rned away at the final per- nces, unable to secure even ding room.

"Birth of a Nation" is not a mere ving show," as it is sometimes acterized by persons who have ering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the Siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh Radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

GREAT GRIFFITH SPECTACLE SETS NEW FILM MARK

"Birth of a Nation" Has No Rival in Splendor of Production.

SHOW HERE ONE WEEK

In Long Simultaneous Runs It Has Broken Box Office Records.

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne or emperor. Occasionally, however, old art-ideals sway and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the sceptre and "remakes the world." This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Grand Opera House all week, with daily matinee, starting Tuesday. The production has struck Texas like a gulf hurricane. In Dallas and Houston it played to capacity houses and turned hundreds away at the final performances, breaking all existing theatrical records.

Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: A new kind of grand opera motion picture plus music mechanical effects that bid fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

Dwarfed Other Productions.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation" as no other filmed play—not even "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis"—had been put on. He used half a great state for his locale, 150 years of American history as his subject, 18,000 people as his actors, 3000 riders and steeds as his cavalry, 5000 scenes instead of few score or a few hundred. His work dwarfed the old-fashioned stage art to such pettiness that many are wondering whether the so-called "indoor" drama is not doomed to long and possibly total eclipse.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism, culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of civil war and reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts vastly greater thrills. New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles crowded for many months the theaters where it was being simultaneously played.

For the first time in theatrical history a motion spectacle is being presented as a regular attraction at regular prices, in regular first-class playhouses. The success speaks for itself. The Griffith drama will come here with a baggage equipment of two 60-foot cars, a complete staff including mechanical experts and stage crew, and a large symphonic orchestra regularly carried on tour—a company of 50 people altogether.

Long Simultaneous Runs.

Facts about "The Birth of a Nation" speak louder in its praise than any words can do. After a "try-out" in Los Angeles, which developed into a phenomenal run of seventeen weeks, the premier performance in the East occurred March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theater, New York. Then came productions at the Tremont Theater, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theater, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, New York, July 3, and Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregated a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

The play contains 5000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 3000 horses, cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. The story is divided into two acts. The total time of the performance is 2 hours and 45 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil war are re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, is shown, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant are pictured at Appomattox. Ford's Theatre, Washington, is reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. The reconstruction period is pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

The Women's dresses used 12,000 yards of cloth and the Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards.

The night photograph battle scenes was invented and perfected at a cost of $5000.

Wonderful artillery duels are pictured in which real shells—costing $80 a piece were used. Miles of trenches and thousands of Confederate and federal fighters reproduce "war as it actually is."

LILLIAN GISH IN BIG SPECTACLE

Popular actress is seen to good adva ntage in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand this week.

Carries Complete Orchestra.

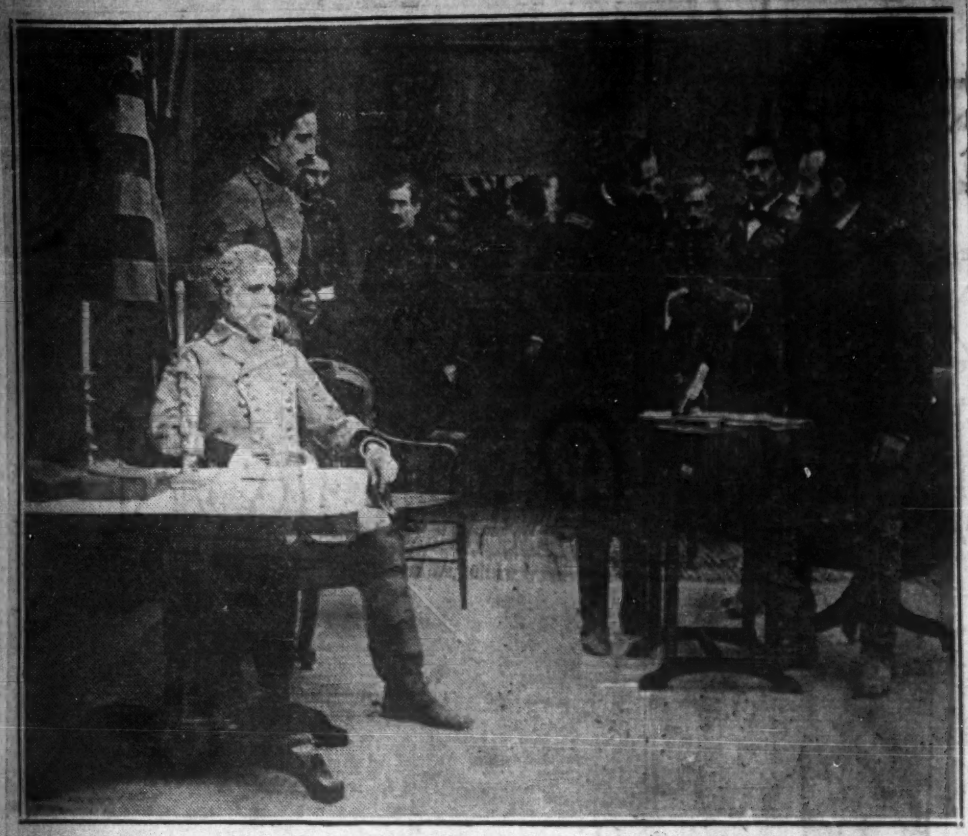
Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphony orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors in the United States and by scores of the most eminent United States senators and representatives, governors of states, judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatrical entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto persented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combined exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as the result of war between the states and reconstruction.

Famous Men, Generals and Statesmen Live Again; As Does Ford Theater Tragedy—In Griffith's Spectacle



LEE AND GRANT AT APPOMATTOX, A SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

A PLAY within a play is a bit of dramatic construction which has often been utilized by dramatists since the play became an institution. Perhaps the earliest and most prominent utilization of this constructive detail as far as the English-speaking stage is concerned is the player scene in "Hamlet" which Shakespeare uses as an effective part of the earlier development of his tragic plot.

Nothing of this sort has ever been revealed upon so pretentious a plan as is shown in David W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which is being so widely discussed at present. Griffith's scene is the reproduction in historic and dramatic detail of Ford's Theater, Washington, D. C., on the night of April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by John Wilkes Booth before the eyes of a gala audience gathered on that occasion to celebrate the close of the Civil War.

This scene is one of the tense dramatic moments in a story that is astonishing for its thrilling action. The drama is a complete story within itself and yet is a vital part of the entire story, which is covered in the larger plan of the spectacle. From a technical viewpoint it is one of the most interesting achievements in the annals of the American stage.

In the language of motion picture production it is known as a studio scene. This means that it was built indoors and had to be specially constructed to get the desired dramatic effect. It is the largest interior set ever built for a motion picture story. The scene is in minute detail an exact reproduction of Ford's Theater as it appeared upon this historic occasion. Numerous authentic works upon the subject were studied to get the exact measurements and dimensions of the old theater. In this research the fundamentals were furnished by Nicolay and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln, a History." It will be recalled that the writers served as secretaries to President Lincoln and were in close touch with the stirring events of that period. A detail showing the thoroughness of the work is the picture of Booth's leap from the presidential box after he had fired the fatal shot. The distance covered in this leap was twelve feet. The actor playing Booth had to be carefully rehearsed in this scene and to get in the important detail of his spur catching in the flag that draped the box. This accounts for the fall which resulted in Booth fracturing his leg. The leap takes just one second in the picture, but it had to be rehearsed time and time again, and Raoul Walsh, who played Booth before the real picture, was caught just as Booth made the jump to the stage and rushed out of the theater, by way of the stage door. Walsh wore out three pairs of trousers at the knees before the right picture was caught. This will give one an idea of the difficulties of the leaps he made.

This entire scene of Ford's Theater was the most difficult of all to take except the big battle scenes immediately preceding it. These being in the open, the camera men were not hampered by demands of accuracy to the minute extent that they were in taking this important interior. Mr. Griffith was fortunate in being able to secure the aid of several eye-witnesses of the actual events who were present with him when the picture was taken. Chief among these was Dr. Chapman, the noted prohibitionist and lecturer, who lent material assistance in supplying important facts. As stated, the night was a gala one to celebrate peace. Everybody of note was on hand and the women were dressed in the height of fashion. The men in the audience included famous generals and statesmen who had just written their names into history. The play was "Our American Cousin," with Laura Keene playing her farewell engagement in Washington. Old prints, prompt books of the play and surviving actors of the cast supplied the facts regarding the appearance of the stage settings and the players on that night. Other eye-witnesses told how the orchestra was arranged and the general appearance of the audience was further described by these attendants in addition to the written data on the subject.

When it came time to take the picture many in the audience remarked upon the wonderfully realistic effect. They said the actress simulated Mrs. Lincoln's dress and appearance so wonderfully that she seemed to be living over again the scenes of that night. Joseph Henabery, who portrayed President Lincoln, was selected from twenty different players who were coached and prepared for the part before he was voted the one. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his cloak just a few minutes before Booth attacked him. It was spring day in Washington, but a late frost set in that evening and it turned quite raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill of it or else some mysterious force communicated the chill of the impending tragedy to him just a moment before the end came. As these scenes were being enacted and photographed the players who participated in the scene said that in all their long experience with making pictures nothing so impressive had ever been noted. Everybody in the scene apparently caught the deep tragedy of the situation and were depressed by the solemnity of it.

The entire scene was laid out upon a carefully arranged ground plan down to a copy of the decorations of the house. This explains the clean-cut manner in which it is all reproduced. The scene also fixes the time accurately and contradicts the general impression that the fatal shot was fired from the stage. As near as could be judged after weighing the consensus of opinions, Booth entered the front of the theater a minute or two before 10 o'clock that night. He had the entree to the house and most everybody knew him. It was figured out that it took him about thirteen minutes to move about and work his way down to the rear of the presidential box without arousing suspicion. It was in this way that the time of the shot was set at 10:13. The detail showing the adjoining box being only partly filled is explained by history. This box was to have been occupied by General and Mrs. Grant but the latter prevailed upon the famous general to leave Washington that day.

Danville Bee Nov 1

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

EXTENSIVE CHANGES MADE TO STAGE FOR INSTALLATION OF EQUIPMENT FOR THIS GIGANTIC SPECTACLE.

After a night of steady toil on the part of a score of electricians and stage mechanics, the Majestic Theatre is in readiness for the first presentation tonight of D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." This vast assortment of "p requiring the services of twenty during the performance, is used taining the battle and other rea effects which have helped to "The Birth of a Nation" the most ed about theatrical offering in world.

While the mechanics are finis their work today, the twenty clans carried by the company, to er with ten of Danville's best ar will be rehearsing the long and cult score which is played wit pause during the two hours and ty minutes of the spectacle.

HENRY WALTHALL, as "The Little Colonel," in "The Birth of tion," the great historical spectacle which begins a three days' gagement at the Majestic Theatre tonight.

tion." The finishing touches are being applied today, and when the audience enters they will see little evidence of the long hours of preparation. Except for the removal of a large block of seats in the rear of the orchestra oor to provide space for the large asbestos booth carried by the company, the work was confined to the stage, where extensive changes were necessary for the instalation of the two carloads of special equipsplendid symponic organizatio thirty pieces will be one of the that local music lovers have heard.

Tonight's performance will at 8:15 and the sale of seats i that there will be a capacity ence. The spectacle will rema three days, with matinees T and Wednesday. Seats for all mances are on sale at Booth store.

San Antonio, Ex. Nov.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

"The Birth of a Nation" Opens Today.

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with evening's performance, opens an engagement of seven days at the Grand Opera House tonight. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just fifty years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theater live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpetbagging regime, is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel" Ben Cameron with the Northerner Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South, are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5,000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details. On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes. Somehow the old war-time tunes thus thermatically treated make the "counterfeit presentments" of long ago seem irresistibly real.

Pittsburgh Press Nov 1

Opens Final Month.

Today at the Miles theater "The Birth of a Nation" commences its farewell four weeks in this city. When the phenomenally successful engagement of this Griffith spectacle ends its thirteenth and last week here, Saturday, Nov. 27, it will have played 122 consecutive performances in Pittsburg, a record that exceeds any previous local run by 111 times. Not only does this pictorial drama represent the greatest achievement in photodrama production, but its projection, the clarity with which it is reproduced on the screen, typifies the highest point of perfection so far attined by the most skilled operators of motion picture machines.

Daily Advance Nov 1

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Seat Sale for for Griffith Spectacle Opens With Rush.

Memories of the palmy days of the theatre, when box office was seldom without a line of waiting patrons and the "S. R. O." sign was never allowed to accumulate dust, were stirred by scenes of activity at the Academy of Music this morning, when the seat sale for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" next Thursday, Friday and Saturday opened with an unprecedented rush.

Playgoers of high and low degree took their places in the line as the sale continued through the day, making deep inroads into the tickets for the five performances to be given by the company this week. The term company is used advisedly because the services of fifty people are employed in each presentation. There are twenty musicians in the traveling organization, and these, with ten local musicians, will make up the orchestra of thirty pieces to be heard at each performance at the Academy.

A new standard of stage realism has been set by D. W. Griffith in his spectacle of the Reconstruction, "The Birth of a Nation." Instead of a small company of actors, he employed a cast of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. He staged a private war of gigantic proportions and built a whole city, only to destroy it afterward by way of representation of the burning of Atlanta.

San Antonio Light Nov 1

"Birth of a Nation" Opens.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," begins its engagement at the Grand Opera House tonight. There will be two performances daily, at 8:15 and 2:30 p. m., all week. Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon local screens. It is to be given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City, where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the metropolis. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Philadelphia and Pittsburg. It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from inception to abolition. Where directors of vast spectacles have dealt with hundreds, Griffith employs thousands. Eighteen thousand people fill his stage, which has a vast territory for its background. Three thousand horses pass before one's view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and one sees these conflicts fought just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed, to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battle field is shown stretching over an area of ten square miles. Upon these plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if one were an eye-witness.

Customs Exhibitors Dec 21

Historic Figures Pass in "The Birth of a Nation"

Greensboro Daily News Nov 1

Police Quell Crowd Eager to Witness "Birth of a Nation."

So tremendous was the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" during its engagement at the Academy of Music, Richmond, last week, that a special matinee was played on Saturday morning to accommodate the overflow. From the normal capacity of the theater early in the week the crowds kept swelling as the engagement progressed until, at the Thursday night and Friday performances, it became necessary to station six policemen in the lobby to quell the confusion and prevent the crowd from storming the entrances and taking possession of the theater. No such scenes had ever been witnessed in a Richmond theater.

In announcing the special Saturday morning matinee, Douglas Gordon, the distinguished Times-Dispatch critic, had this to say in his column last Friday morning:

"Nothing is needed now to attract people to 'The Birth of a Nation;' the only difficulty is to keep them from 'rushing' the theater. In order to prevent this—and, incidentally, to make a few more millions of dollars—the management has arranged to give a special performance on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, in addition to the regular matinee at 2.30.

"To save, if possible, the manager and treasurer of the house from going screaming crazy, this column certifies that the house is literally sold out for today's matinee and the regular matinee tomorrow. The last time this column saw the ticket-rack, there appeared to be a few seats—but very few—left for tonight, and a number for the 10 o'clock performance on Saturday morning. That, however, was before 9 o'clock last night; they may have sold seats on the chandelier by the time this is printed."

The company which played to this phenomenal business in Richmond is the same one that will begin a three days' engagement at the Grand opera house, Greensboro, a week from tonight. Fearing a repetition of the Richmond congestion at the Tuesday and Wednesday performances, Manager Harrison urges all who can possibly do so, to obtain tickets for Monday night. The advance sale will open at the opera house box office Friday morning. No seats will be sold at the Fariss-Klutz drug store.

Ev. Telegram Nov 2

"The Birth of a Nation" is now in its final four weeks at the Liberty Theatre.

Kansas City Journal Nov 1

Grand—"The Birth of a Nation."

From the standpoint of the American, at least, "The Birth of a Nation," opening its second week at the Grand, is the greatest picture ever filmed and for the restless creators in search of "the greatest" of all dramatic productions, regardless of race, it comes triumphantly near to the ideal. While shrieking through the turbulent scenes of blood righteously and unrighteously spilled, goes the clarion call of warrior and grim-mouthed clansman, yet a more fervent prayer for peace would be impossible. The mute upturned face of the well loved son lying on the battlefield between the Union and Confederate lines, the crouching women of Piedmont terrorized by riot, the grief of pauperized mothers and orphaned children, all give the lie to the peerless glory of victory by steel and might.

A city was built and burned that the dramatic world might have this picture. The sorest wound in the breast of America, scarce healed as yet, was laid bare that the world might know why war is not a thing to be madly dashed into by the second generation of her warriors' sons, but a duty to honor to be met with honor at all times. The romance of sons and daughters of the North and South and the tragic baptism of shame and blood out of which their love rose a better thing, follow closely the story of Dixon's "The Clansman" although Dixon dared to put many things into printed words that D. W. Griffith dared not incorporate into his picture. As it is, he went far enough, especially in the case of the death of the little Cameron sister, who leaped from a cliff to escape a negro, to prick to consciousness the only half forgotten pain of America's darkest hour.

Lincoln, the "Great Heart," his pity of all, his great sorrow over the sacrifice, his protection of the South, is tenderly told. The marvelous reproduction of the Ford theater and Lincoln's death is poignant in its authenticity. The battle scenes are in themselves perfect, leading up in a way to the tremendous thundering rise of the best blood of the South in defense of its womanhood. As the call goes out for the assembling of the Ku Klux Klan and it sweeps into the terrorized town of Piedmont on the errand of salvation, American blood must be of the temperature of icicles to resist the thrill of it. As a drama, as history and as an appeal to the best instincts of the patriot, "The Birth of a Nation" fills its destiny to the letter.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Nov

Miles—"The Birth of a Nation."

It is announced that this spectacular motion picture exhibit will close its long Pittsburgh engagement November 27th, after an unprecedented run and having played to many thousands of people. It is assumed that the remaining four weeks of the engagement will give Pittsburghers their last chance to see the dramatic story of the Civil War and the Reconstruction period in the South as presented by the Griffith films. It is the usual custom followed by all film producers after exhausting a higher priced field to drop down to a lower price and move to less expensive environment. It is declared positively by the Griffith people that this will not be done in the case of "The Birth of a Nation."

Daily Advance Nov

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Academy of Music Gets Complete Production of Spectacle.

There has been some speculation as to whether "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown here with the full musical accompaniment and realistic stage effects used in New York, where many Lynchburgers witnessed the big screen production. It is asserted the Griffith production will lack nothing in its local presentation of the vastness, realism and splendid artistry which made it a New York sensation. The company carries an orchestra of twenty. Ten local musicians will be added, making up a symphony organization of thirty.

For the battle and other realistic effects a carload of special equipment is carried. This equipment is an exact duplicate of that in use at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and the effects are directed by a stage manager who was in training three weeks at the Forty-second Street playhouse. Twenty men are employed in attaining the effects, making a total of fifty people engaged in each presentation of the spectacle.

The local engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" begins at the Academy next Thursday night and will continue for three days. Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday.

Wheeling Register Nov 1/15

BIRTH OF NATION THRILLS AT COURT

Most Wonderful Picture Yet Produced Will Be Repeated Twice Daily Throughout the Week.

It would be difficult to find words to do justice to "The Birth of a Nation," the masterpiece of motion photography which was given the first of eleven performances in this city at the Court theatre to a large audience last evening. The picture, as is well known, is based upon Thomas Dixon's much discussed novel "The Clansman." While it is a connected story, containing two romances of the North and the South the big scenes are historical episodes dealing with the Civil war and the period of reconstruction which followed the close of that conflict.

D. W. Griffith, under whose direction "The Birth of a Nation" was produced, is conceded to have achieved the biggest thing in the history of moving pictures. Rupert Hughes has well said of it that it "makes the most spectacular production of drama look like the work of village amateurs," and that it "reduces to childishness the biggest things the theatre can do." There are hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors, and pictures ranging from miniatures to realistic battle scenes.

The story is interesting from the outset, when it shows the arrival of the first cargo of slaves from Africa. In succeeding scenes the Stoneman family of Pennsylvania, and the Cameron family of South Carolina are introduced and the foundation of the romances which are to culminate in a double wedding are laid. The beginning of the war brings separations. There are a number of battle scenes which are truly wonderful, and there is a faithful scene of the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox.

President Lincoln is introduced in several scenes—signing a call for volunteers, yielding to a woman's tears, resisting a demand for drastic treatment of the South after the war ends and the thrilling assassination scene in Ford's theatre. All this occurs in the first part, but it is the second part of the picture which grips the audience and causes spontaneous outbursts of cheering, such as are seldom duplicated when the spoken drama is witnessed.

The second part deals with the reconstruction period. It shows the effects of negro domination, of manipulation of the negro vote by carpetbaggers of the organization of the Ku Klux Klan, and its methods of dealing with arrogant and insolent negroes. The audience was held literally spellbound by some of the scenes, only to give way to cheers over a satisfying climax. When the double honeymoon virtually closes the story the tension is relieved, and it is doubtful if any person who saw the picture last night believed that he had been sitting in his seat for more than an hour an a half, whereas it requires fully three hours for the production, with a single short intermission.

While the picture itself is wonderful it is made more effective by the music which accompanies it, and which has been especially arranged for this purpose. Some of it is adapted from operas and popular compositions, much of it has been composed for the "The Birth of a Nation," and frequent use is made of stirring national airs. The orchestra is augmented, and in addition to its music other sound effects are produced from the stage.

The principal parts are exceptionally well played. Henry Walthall does splendid work as " the little colonel," and Mae Marsh as his pet sister is charming and wonderfully expressive, while the beautiful Miriam Cooper is excellent as the elder sister. Josephine Crowell is a matronly Mrs. Cameron. Ralph Lewis does fine acting as the congressional leader who encourages the southern blacks, and George Seigmann is strong in the very uninviting role of the mulatto leader. Lillian Gish is pretty, ingenuous and capable as Elsie. Others in the cast meriting mention are J. A. Beringer, Maxfield Stanley, Jennie Lee, Elmer Clifton, Mary Alden, Walter Long, Joseph Henaberry as Lincoln—in fact the company appears to have been chosen with painstaking care.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be repeated every afternoon and evening this week at the Court.

Pittsburgh Press Nov

MILES.

An unprecedented run of nine weeks, with four more to come, was the record of "The Birth of the Nation" when it opened the week at the Miles yesterday, and large audiences continue to be drawn to the wonderful Griffith spectacle. The film story follows the Southern life from ante-bellum days through the struggle of '61-'65, to the dark period of reconstruction, and in addition depicts the progress made by the negro race in late years. Thrills abound, especially in the battle scenes and at the gathering of the Clansmen.

Wheeling Daily News Nov

BIRTH OF NATION GREAT PICTURE

WONDERFUL PRODUCTION OPENED FOR WEEK'S STAND AT THE COURT LAST NIGHT.

ONE OF MOST POWERFUL AND THRILLING PLAYS IN HISTORY OF FILMDOM.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's master production, opened a week's stand at the Court theatre last evening and those attending were delighted to find that the picture was even greater than they had been led to believe by advance reports. The picture is historical, thus educational, powerful, thrilling, and in a sense awesome by the gigantic proportions and tremendous reality evident from start to finish.

Two romances are contanied in the picture, which aid materially in making it by far the most interesting picture ever shown in the city. At the beginning of the picture the landing of slaves from Africa is shown and then developments which led to the Civil war, several battle scenes and finally Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox. President Lincoln is shown in several scenes.

The second part of the play shows the constructive period, the effects of negro domination, but everything turns out satisfactorily, and at the end there are two honeymoons, with four very happy people who have at last found their reward in wedded bliss after a long series of complications, embracing some great difficulties.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown all this week, afternoon and evening, at the Court theatre.

Wheeling Intelligencer Nov

MISS LILLIAN GISH,

Daughter of "Addison Stoneman," leader in House of Representatives at Washington, in love with the Southern Colonel, Ben Cameron, as shown in "Birth of a Nation" at Court Theatre, tonight and all this week.

Wheeling Intelligencer Nov

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" COMES AND CONQUERS

The possibilities of the silent drama, possibilities, indeed, almost inconceivable, are shown in "The Birth of a Nation," the greatest of productions of filmland about which the whole country has been agog since its first production in New York.

"The Birth of a Nation" came to Wheeling yesterday and it conquered at the Court Theatre last night. Those who witnessed its initial presentation here are speaking only in superlatives today, presaging a packed house at each production during the remainder of the week.

Throughout "The Birth of a Nation" there are tense, exciting moments that make the blood tingle. Thrill follows on thrill. Nothing has ever been presented in Wheeling like those stirring scenes when the negro was in the ascendency in the south following the civil war and during the regime of the carpetbagger. The pent up emotions of the big audience in the Court Theatre broke forth into cheers when the Ku Klux Klan came out of the night, ahorse and thousands strong to swoop down on that black horde and end for all time the terrible conditions that followed the assassination of the great Lincoln.

The production is founded on "The Clansman" of Thomas Dixon. It is especially timely now while the slaughter in Europe is taking place.

A symphony orchestra plays as the pictures progress. The music is one of the big features of the production. The clarion call of the Ku Klux Klan thrills each time it is sounded. The music is descriptive, synchronized with the pictures and making them more effective.

BIRTH OF NATION IS WONDERFUL

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE AT COURT THRILLED LARGE AUDIENCE LAST EVENING.

Story is of South Following War and Is Remarkable—Repeated Twice Daily This Week.

He is utterly cold and without a heart who could sit unaffected through the showing of D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," at the Court Theatre now showing, and in the large audience gathered to witness the famous picture's initial appearance in Wheeling last night there were very few if any who exhibited such coldness; but that audience, as one, was carried from the depths of pathos and despair, through laughter, to the wild joy and completed happiness of a great story.

This motion picture, which will be shown at the Court all this week, is in the united opinion of all critics the masterpiece of the film world—the greatest spectacle of the day. It is an ambitious attempt on the part of Mr. Griffith to portray that crisis in our history, the Civil war and the period of the reconstruction of the south. Throughout the picture is replete with thrills. Battle and mob scenes in which thousands act make the heart pound with excitement; touches of humor, here and there, cause unaffected laughter; and the pathos and sadness of war bring moisture to the eyes.

Opens on Plantation.

The story opens in the Piedmont of the South at the plantation of the Camerons. The happy life prior to the great war is pleasingly shown. The Cameron boys, three in number, live a carefree life in the home of their generous father. Two boys of the North are their chums, one being Phil Stoneman, son of Hon. Austin Stoneman, leader of the House. Two Cameron girls are loyal daughters of the South and Elsie Stoneman is just as loyal a daughter of the North. The love story of the film centers about the eldest Cameron boy and Elsie; and about Phil Stoneman and the oldest Cameron daughter.

War comes to spoil the happy life of these principals. The boys are off to war, and the two younger Cameron boys meet death on the field of battle. In this part of the picture the great Abraham Lincoln is effectively brought before the audience. Several of his scenes bring the tears into the plays. The end of the war with the great battles before Richmond is shown on a stupendous scale. No one can see the hopeless charge of the beaten South without a feeling of awe. The surrender of Lee to Grant makes another great feature of the play, and the murder of Lincoln brings to the audience much of that same feeling of terror and sorrow that prevailed on the fateful night of April 14, 1865.

Reconstruction Period

The reconstruction of the South from chaos follows. The awful period of the carpetbaggers and the negro office-holder grips the audience. The famous Ku Klux Klan activities against the negro mob forms much of the great scenic part of the play. Excitement prevails and the hate of both sides is felt, especially when the younger Cameron daughter kills herself to escape a negro fiend.

In the ending of the story the KuKlux riders rescue the principals, even Austin Stonehous, whose radical doctrines brought chaos to the South, from the negro mobs. And in the love scenes of the final feet of the film comes the lesson of eternal peace

This picture will be shown all week at the Court with matinees each afternoon. A special orchestra and effects add greatly to the success of the production.

News Nov

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Spectacle Is Praised By Daughters of Confederacy.

Teachers, parents and club women of the South have been lavish in their praise of "The Birth of a Nation," the mighty spectacle which comes to the Academy of Music next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. When the spectacle was shown in Norfolk recently, Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke wrote the following letter to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch:

"The Birth of a Nation" is wonderful—Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a brand of knights sent to make things work out as it was deshed and none but these men could have accomplished it. There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for in resolutions adopted a short time before, the members of the John H. Reagan Chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus: "In endorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation' the John H. Reagan Chapter, U. D. C., feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to Northerners, and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union." The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1128 Logan street, Los Angeles, acting president of the John H. Reagan Chapter.

Seats for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" are now selling.

Los Angeles Express Nov

Two Extra Performances Sunday.

Manager Weis, realizing the Grand Opera House will not be able to accommodate the crowds to see "The Birth of a Nation," has arranged to have this wonderful attraction remain over Sunday and give two extra performances. The many who were unable to secure choice seats here may now be accommodated, as the seats for these two performances were placed on sale this morning.

Pittsburgh Post Nov

Intending patrons of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles Theater will note this photo spectacle closes November 27th.

Women's Wear Nov

Liberty; 42d St., west of Broadway. Tel. Bryant 27. Matinee daily.—"The Birth of a Nation," the greatest motion picture ever shown in America. Produced by David W. Griffith, the world's greatest motion picture director. No one should miss it.

News Nov 3

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Griffith Spectacle Begins Its Engagement at Academy Tomorrow Night.

Lynchburg playgoers will have their long-awaited opportunity to witness D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music tomorrow night. The company, including a symphony orchestra of thirty and a score of electricians and stage mechanics, will remain three days and will give matinee performances Friday and Saturday at 2:45. Seats are now selling at the box office for all performances.

The spectacle will be seen at the Academy exactly as it is being shown in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago and other large cities, where it has broken all records for length of runs. Its engagement is a distinct event for the reason that it has been seen in very few of the smaller cities up to this time. The company coming to the Academy is the only one on tour and most of its season is to be spent in long runs in Atlanta, New Orleans, and the principal cities of Texas.

In producing "The Birth of a Nation," Mr. Griffith has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of slavery, the War of Secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of reconstruction, and the restoration of the South to its own.

Mr. Griffith employed 18,000 people in taking these historical pictures. The battle scenes were actual duplicates of several of the Civil War conflicts and so were the facsimiles of important events. We see Lincoln among his counsellors issuing the call for volunteers, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the shot that John Wilkes Booth fired, the Freedmen's Bureau, the carpetbaggers' excesses, and the famous rides of the Ku Klux. The realism is almost uncanny. Often the old war shouts are heard in the audiences from the lips of veterans who momentarily forget that it is only in the play. It is hard to keep one's feet from dancing to the well-beloved tunes of the martial music. Scenes in the latter half of the pictures are so skilfully managed that often the applause is practically continuous for half to three-quarters of an hour.

Danville Register Nov 4

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS MARVELOUS SHOW

Portrayal of Southern History Before and After War Faithful Realty.

A PICTURE CLASSIC

Dwarfing all previous film exhibitions in Danville, and standing out, one might say as a moving picture classic, amazing in its faithful portrayal of Southern history before and after the war, "The Birth of a Nation" produced by D. W. Griffith and founded on "The Clansman" was presented at the Majestic Theatre last night. Among the hundreds of people in the crowded house were forty or more Confederate Veterans many of whom actually lived through some of the thrilling moments of the overawing picture, and perhaps, the highest tribute that could be paid to Mr. Griffith were the expressions of commendation of the production coming from them—it seemed real even after these many years.

The reality of the scenes enacted during the three hours that the great house watched the unfolding of his tory before their eyes is to no little extent heightened by sound producing musical contrivances and a large orchestra which played the time honored Southern airs during the entire performance. The picture is specially projected on a fire proof box on the floor while the screen is specially constructed so as to obtain the maximum of effect.

The historical drama is in two parts both lasting one hour and an half each and it embodies scenes of such intense interest and such degradation that the audience was swayed from the heights of patriotism to the deep silence of disapprobation and from that again to exultant cheers—and cheers that could come only from Southern throats. It opens with a delightfully intimate view of Southern life in the ante-bellum days when the men of the North mingled with the men of the South and when the negro revelled in the service of his master, satisfied and better cared for than in the days of Reconstruction. The Southern scenes are laid in Piedmont, South Carolina—the quaint town being faithfully reproduced on the Pacific Coast where the entire stupendous drama was enacted in eight months and by a cast the proportions of which up to that time had never been attempted.

One sees the Southland suddenly plunged into war after an abbreviated insight into political condition of the day and from that moment the action of the play hardly ever ceases working up, as it were in a gradual crescendo, which reaches its climax in the routing of the carpet baggers and the disarming of the black. The battle scenes are stupendous, the bombardment of Atlanta and the flight of the civilian populace, the guerilla raid on the peaceful town of Piedmont—leaving it scorched with the smoke of Incendiarism and the impress of terror on its inhabitants, the battle before Petersburg with the long lines of trenches and the swaying lines of blue and grey smothered at times with the drifting smoke of the artillery in action, are all spectacles never to be forgotten by those who saw them last night. The 'close-up'—Griffith's own invention are singularly impressive and show the actors of the cast undergoing real perils which lend something to the realism of the battles.

But the battles are not the only spectacles that impress—there is the agony of the South during the Reconstruction days—the bitter degradation during the short lived day of negro supremacy which began after the assassination of Lincoln. There were revolting sights portrayed on the scene not for the sake of sensationalism, but the true portrayal of conditions as they existed when the Southland was taking up the broken ends of industry and trying to reshape the destiny of the land. It was the day of the negro, the negro freed, insolent and anxious to show his equality with the white race. The audience wildly cheered each rebuke administered to the more obnoxious negroes and when the Ku Klux Klan deposited at the door of Silas Lynch the dead body of the renegade negro there went up a sound which showed the pent up feeling of the audience. The gathering of the clansmen is a remarkable sight. The masked and white frocked liberators fill the entire screen for there are hundreds of them and the clash with the rioting negroes and the deliverance of Piedmont from the mob comes as a wonderful climax of the action in the picture.

Several famous historical events are elaborately portrayed. There is President Lincoln signing the order for volunteers before the war, the surrender at Appomattox, and the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. A replica of the theatre was specially constructed for this scene which is dramatic in the extreme and carried out in most minutes detail. Booth after firing the fatal shot leaps from the Presidential box to the stage and facing the audience he cries 'Sic Semper Tyrannis" and hobbled away with his broken leg while turmoil reigns in the theatre.

The cast is perhaps one of the best ever brought together. There is an unfeigned naturalness about the acting which is peculiarly engaging—especially in the quiet and more home like scenes.

"The Birth of a Nation" is well worth seeing. It stamps indelibly on the mind the history of the Southland in a way which historians will never be able to do.

Danville Bee Nov 4/15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS MARVELOUS SHOW

Portrayal of Southern History Before and After War Faithful Realty.

A PICTURE CLASSIC

Dwarfing all previous film exhibitions in Danville, and standing out, one might say as a moving picture classic, amazing in its faithful portrayal of Southern history before and after the war, "The Birth of a Nation" produced by D. W. Griffith and founded on "The Clansman" was presented at the Majestic Theatre last night. Among the hundreds of people in the crowded house were forty or more Confederate Veterans many of whom actually lived through some of the thrilling moments of the overawing picture, and perhaps, the highest tribute that could be paid to Mr. Griffith were the expressions of commendation of the production coming from them—it seemed real even after these many years.

The reality of the scenes enacted during the three hours that the great house watched the unfolding of his tory before their eyes is to no little extent heightened by sound producing musical contrivances and a large orchestra which played the time honored Southern airs during the entire performance. The picture is specially projected on a fire proof box on the floor while the screen is specially constructed so as to obtain the maximum of effect.

The historical drama is in two parts both lasting one hour and an half each and it embodies scenes of such intense interest and such degradation that the audience was swayed from the heights of patriotism to the deep silence of disapprobation and from that again to exultant cheers—and cheers that could come only from Southern throats. It opens with a delightfully intimate view of Southern life in the ante-bellum days when the men of the North mingled with the men of the South and when the negro revelled in the service of his master, satisfied and better cared for than in the days of Reconstruction. The Southern scenes are laid in Piedmont, South Carolina—the quaint town being faithfully reproduced on the Pacific Coast where the entire stupendous drama was enacted in eight months and by a cast the proportions of which up to that time had never been attempted.

One sees the Southland suddenly plunged into war after an abbreviated insight into political condition of the day and from that moment the action of the play hardly ever ceases working up, as it were in a gradual crescendo, which reaches its climax in the routing of the carpet baggers and the disarming of the black. The battle scenes are stupendous, the bombardment of Atlanta and the flight of the civilian populace, the guerilla raid on the peaceful town of Piedmont—leaving it scorched with the smoke of incendiarism and the impress of terror on its inhabitants, the battle before Petersburg with the long lines of trenches and the swaying lines of blue and grey smothered at times with the drifting smoke of the artillery in action, are all spectacles never to be forgotten by those who saw them last night. The 'close-up'—Griffith's own invention are singularly impressive and show the actors of the cast undergoing real perils which lend something to the realism of the battles.

But the battles are not the only spectacles that impress—there is the agony of the South during the Reconstruction days—the bitter degradation during the short lived day of negro supremacy which began after the assassination of Lincoln. There were revolting sights portrayed on the scene not for the sake of sensationalism, but the true portrayal of conditions as they existed when the Southland was taking up the broken ends of industry and trying to reshape the destiny of the land. It was the day of the negro, the negro freed, insolent and anxious to show his equality with the white race. The audience wildly cheered each rebuke administered to the more obnoxious negroes and when the Ku Klux Klan deposited at the door of Silas Lynch the dead body of the renegade negro there went up a sound which showed the pent up feeling of the audience. The gathering of the clansmen is a remarkable sight. The masked and white frocked liberators fill the entire screen for there are hundreds of them and the clash with the rioting negroes and the deliverance of Piedmont from the mob comes as a wonderful climax of the action in the picture.

Several famous historical events are elaborately portrayed. There is President Lincoln signing the order for volunteers before the war, the surrender at Appomattox, and the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. A replica of the theatre was specially constructed for this scene which is dramatic in the extreme and carried out in most minutes detail. Booth after firing the fatal shot leaps from the Presidential box to the stage and facing the audience he cries 'Sic Semper Tyrannis" and hobbled away with his broken leg while turmoil reigns in the theatre.

The cast is perhaps one of the best ever brought together. There is an unfeigned naturalness about the acting which is peculiarly engaging—especially in the quiet and more home like scenes.

"The Birth of a Nation" is well worth seeing. It stamps indelibly on the mind the history of the Southland in a way which historians will never be able to do.

Daily Advance Nov 3

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Academy Management Urges Patrons Not to Wait.

Heralded by the praises of scores of Lynchburg people who witnessed the spectacle in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Atlantic City and other large cities, during the summer, as well as its record-smashing runs in other cities, "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Academy of Music tomorrow night to begin a three days' engagement. Daily matinees will be given Friday and Saturday, making five performances in all.

The big Griffith spectacle is expected to establish a new record at the Academy. The management is urging patrons to obtain seats for the early performances, because in other cities there has been much congestion and disappointment, due to the tendency of patrons to wait for the week-end performances. The matinees will be at 2:45 and the night performances at 8:15.

So entirely different is "The Birth of a Nation" from anything that the American stage has ever known that its producer, D. W. Griffith, has been hailed by critics as the creator of a new art. Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result; a new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

Daily Advance Nov 3

MAE MARSH, WHO IS BEAUTIFUL EVEN IN TEARS AS FLORA CAMERON, IN THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE ACADEMY THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY.

San Antonio Express Jan 2

PATRIOTISM STIRS AUDIENCE AT THE BIRTH OF A NATION

GREAT PHOTO-SPECTACLE RECREATES THE HEROIC DAYS OF THE SIXTIES.

LAST WORD IN FILM ART

The "Rebel yell" crashed through the Grand Opera House last evening; the Union cheer drowned out the rumble of big guns and the crackle of infantry fire. And the Blue and the Gray arose together as one man when the "Star Spangled Banner" sounded the call to the patriotism that unifies. San Antonio greeted "The Birth of a Nation" with an ovation.

There were tears flowing unashamed and the fiercely exultant yell of victory to dash those tears away. For three hours the past unrolled, stage after stage, incident after incident, and it was all so true, so natural, that they who went through the four years of strife forgot the present—memories lived again, faces smiled through the tears, the hands felt once more the clasps of loved ones—the bleeding, heroic South, the cruelty of the "reconstruction," the bravery of both Northerner and Southerner, became real and clothed with warmth.

It was a wonderful evening; wonderful in several senses. In all its sunshine and peace and plenty the old South of "before the war" was recreated. The beginning of romances that the dark days to follow welded into unbreakable bonds, tempered by the fires of anguish and renunciation, came upon the screen in a manner so true that the story held the audience breathless. And no greater, no more realistic tragedy has ever been enacted than the leap to death, the only course with honor, "little Sister" took as the escape from the pursuing black.

It was one of the supreme scenes in this miracle-production of the moving picture camera. The frenzied rush of the exquisite daughter of aristocracy from the pursuing degenerate, her slim figure hurling through space over the cliff, the birth of the Ku Klux, the vengeance—all in a swiftly moving panorama, without a flicker to tell of the mechanism—brought a tense forgetfulness of self.

LINCOLN'S ASSASSINATION.

Tragedy and humor, love and hate, passion and purity, treachery and honor,, the gamut of emotion and human nature was run by the genius of a film director. There is the scene of the assassination of President Lincoln, in the old Ford Theater in Washington, a scene never to be forgotten by one who sees it in these pictures. It shows Lincoln in a flood of illuminating understanding, and there is something infinitely touching in the stricken tower of strength, when he crumples back in his chair, before the bewildered audience and the startled players on the stage, too dazed to hold Booth as he falls from the President's box, tripping on the flag that drapes it.

The film history is well named "The Birth of a Nation." The brilliant audience at the Grand Opera House last evening sat enthralled at the unfolding of the significant passages in the dramatic development of these United States, acts of destiny performed through the medium of individuals that made the pulse to quicken, the blood to leap more freely, to course hot through the veins, to cause that tightening of the throat under the stress of emotion of the heart, and to send one away from the playhouse profoundly impressed. These pictures call forth every ounce of the patriotism that is in the true American, they stir into warm life the hidden springs of pride in one's country's achievements. There is no man who has so far forgotten his sense of civil obligation that he can sit unmoved when flashing before him come the marshaled hosts entering into titanic conflict, or when that wonderfully expressive face, that face seamed and lined with the tragedy of a nation, appears in silent prayer and Lincoln lives again. "Lives" is the word. These pictures are the last word in film art. They are the triumph of this branch of scientific production. One can well understand why the photo-spectacle cost half a million dollars to produce and required the services of 18,000 persons. It is stupendous in its inception and has been carried out to fruition by genius.

WORK OF MASTER MINDS.

David W. Griffith has modestly announced that the idea was suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novel, "The Clansman." Mr. Griffith has gone far beyond the scope, however, of one novel. The printed page does not hold the miraculous realism of the battle scene, the far-flung lines in the great four years' conflict, nor can any words paint the rush of the white-garbed Ku Klux, the thrilling gathering of the clans, the swift riding by night, and the conquering rush to the rescue. The 12,000 feet of celluloid film bring to us swift moving events leading up to the war and the greatest events of the war, as well as those of the days of reconstruction. There pass before us Lincoln, Lee, Grant. We see the charges of heroic lines during the war, the surrender at Appomattox, the Freedman's Bureau, the carpetbaggers' excesses and the picturesque yet terrible rides of the clansmen. In the 5,000 scenes, there is a sustained movement and individual acting that is never at fault. Mr. Griffith says there are 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details and that the musical score has been synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes, and we do not question it. The symphonic orchestra carried, with the pictures is an accompaniment that adds to the completeness of the performance.

In the master minds that worked on this photo spectacle, there was no room for careless work and the details, the smallest things, are as natural as life itself. The acting of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of May Marsh as Flora is superb. It would be difficult to imagine anything better.

"The Birth of a Nation" makes an appeal that cannot be denied to the red-blooded American. In the tense quiet of the audience at the last, after the great drama is ended, is felt the recognition of the lesson that is taught, for it has a moral unforgettable and supreme—the uselessness, bestiality of war. It tells why the spectacle has been given to capacity houses, not only in other cities in Texas, but throughout the country. One cannot leave the theater after sitting before these pictures without being a better American. ... carries in his heart a reverence and ... understanding. "My country" are ... that have a meaning.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be at the Grand Opera House all this week, with matinees and evening performances daily.

Manager Weil, in order to accommodate the theatergoers, has been compelled to secure the pictures for two extra performances next Sunday. Judging from the large advance sale the production will be greeted by capacity houses at every performance in San Antonio. Seats for the two extra performances will be placed on sale this morning and those who have not been able to obtain choice seats heretofore may now be accommodated.

Galveston D. News Dec

THE DASH OF THE CLANS

Superb horsemanship of the white-robed vigilantes is one of the most enjoyable features of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand Opera House next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA WILL COME HERE WITH THE FAMOUS PICTURES

Haunting Melodies Feature Spectacular Production of the Birth Of a Nation, More so Than Have Come to Light in Any Musical Comedy of the Last Ten Years.

Music lovers will find in the score of "The Birth of a Nation" which comes to the Grand next week, more haunting melodies than have come to light in any musical comedy of the last ten years, excepting, perhaps, "The Merry Widow." The score is synchronized to the 5,000 scenes of the big Griffity spectacle, and it is played by an orchestra of thirty—the largest symphony organization being heard on tour with any attraction this year outside of the large theatrical centers. Twenty of the musicians are carried by the company and the others are drafted from local talent.

The score runs the entire gamut of human emotion and in combination with the film, it portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the Old South, quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the War between the States. Then the first intimation of a national storm that is brewing, followed closely by the grim realism of War itself. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation slips by in swift panorama and the gaunt specter of war shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. Then the work of rebuilding the South; the dark days of negro supremacy, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

Quaint melodies of the South, forgotten by except of the older generation; majestic strains from Grand Opera; light, rippling airs from the semiclassica—all are blended into a masterpiece of descriptive music running the two hours and forty minutes required for the presentation of this spectacle.

The engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand will begin next Monday night and will continue Tuesday and Wednesday with matinees on those days at 3 o'clock. It will be impossible to give a matinee on Monday because the whole day will be required to install the massive production. Owing to the importance of the engagement the advance sale at the Fariss-Klutz drug store has been called off and tickets for the five performances will be sold at the opera house boxoffice beginning Friday morning at 9 o'clock. The boxoffice will be open from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m. for the sale of tickets until the end of the engagement. A telephone has also been installed in the boxoffice for the convenience of patrons.

Danville Register Nov 3

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GREAT.

Stupendous Griffith Spectacle at Majestic Delights Big Audience.

The wonderful dramatic spectacle staged by D. W. Griffith and portrayed in pictures delighted two large audiences yesterday, matinee and evening, and will doubtless be shown again today at 3 p. m. and 8:20 p. m. to crowded houses. This thrilling two-act drama is adapted from Thomas Dixon's story "The Clansman," save that it is more inclusive and may be said to embody the entire Dixon trioloy of the moving picture art and is upon such a magnificent scale that it seems inconceivable that so much stirring action and dramatic portrayal possibly be photographed and presented with such wonderful effect.

This stupendous production must have cost a large sum and incalculable effort to produce, for the number of characters in the piece itself and the amazing number of men, women children and horses and the varied scenes portrayed with such fidelity to history and the styles, manners and customs of the day is simply wonderful. So thrilling is the movement of the play and so realistic withal that it s a small wonder that the audiences are wrought to high pitch of enthusiasm and that at other times they are brought to tears. The battle scenes portrayed are on a scale of grandeur and realism impossible to describe and which must literally be seen to be appreciated.

For three hours this great twelve-reel production held the intense interest of the audience. The rush for the seats at the matinee yesterday was noteworthy, and the attendance last night was large. Today's audiences will probably be as large or larger.

Danville Bee Nov 3

"BIRTH OF A NATION" GREAT.

The wonderful dramatic spectacle staged by D. W. Griffith and portrayed in pictures delighted two large audiences yesterday, matinee and evening, and will doubtless be shown again today at 3 p. m. and 8:20 p. m. to crowded houses. This thrilling two-act drama is adapted from Thomas Dixon's story "The Clansman," save that it is more inclusive and may be said to embody the entire Dixon trioloy of the moving picture art and is upon such a magnificent scale that it seems inconceivable that so much stirring action and dramatic portrayal possibly be photographed and presented with such wonderful effect.

This stupendous production must have cost a large sum and incalculable effort to produce, for the number of characters in the piece itself and the amazing number of men, women children and horses and the varied scenes portrayed with such fidelity to history and the styles, manners and customs of the day is simply wonderful. So thrilling is the movement of the play and so realistic withal that it s a small wonder that the audiences are wrought to high pitch of enthusiasm and that at other times they are brought to tears. The battle scenes portrayed are on a scale of grandeur and realism impossible to describe and which must literally be seen to be appreciated.

For three hours this great twelve-reel production held the intense interest of the audience. The rush for the seats at the matinee yesterday was noteworthy, and the attendance last night was large. Today's audiences will probably be as large or larger.

Danville Bee Nov 3

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

MATINEE TODAY AND TONIGHT WILL END ENGAGEMENT IN DANVILLE—LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC AUDIENCES AT EVERY PERFORMANCE.

"The Birth of a Nation" will end its engagement in Danville with matinee and night performances at the Majestic Theatre today, and those who have not yet seen the big Griffith spectacle shoud obtain tickets as early as possible. Large audiences filled the Majestic yesterday afternoon and last night, and the advance sale indicates two more capacity audiences today.

There has been a feeling in some quarters that "The Birth of a Nation" will eventually find its way into the smaller theatres and will be shown at prices below those being charged at the Majestic. Any statements to this effect are without foundation, however, inasmuch as D. W. Griffith, the producer, has stated emphatically that he will never show the spectacle except in first class theatres at prices regularly charged in those theatres for the best attractions. Anybody who has seen the production can understand that it would be impossible to present it with the proper stage and musical effects except in the larger theatres.

Kansas City Journal Nov 3

'BIRTH OF A NATION' POPULAR

Big Spectacle to Remain Here for Two More Weeks.

With "The Birth of a Nation" in its second week at the Grand, the people of Kansas City are really just commencing to appreciate the great motion picture, and many patrons have been noticed returning to see it the second, and even the third time. The spectacle will remain here but two weeks more after the close of the present week.

Assistant Manager Sherlock of the Grand said yesterday many persons seem to be under the impression that the admission price for "The Birth of a Nation" is uniformly $2. Such is not the case. There are plenty of 50-cent and $1 seats at each evening performance, all of them well located and reserved. At the daily matinee, except Saturdays, the best seats are 50 cents and $1.

Austin American Nov 3

"Birth of a Nation."

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Hancock Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, matinee Tuesday and Wednesday, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner," who led Congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the patients' office hospital.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful and her features never lose their piquancy in indoor or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera, are most expressive.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studio where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the Civil War and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

Kansas City Journal Nov 4

Next Sunday will begin the last two weeks of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand and the last this season in this section of the country. With each performance the audiences increase both in size and enthusiasm for the wonderful D. W. Griffith spectacle of Civil war times and reconstruction days. Thousands of people within 100 miles of Kansas City have been coming in to see this great picture. While it is the universal verdict that this great spectacle is well worth $2, there are seats at cheaper prices also. There are matinees every day, including Sundays.

Seattle Times Nov 4

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles Theater is nearing the end of its long run in this city and the opportunities to see this wonderful spectacle of the Civil War days are growing appreciably less.

Kansas City Post Nov 3

HER ADVENT IN MOVIES AN ACCIDENT

MAE MARSH.

Mae Marsh, the "Little Sister" of Colonel Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," which is making a successful second week run at the Grand, "just happened to break into pictures." She was little more than a girl when her curiosity prompted her to elude the watchful eyes of the watchmen at the Majestic-Reliance studio in Los Angeles one day. David W. Griffith, producer, saw her and her roguish manner as she imitated the characters in the picture being rehearsed, caught his eye.

"Want a job?" asked Mr. Griffith, when he saw what he believed the making of a wonderful actress.

The same smile which has won thousands of admirers for her as she appears on the screen, was turned on Mr. Griffith. Her answer was in the affirmative and her future was made from the start. She can take any part in a film, a little scrub girl; a boarding school miss; the college graduate; the society miss; the romantic heroine; the soubrette cut-up, and finally the everyday, freckle-faced, comely roguish kid. But never before has she appeared to such advantage as in "The Birth of a Nation," in which she is a true daughter of the Confederacy.

San Antonio Express Nov 4/15

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Grand Show's South's Surrender.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil War appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Opera House, the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the Army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds, Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly decressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated Southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray, who grasps the extended hand, and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox Courthouse is closed.

Austin American Nov 4

"Birth of a Nation."

No other industry in the same given time ever grew as rapidly in America as the business enterprises that are commonly classified as motion picture industries. In capital invested and financial returns from these inventions the moving picture is now the fifth greatest combination in America.

The one man who has done more than all others to dignify the new form of art is David Wark Griffith, whose tireless energy and art are responsible for the first $2 moving picture, "The Birth of a Nation." It is estimated that before this great production has exhausted its earning capacity it will be seen by 10,000,000 people in America. Later on it will exceed these figures in the other countries of the world. This prospect stamps "The Birth of a Nation" the greatest piece of theatrical property of all ages. "Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the Hancock, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. Seats on sale today.

Dallas Morning News Nov 4

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Much-Discussed Historical Spectacle Begins Its Engagement at the Academy Tonight.

It is expected that students of Lynchburg's several colleges will be conspicuous in tonight's audience at the Academy of Music, where D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will begin a three days' engagement. Teachers in Southern colleges have been especially fervent in their praise of the spectacle as a lesson in history that could never be obtained from textbooks.

After witnessing the spectacle at the Harris Theatre, Spartanburg, two weeks ago, Dr. J. A. Tillinghast, professor of history at Converse College, write the following letter to the Spartanburg Herald: "I have just seen 'The Birth of a Nation.' It is a wonderful achievement, undoubtedly, as an effort to show in vivid panorama the drama that once was going on in stern reality among us, with a strange and fierce mixture of emotions, purposes, hopes, sacrifices, revenges, romance—a drama on which the curtain fell so long ago that now few survive who saw it to remember it. The effort to tell this story in spectacle, accompanied by music as the constant reminder of many things that melody serves curiously to keep alive within us, is an effort probably reaching the summit in moving picture art.

"I am moved to say a word about it in this public manner, for fear many people, knowing far too little of their country's history and not likely to learn it from books, may miss this opportunity to learn a good deal that they would not soon forget. They may miss it merely for lack of understanding what it is. I feel, since seeing it, that all who can possibly afford to see it should do so.

"J. A. TILLINGHAST.

"Spartanburg, S. C., Oct. 21, 1915."

Wash D. Times Herald Nov 3

HENABERY PORTRAYS PRESIDENT LINCOLN

Selected From Among Twenty for Important Role in "Birth of a Nation."

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the president reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a spring day in Washington—April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation," showing the war president is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious states. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Lincoln in Prayer—"The Birth of a Nation."

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the president. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattox surrender the leader of congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away!" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great president, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

News Leader Nov 4

Walthall Appears at te New.

Henry B. Walthall, the hero of "The Birth of a Nation," will play in an exquisite three-act feature at the New theatre today. The play is "The Woman Hater," and Mr. Walthall is ably supported by Miss Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn.

Pittsburgh Press Nov 4

MILES.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles theater is nearing the end of its long run in this city and the opportunities to see this wonderful spectacle of the Civil war days are growing appreciably less.

"Birth of a Nation."

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand opera house is, of necessity, sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the United States. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not a comedy, it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle. Comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless. There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home; almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Alas, later is seen her tragic end, when, to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Again there is the scene in "the quarters," where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing, "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkies delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

Times Nov 4 15

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Academy Undergoes Alterations for Spectacle.

With a score of electricians and mechanics preparing the playhouse for the reception of the massive "The Birth of a Nation" production when the company arrives today the Academy of Music is about the busiest spot in Lynchburg today. Extensive changes in the stage and auditorium are necessitated by the coming of the spectacle that has enthralled New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, and neither effort nor expense is being spared by the local management to provide the company with proper facilities.

In the first place, a large block of seats must be removed from the rear of the orchestra floor, where a booth housing two large projecting machines and other electrical paraphernalia is to be installed. An optical expert sent in advance of the company measured to the fraction of an inch the distance necessary for proper focal adjustment in a theatre of the dimensions of the Academy of Music.

Then the stage and orchestra pit require re-arrangement. The bewildering array of equipment used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects requires every possible inch of space on the stage. Twenty men are employed "back stage" in working the effects, not counting a squad of "supers" who do nothing but shout at the command of the stage director.

Tonight's performance will begin at 8:15. Matinees will be given tomorrow and Saturday at 2:45.

Waco D. Times Herald Nov 4

"The Birth of a Nation."

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen at the Auditorium in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale. "The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of civil war history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants, drilled with the well-known Griffith elan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" can not henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay, so far as spectacular features are concerned.

LINCOLN YIELDS TO A MOTHER'S PLEA.

A touching scene in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, in which the President is shown granting a pardon to a young Confederate prisoner.

LOVE INTEREST AND COMEDY MIX WITH THE SOBER AND THE SOMBRE

All Through the Spectacular "Birth of a Nation" There Are Bits of the Lighter Shade of Life to Be Overcast by the Sombre Shade Later On.

Seats for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" will go on sale at the opera house boxoffice tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock and it is expected that the sale will open with a rush. More interest has been manifested in the coming of the big Griffith spectacle than in any offering that the Grand has placed before its patrons in years and it is expected that the total attendance and receipts will set a new high water mark for the playhouse.

The engagement will open Monday night and will continue Tuesday and Wednesday with matinees on those days at 3 o'clock. The opera house boxoffice will be open from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m. from tomorrow to the end of the engagement and a telephone, especially installed for this engagement, can be used by patrons in seeking information and making reservations. The management urges that all who can possibly do so, attend the Monday night performance, thus helping to minimize the congestion at the later performances.

Dealing with historical events of the Reconstruction, the general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and sombre. But love interest and comedy of a refined sort illuminate the spectacle throughout its two hours and forty minutes.

There is a typical southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disfigured its serenity. A northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds, we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies but clasped in each others arms.

Then there is a young daughter of the southern home, almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end when to save herself from the fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again, there is a scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of the northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing "Mississippi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the sombre shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life.

No Horse-play in Masterpiece.

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation," which is the current attraction at the Grand, proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old-style crude methods. One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the hospital scene, gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure-fire" order for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look. Paul LeBlanc is the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans Creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going to Los Angeles where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate. Some of the recent civil war portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doubles of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the civil war type. Miss Lillian Gish wears costumes of civil war and reconstruction times that are heirlooms in her family. Through Griffith's skill all the actors in the production are made to appear as if to the mannor born and not awkwardly moving about in habiliments to which they are unaccustomed.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" REMAINS UNTIL NOV. 27

Definite Date Announced for Conclusion of Griffith's Gorgeous Spectacular Creation

S. F. Nixon announces that the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Forrest Theatre will end on Saturday night, November 27.

In the meantime seats for this D. W. Griffith spectacular creation will continue to be sold two weeks in advance, thus providing opportunity for persons who might otherwise be unable to obtain tickets, to make reservation of a satisfying kind.

The interruption of the run of "The Birth of a Nation" is due solely to the fact that the managers of a number of large musical comedy and revue productions have been insistent upon early booking at the Forrest.

Indeed, several changes in route have already been necessitated in the case of several such organizations because of the continuance of the tremendous popularity which has been the portion of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city.

In view of the fact that there is now a definite date for the closing of the engagement of the Griffith spectacle here, it should be borne in mind that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be presented in the vicinity of Philadelphia and that at no place where the picture is shown will there be any reduction in price, but, on all occasions the prices for seats as customarily charged in the best theatres will be maintained.

It is with regret that the management of "The Birth of a Nation" has agreed to the closing of the local engagement four weeks hence, but the inability of Mr. Nixon longer to defer tentative engagements of musical comedy and revue productions was recognized.

Every effort will be made to accommodate all who apply for seats and it is hoped that no one shall be disappointed.

"The Birth of a Nation" is so vital a production and is so historically illuminative that its appeal is universal.

One obtains an accurate idea of conditions prevailing in this country prior to the Civil War, and, through tremendous battle scenes, sees the significant changes leading to reconstruction days and to the actual making of a new nation.

As the picture is flashed upon the screen there is a wealth of illustrative melody from a symphony orchestra and the impression that one takes from the theatre is of a realistic presentation far surpassing one's own power of imagination or of possible experience.

The stirring tale of divided families and friends, which forms the basis of this film, seems to possess unlimited power for eliciting the interest of spectators.

Certainly it is the vehicle for the exhibition of a remarkably interesting series of pictures, all historically accurate, of the most critical period in the history of the United States.

Henry B. Walthall, as the "Little Colonel," does one of the finest bits of acting in the film.

Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper and Lillian Gish furnish able support.

One of the most stirring episodes is the gathering of the clansmen in the final scenes of the film.

A STUPENDOUS SPECTACLE

"The Birth of a Nation" Given Enthusiastic Reception Here.

"The Birth of a Nation," based upon events of the civil war and reconstruction days as described in Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," of which the widest publicity has been given it, not only in this country, but also in London, where it is now running, as the most pretentious as well as the most wonderful of all pictorial dramas, was shown at the Academy last night. And notwithstanding that Lynchburg is an unusually quiet and conservative city and not given to great excitement over productions of any sort, such enthusiasm has rarely been manifest as was exhibited last night at this stupendous spectacle, which certainly overshadows all past endeavors of the moving picture field.

The extent of this pageant is so far reaching, its beauty and splendidness of scenes so great that to give the reader a clear conception of it through a review is impossible. It must be seen to be understood, to be appreciated; no written detail can do the undertaking justice, but it is predicted that before the picture is withdrawn on Saturday night the Academy will not accommodate the people who will desire to see it.

In the first part, which deals with scenes and incidents of the war between the States, the action passes rapidly from scene to scene of the most thrilling realism, depicting with accuracy the horrors of this great struggle, presenting scenes of sadness and desolation left by the cruel hand of war. The illusion is so perfect, the sense of personal participation in terrible events so keen that it as if one were seeing the actual thing and hearing a great artist tell of it and its effects both at the same time. Lee, Lincoln, Grant and other notable figures connected with these stirring times were produced in such striking likeness that an emphatically distinctive credit is rendered to the art of cinematography. The first part closes with the assassination of Lincoln and the audience is left almost bewildered over the well-nigh gruesome in the bare nakedness with which the pictures depict the human passions at work.

The second part deals with building up in the South after the war or reconstruction days. And again most vividly there is brought to view many features which caused a tingling in the blood, the rise of a lump in the throat, tears to start in the eyes of some as are flashed such scenes, many beautiful, other horrible, that will move any audience North or South if that audience have in it one scintilla of feeling for the helpless and oppressed and the least desire to maintain unsullied the blood of the Aryan race. Probably the greatest climax reached is the gathering of the Ku Klux Klan, garbed in their ghostly white robes, their breasts bearing the fiery cross of Scotland's hills as they ride to the strains of Dixie. The audience here broke forth in resounding cheers.

The musical score of appropriate airs as interpreted by Professor Briel and his orchestra of thirty pieces adds greatly to the impressiveness of the pictures, and kept the tension upon the audience at high pitch.

The opposition and criticism which this production encountered in some sections of the country is nothing short of sheer prejudice. A picture that will almost raise an audience out of its seat as will "The Birth of a Nation" is built upon a foundation that will not be shaken by those who know nothing of reconstruction [illegible]

"Birth of a Nation."

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the opera house Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in a historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads.

Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North State. The race of the Northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, after hearing the enthusiastic comments on his work.

Seats are now on sale.

APPEARS IN BIG PHOTO PLAY AT MILES.

LILLIAN GISH.
At the Miles, Nov. 8.

Grand Breaking Record.

"The Birth of a Nation" continues to draw record breaking crowds to the Grand. While it is a $2 film, good seats at daily matinees are being sold at 50 cents, and some of the best seats are only $1 at night.

"To Save One Girl" will be staged by a company headed by Eugene Strong. Other acts will be Billie Burke, dancer; the Alexander Kids, song and dance specialists; the Ralph Dunbar quintet of singers; Rex's comedy circus; Louise and Grete Brunello and Harry Stephens in a miniature musical comedy, and Fleta Brown, singer.

Three weeks more remain of the record run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's marvelous photo-drama, has only three weeks more at the Liberty Theatre. Its great battle scenes, historic incidents and the ever exciting ride of the Klans make it the greatest picture ever filmed.

News Nov 4

Lincoln and his counsellors as they are shown in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy for three days, beginning tonight.

Lieutenant Ed Nov 5

ANNOUNCEMENTS

At the Grand.

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order, which which gets a round of enthusiastic handclapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Grand Opera House, was verified as an actual historical event by one of the spectators. G. L. Mordecai of 174 West Eighty-sixth Street is the man to whom it happened. During the New York run of the play he visited D. V. Griffith's offices and told this remarkable story:

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive blockade-running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. I had served in the Confederate army, but had been honorably discharged on account of sickness. My father then wanted me to go as his agent to Nassau. The only channel of intercourse was closed, however, when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, so father suggested that I should try to slip through the Northern lines and thence take steamer from New York.

"In civilian dress I managed to elude the Union pickets in Virginia; passed the Potomac, took steps for Washington, but in the latter place I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. It was feared that I would be court-martialed and executed, or at best held prisoney until the close of the war. My fiancee's father, Alderman Samuel Lewis of New York, later acting Mayor, came to Washington and worked in my behalf. Notkwithstanding Secretary Stanton's opposition, he succeeded in convincing President Lincoln that I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'on one condition, that he takes oath not to return to the Southern States during the war.' I gladly took this oath and was released. Before leaving for the North for my marriage and residence in Alderman Lewis' family, I desired to thank President Lincoln. On being presented to Mr. Lincoln, I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.'

Richmond Ev. Journal Nov 6

Jake Wells has signed an agreement with the Triangle Film Corporation, whereby he will have the exclusive right to show their pictures in his theaters in this city and the South. D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation," is the leading spirit in the Triangle, and promises the last word in pictures through this corporation.

News D.T. Herald Nov 6

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

One of the most effective minor scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Auditorium three nights, November 11, shows Miss Elsie Stoneman, daughter of the "Great Commoner," who led congress in Lincoln's time, playing a guitar to solace a wounded rebel officer in the patents' office hospital.

"I haven't known you long," says the little Confederate colonel, Ben Cameron, "but I have carried you about with me for years and years." He displayed a half-faded daguerreotype of the girl, a picture she had given her brother and which had fallen into Ben's hands.

Soothed by her kindness, Ben makes a rapid recovery. In the second half of the story, the scene of which shifts to South Carolina, they are sweethearts in the dread time of the second southern uprising. To portray the fine flower of northern womanhood throughout the whole troublous era is the task of Miss Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman in this play.

Miss Gish is of the "golden aureole" blonde type which makes for photographic beauty. She is singularly graceful, and her features never lose their piquancy in in or outdoor scenes. The eyes, before the camera, are most expressive. The acting conveys sincerity as well as true feminine charm—at least so the New York critics thought.

Both Lillian and Dorothy Gish (the two being sisters) are the favorite actresses of the studios where D. W. Griffith, director of "The Birth of a Nation," does most of his work. It took eight months to stage the civil war and reconstruction epic. As Elsie Stoneman figures in hundreds of scenes from the early war-time to the end of reconstruction and her marriage to Ben, Lillian Gish had hardly an idle moment.

Daily Advance Nov 4

MIRIAM COOPER, who plays MARGARET CAMERON, in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," at the Academy for three days, beginning tonight.

News D.T. Herald Nov 4

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

Clever Actress in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Auditorium, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift.

Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has [illegible] Today her face is better known than any actress in the world and she is the pet of movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

San Antonio Ev Nov 6

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Only Four More Performances.

Mae Marsh, who plays the role of Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," now at the Grand Opera House, is known all over the country as the girl with a thousand faces. Her remarkable rise to the position in the motion picture field that Maude Adams holds in the legitimate drama is due to the careful manner in which D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has studied her personality and brought out every latent gift. Little Miss Marsh has only been in pictures two years, but she has already reached the top of the ladder. A few seasons ago she came to the Griffith studio to watch her older sister work. She was raw and undeveloped, but Griffith's keen eye saw great possibilities beneath the surface of her anxious eyes and mobile countenance. He wanted a half-grown girl for a work he was finishing and he selected her. Now she has the most likable role in all the thousands of characters that crowd the Griffith masterpiece. She is the joyous note of youth in the most remarkable drama the film has yet unfolded. Experienced actors always have a word of praise, sincere and emphatic, for the little lass who plays the younger sister in its appealing story. This California girl can express almost any emotion the feminine mind can grasp. She has played tomboys and heroines, consumptive girls and athletic girls. No part frightens her when Griffith is directing. Today her face is better known than any actress in the world, and she is the pet of the movie fans in every quarter of the globe.

There will be only four more performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand. The engagement will conclude with tomorrow night's performance.

News D.T. Herald Nov

Mae Marsh, the Pet Sister, in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Auditorium three days, commencing Novem[illegible]

San Antonio Light Nov 5

Follows History Exactly.

When General Robert E. Lee at Appomattox, wished to make some marginal notes on the papers of the final surrender, he asked the bystanders for a pencil. Strange to say, not one of the numerous officers and aides-de-camp was able to offer him one. At last, an officer of Lee's staff extracted a pocket inkstand and feather quill from his kit, and with the aid of these the historic document was written and the names of Grant and Lee affixed at the bottom. The above bit of history was dug up by David W. Griffith in the course of his staging of "Lee's Surrender to Grant at Appomattox," one of his striking historical fac-simile scenes in Griffith's motion pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Opera House. General Grant is correctly represented in his fatigue uniform, dusty and travel-stained, while General Lee is shown in the complete panoply of military dress. "My aim," said Mr. Griffith in speaking of such scenes recently, "has been to introduce as little acting as possible. I have tried to be accurate in every detail and keep away from theatricalism."

St Louis Times Nov 6

"Birth of a Nation" to Have 181 Performances.

The phenomenal St. Louis run of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Garrick has but three more weeks to go as the final performance is announced for Saturday, Nov. 27. On this date, which will be the conclusion of the thirteenth consecutive week in St. Louis of the Griffith masterpiece, the total number of performances will have reached 181. This represents not only the longest engagement that any theatrical attraction has ever reached in St. Louis, but at the same time accords this city the credit of being able to support "The Birth of a Nation" for a longer period than any city of its size in the country. This may be said to successfully refute the statement that St. Louis theatergoers are not sufficiently numerous to encourage the coming of high-class attractions as 150,000 persons have thus far viewed the Griffith spectacle and it is estimated that before the final performance the number will go over the 200,000 mark.

Greensboro Daily News Nov 5

MAE MARSH,
Who is seen as Flora Cameron, favorite sister of "the little colonel," in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Seat sale opens this morning at box office.

SEATS ON SALE TODAY FOR THE SPECTACULAR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Regular Box Office at Grand Will Be Open at 9 O'Clock This Morning—Telephone Installed for Convenience and to Facilitate Matter of Reservations.

Seats for the five performances of "The Birth of a Nation," to be given at the Grand Opera house beginning Monday night, will be placed on sale at the opera house boxoffice at 9 o'clock this morning. A telephone has been installed in the boxoffice for the convenience of patrons and everything possible is being done by Manager C. G. Harrison to minimize the confusion that attends the demand for seats for the big Griffith spectacle wherever it is shown. Instead of attempting to handle the advance sale at the Fariss-Klutz drug store he has improved the boxoffice facilities and all tickets will be sold there, as is done in the larger cities.

The boxoffice will be open from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m. from this morning to the end of the engagement and it is hoped that patrons will call early and obtain seats that will insure their comfort and a good view of the spectacle. The scale of prices is unusual for the reason that the best seats are in the center of the orchestra floor and the front of the balcony.

"The Birth of a Nation" is the biggest thing, theatrically speaking, that Greensboro will have this year and it is urged that all who can possibly do so obtain tickets for Monday night, thus helping to minimize the crowding and confusion of the last performances as well as to guard against disappointment. So strong was the rush for seats toward the end of the company's engagement in Richmond last week that a special performance had to be played Saturday morning to accommodate the overflow.

The company booked for the Grand is the same one that appeared in Richmond. An orchestra of 20 is carried and local talent will be drawn upon to increase this number to 30. A carload of special equipment is carried and altogether the services of 50 people are employed in each presentation of the spectacle.

Austin American Nov 6

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," HANCOCK OPERA HOUSE MONDAY NIG

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," which at the Hancock for three night beginning Nov. 8, is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls"—the times of Civil War and reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill. New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles crowded for many months the theaters where it was being simultaneously played.

The Griffith drama comes here with a baggage equipment of two 60-foot cars, a complete staff, including mechanical experts and stage crew and a large symphonic orchestra regularly carried on tour—a company of fifty people altogether.

The story embraces beautiful romances of the Blue and the Gray, [illegible] Cameron, the Clansman, and [illegible] Northern sweetheart, Elsie; Cap[illegible] Phil Stoneman, United States Arm[illegible] and sweet Margaret Cameron, [illegible] South Carolina lassie.

San Antonio Light Nov 5

IN THE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

The mother's plea to Lincoln for the life of her son who is to be a guerilla.

Daily Advance Nov 6

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

Last Performance of Spectacle at Academy Tonight.

Standing room was at a premium at the matinee performance of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music this afternoon and the advance sale indicates another capacity audience tonight. But there are still some good seats to be had for tonight, and those who wish to avail themselves of the final opportunity to witness the spectacle should visit the box office without delay.

It is difficult to say when Lynchburg people will have another opportunity to witness the big Griffith spectacle. The lack of facilities in the smaller theaters precludes the possibility of its ever being shown in them and the company now at the Academy is booked solid for the rest of the season in the leading cities of the South. As it is the only company on tour below the Mason and Dixon line, its time will all be taken in presenting the spectacle where it has not yet been seen. D. W. Griffith, the producer, has stated emphatically that the spectacle will never be shown except in first-class theaters at prices regularly prevailing in those theaters for the best attractions.

Globe Com. Nov 6

LIBERTY.—Three weeks more remain of the record run for D. W. Griffith's marvellous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. In its epic sweep this marvellous combination of new art forms, embracing spectacle, drama, and music, comes nearer being the great American play than anything which the modern stage has brought forth.

Ev. Mail Nov 6

"Birth of a Nation" to Close.

In three weeks "The Birth of a Nation" will be reeled off for the last time at the Liberty theatre. It will have had the longest continuous run of any play in New York. The potency of "The Birth of a Nation" lies in its remarkable mingling of all component parts of real drama, together with the most spectacular thrills that have ever been translated to the screen. Needless to say, it has built fortunes for the men who are interested in it.

News Nov 6

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Historical Spectacle Will End Local Engagement With Today's Performances at Academy.

Today's performances of D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music, will give Lynchburg people their final opportunity to witness the most discussed theatrical offering in the world. The seat sale for the afternoon and night performances today is very heavy but there are still some good ones to be had at the box office and the management urges that patrons come early to obtain them. Today's matinee will be at 2:45 and the night performance at 8:15.

Never has there been a stronger unanimity of local opinion as to the merit of a theatrical offering than has been expressed concerning "The Birth of a Nation." It has been the leading topic in the schools, public offices, hotels and in the streets since its engagement was begun at the Academy Thursday night.

Newark Ev. News Nov 6

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's famous photo play, depicting many incidents in the developments of this country, will be the attraction at the Newark Theater during the two weeks beginning Monday, November 15. The production, one of the most elaborate and impressive thus far shown on the screen, is the same as that being shown in the Liberty Theater, New York, where it has enjoyed a long run, with no signs of lessening popularity. In the illustration of the story 18,000 persons were employed before the camera in the enactment of battle and other thrilling scenes. An orchestra of thirty musicians will furnish the incidental music.

Newark Ev. Ledger Nov 6

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," which is to be seen at the Newark Theater the week of November 15, has been and is the most widely-discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it, nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead, you see it as if it was reality. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies, and with this framework they make these wonderful characters live again. They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave, and it ends with the settlement of the question [illegible] achieved.

San Antonio Light Nov 7

FILM SPECTACLE CLOSES RUN OF WEEK AT GRAND

"Birth of a Nation" Seen by Nearly 15,000 San Antonians.

"DAMAGED GOODS" NEXT

Al G. Field's Minstrels and Forbes-Robertson Coming This Month.

D. W. Griffith's photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which was shown to nearly 15,000 San Antonians in the last week, will be presented for the last time at the Grand Opera House today, matinee and night. The next attraction for the

Charlotte Daily Observer Nov 7

Peace allegory in the historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy of Music Monday, November 15th.

San Antonio Express Nov 7

Last Performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at Grand

Lethbridge Herald Nov 7

Miles—"Birth of a Nation" Film.

Tomorrow "The Birth of a Nation" at the Miles Theater will observe its 118th consecutive presentation in this city. As previously announced, the end of this remarkable engagement, which long ago broke the record for a run here, will terminate Saturday, November 27. This leaves three more weeks for those who have not seen the most remarkable photo spectacle ever produced in this country. After this month the Griffith masterpiece will not be shown again in this city either at any other theater or at prices below the scale now in force.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through storm and stress. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march, and the ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomatox; the assassination of the President; the uprising of the Ku-Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—those events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Charlotte D. Observer Nov 7

AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's wonderful new art of pictorialized spectacle with music will play the Academy of Music for three days beginning Monday, November 15. This is the great offering that opened a new era in the theaters of New York, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where it ran simultaneously in as many productions for many, many months. Despite great opposition the play has never been suppressed, but has met the approval of censor boards, judges, municipal authorities, publicists, editors and clergymen everywhere. It is pleasing to be able to note the fact that a metropolitan production of the finest quality and elaboration will be shown here.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the War Between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the Battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theater April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction Days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of a complete symphonic score of million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there are no less than 5,000 distinct and individual scenes.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted what was previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic sore with the appearances of the important characters and the enactment of the principal scenes. This magnificent instrumental music is played by a large orchestra of experts who are carried on tour in the traveling company of 50.

The advance sale of seats will begin Friday morning at the Academy of Music and judging from the many mail orders pouring in from every town within 100 miles of Charlotte there will be a regular "Ben Hur" rush for tickets.

St Thumb Advertiser Nov 7

"The Birth of a Nation"

TOMORROW "The Birth of a Nation," at the Miles Theater, will observe the 118th consecutive performance in this city. As previously announced, the end of this remarkable engagement, which long ago broke the record for a theatrical run here, will terminate Saturday, November 27. This leaves three more weeks of opportunity for those who have not seen the most remarkable and interesting stage spectacle ever produced in this country. After this month the Griffith masterpiece will not be shown again in this city either at any other theater or at prices below the scale now in force.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march, and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomatox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Charlotte News Nov 7

Lillian Gish, a starry-eyed beauty of the movies to be seen in "The Birth of a Nation," at The Academy of Music, Nov. 15-8.

"Birth of a Nation."

Charlotte playgoers will have their long-awaited opportunity to witness what is flamboyantly described on the billboards as "Earth's Greatest Spectacle," when D. W. Griffith's production of "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Academy of Music for three days, beginning a week from tomorrow night. Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday, making five performances in all, and seats for the entire engagement will be placed on sale at the Academy boxoffice next Friday morning at nine o'clock.

"The Birth of a Nation" is literally sweeping the south and brushing aside all theatrical records in the principal cities below the Mason and Dixon line. At the Academy of Music in Richmond two weeks ago it became necessary to station police officers in the lobby to quell the confusion at the Friday and Saturday performances and a special matinee was played Saturday performances and a special matinee was played Saturday morning to accommodate the overflow. Although twelve performances were given during the week's engagement, hundreds were turned away and the city is now clamoring for a return engagement. The same conditions prevailed in Norfolk, Knoxville, Chattanooga and other cities where the spectacle has been presented in the few weeks that it has been on tour in the south.

While "The Birth of a Nation" has played to phenomenal receipts throughout the country, its strongest appeal is to southerners. D. W. Griffith, a young Kentuckian whose father was a Confederate officer, set about to reproduce by means of motion pictures, music and realistic stage effects the complete story of the Reconstruction. He used Thomas Dixon's stories, "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots" in building his scenario and in his production he employed the services of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. He dwarfed the Dixon novels and plays so thoroughly that there is no room for comparison. Among the historical incidents shown are the battle of Petersburg at its height, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox, President Lincoln signing his call for volunteers and the assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth in Ford's theaters, Washington.

Ward Daily News Nov 7

At the Auditorium

Confederate Volunteers Off for the War. Scene from "The Birth of a Nation," Auditorium Three Nights and T... Matinees, Beginning Monday.

Ward Morning News Nov 7

At the Auditorium

Scene Showing the Battle of Petersburg, From "The Birth of a Nation," Auditorium Three Nights' ...nees, Beginning Monday

Ward D. T. Herald Nov 7

"BIRTH OF NATION" CAN ONLY BE SHOWN IN LARGE THEATER

The following telegram, which is self-explanatory, has been received:

New York, Nov. 6, 1915.

Miss Gussie Oscar,
Manager Auditorium Theatre,
Waco, Texas.

"The Birth of a Nation" is not a Triangle feature. Its production in a theatre other than playhouse usually producing high-class traveling attractions is thoroughly impracticable, because of the symphony orchestra and car-load of effects carried by the company. "The Birth of a Nation" will never be presented in any theatre in Waco or in any other city at less than a two-dollar scale of prices.

(Signed) J. J. McCARTHY,
Gen. Mgr. "Epoch Producing Corporation."

"The Birth of a Nation" is owned and controlled by The Epoch Producing Corporation, which is not affiliated with any other film producing concern, and according to the statement of the general manager above "The Birth of a Nation" will never be presented in the moving picture houses, owing to the impossibility of giving a complete production in any theatre other than those of the highest class.

Kansas City Post Nov 7

Kansas City Post Nov 7

Griffith's Film Draws.

"The Birth of a Nation," the film sensation of the present, continues at the Grand for the third week. Capacity houses have seen the film at nearly every matinee and night performance. There was some doubt entertained at the start, whether Kansas City would take to a $2 photoplay, but that doubt has disappeared as it has in every other city where Griffith's masterpiece has been shown. Good seats also are being sold for night performances at $1 and for matinees at 50 cents.

Eugene Strong and company in Paul Armstrong's last sketch, "To Save One Girl," will head the Orpheum bill this week. It is a powerful playlet with strong situations. Billie Burke, in "The Tango Shoes," has a laugh producing act. The Alexander Kids in their first tour, are song and dance artists. Ralph Dunbar presents a quintet of musicians in a novel act, "The Salon Singers." Rex's comedy circus of performing cats, dogs and a trick mule are said to be amusing. Louise and Grete Brunelle and Harry Stephens appear in a miniature musical comedy. Fleta Brown is called prima donna from Birdland.

N. Y. Press Nov 7

Liberty.

Three weeks more remain of the record run of "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theatre. Great battle scenes and romantic fancy bring history and fancy into such close relation that it is difficult to tell which is the more effective in the dramatic narrative. Its potency lies in the mingling of all component parts of real drama.

Austin Statesman Nov 7

D. W. GRIFFITH
Producer of "The Birth of a Nation."

Record-News Nov

AUDITORIUM.

"Birth of a Nation" Beginning Tomorrow.

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a three days' engagement next Thursday evening at the Auditorium. The first class metropolitan production is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying two baggage cars of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of fifty people.

Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the states as well as those of reconstruction. Lincoln, Lee and Grant; the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea; the awful siege of Petersburg; the signing of peace at Appomattox; the assassination of the president in Ford's theatre, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the south—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the terrible climaxes of Part II, which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the north and the south," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered states. The wild adventures and achievements of the Ku Klux Klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of southern and northern sweethearts.

Mr. Griffith's treatment of the magnificent theme is so much greater and grander than the original play that there can be no comparison. For example, he presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses instead of the tiny "armies" of the theatric boards. He shows 5,000 scenes in place of four or five; far-flung battle lines of many, many miles, and Ku Klux "rides" right out in the open, which surpass in thrills any Vanderbilt cup race. Yet the individual acting is as fine and artistic as in a "short cast" drama, the work of Henry Walthall as the Clansman and of Mae Marsh as Flora, in particular, rising to heights of genius. Other marvels of the work are the 200,000 faithfully accurate historical details; the musical score synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes; the wonderful reproduction of crowded interiors like the theatre performance where Lincoln was shot, and the South Carolina legislature session of 1870; the taking of battle scenes at night by a secret new process; the use of 25,000 yards of cloth for Ku Klux costumes, and 12,000 yards for women's dresses; the master's Rembrandt-like management of light and shade; the depiction of the glorious beauty of out-of-door Nature; his marvelous quiet yet effective playing the entire gamut of romance from lightest comedy to deepest tragedy; finally and supremely, the union of all the stage arts (except conversational speech) into a new art-form of drama-spectacle-with-music.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been acclaimed as the first pictorial drama to be presented in a regular theatrical way and at the usual first class scale of "two-dollar top" prices. No advance will be made on these prices on tour. The fact that one and a half million people have already witnessed it, and that it has already run to capacity attendance for half a year in the simultaneous productions of New York, Chicago and Boston, prove that the biggest claims in its behalf are justified by the popular verdict. Despite opposition at various times, it should be added, "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by censor boards everywhere; upheld, when attacked, by decisions of courts of record; endorsed by a greater number of prominent men in all walks of life, including priests and ministers, than any other entertainment ever offered to the public. In brief, it has rallied to its support all friends of free art and rebuked those whose bigotry would suppress the re-enactment of the Reconstruction story.

"The Birth of a Nation."

[By Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D.]

It is impossible to witness the film drama, "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Hancock Opera House, and not want to say something about it.

Everyone who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Hancock Opera House. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty, so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the President of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime; the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the President in Ford's theater.

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

Indorsements by Austinites.

Colonel George H. Walker, city.

My Dear Sir: Replying to your question, I beg to advise that I witnessed an exhibition of the great motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," in New York last week, and I unqualifiedly indorse it as the finest entertainment of its kind I ever saw.

I wish every person in Austin would see it. No one can view it without the deepest feeling of pride in the history, suffering, and sacrifices of the Southland, and exalted patriotism for our glorious republic.

The music arranged and composed for this production is beautifully descriptive. No entertainment which you will present this season will please any more, if indeed as much.

Yours very truly,
JEWEL P. LIGHTFOOT.

I just left New York, where I have been on business for a week. While there I had the pleasure of seeing "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theater, where it has been running for a year. Go and see it. I personally indorse this picture as being the greatest production ever shown.
GUS WROE,
First Vice President American National Bank.

I have been going to theaters all my life. Week before last I witnessed a performance of "The Birth of a Nation." When you see this picture you see them all. Everyone should see it. I personally indorse this masterpiece.
E. J. BURNS.

I witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theater, New York, where it is still running, and I am going to see it again tomorrow night at the Hancock Opera House. I advise all my friends to go and see it. There is a great treat in store for you.
MORRIS HIRSHFELD,
Cashier Austin National Bank.

I think "The Birth of a Nation" is one of the greatest spectacular performances I ever saw. Everybody should see it. I personally indorse this show.
A. S. WALKER,
Internal Revenue Inspector.

Wash D. C. Herald Nov

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Auditorium three days, commencing Thursday. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states, the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine, Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact fac similes of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay, now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"; it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art, a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman, Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper as Flora and Margaret, Ralph Lewis as Congressfan Stoneman, Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively; George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro, Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper, Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers, Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theater projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2 at the evening performances, and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

Kansas City Journal Nov 29

Grand—"The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith, foremost of directors, is conceded to have established a new art with his celebrated production, "The Birth of a Nation," which will begin tonight the last two weeks of its engagement at the Grand. This realization of Civil war and reconstruction days by means of motion picture, music and mechanical effects overshadows in its greatness all of the dramas of the older stage art and has won the most extraordinary encomiums from the critics. Intertwined with the mighty epical progress of the story are two beautiful romances of the Blue and the Gray. "The Birth of a Nation" took eight months to produce, cost $500,000, employed 18,000 actors, 3,000 horses, used real $80 shells in the artillery duels, night photography for the first time in some of the battle scenes, and in magnitude, skill and artistry far surpassed anything that has ever previously been attempted. The wonder was capped by having the thousands of scenes accurately synchronized to a sort of "Grand Opera" musical score played by a symphony orchestra of thirty musicians. Experts have declared that this magnificent score forms an artistic achievement fully as great as the picture itself.

Sherman Courier Nov

LILLIAN GISH
Heroine of
"The Birth of A Nation"

Sun Nov 7

The sensational film "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown only three weeks more. It has had a long and successful run, and so far surpassed in the length of its run as well as in the amount it has earned any other picture. It has also created a profound impression in London. It takes a picture strong in sensational qualities to interest the public for such a long time.

Pittsburgh Press Nov 7

MILES.

Tomorrow "The Birth of a Nation," at the Miles theater, will observe its 118th consecutive performance in this city. As previously announced the end of this remarkable engagement, which long ago broke the record for a theatrical run here, will terminate Saturday, Nov. 27. This leaves three more weeks of opportunity for those who have not seen the most remarkable and interesting stage spectacle ever produced in this country. "The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assasination of the President; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Wash D. C. Herald Nov

Gathering of the Ku Klux Klan in "A Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium Three Day" Commencing Thursday

Ill Macon Daily Telegraph Nov 7

Last Confederate Stand at Petersburg in "The Birth of a Nation" at Auditorium 3 days Starting Thursday.

M. Telegraph Nov 7

Three weeks more remain of the record run for D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre. Great battle scenes and romantic fancy bring history and fancy into such close relation that it is difficult to tell which is the more effective in the dramatic narrative. Its potency lies in the mingling of all component parts of real drama.

N.Y. Tribune Nov 7

Three weeks more remain of the record run for D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theatre.

Charlotte News Nov 8.

"The Birth of a Nation."

When D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," comes to the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Charlotte playgoers will see the most widely discussed as well as the most valuable, theatrical offering in the world. The spectacle has been witnessed by millions in the large cities of the east and west and has broken records for consecutive performances, total attendance and gross receipts wherever it has been shown.

While it has met with opposition at times—people seldom agree in their views on the big subjects—it has been suppressed nowhere, and in the few instances where it has been necessary to appeal to the courts it has been sustained as a highly moral and artistic production. The National Board of Censorship, together with various state and municipal boards, have pronounced "The Birth of a Nation" the best offering of its kind ever placed before the American public. Clergymen of all denominations, statesmen, teachers and club women have recommended it as a wonderful lesson in history and musical critics have pronounced the score which accompanies the spectacle a genuine masterpiece.

Seats for the engagement will be on sale at the Academy of Music boxoffice Friday morning. Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wedensday afternoon.

Sun Nov 8

Among the motion pictures which continue to be seen are "The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty Theatre, "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Vitagraph Theatre, the twilight sleep pictures at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre and Theda Bara in "Carmen" at the Academy of Music.

N.Y. American Nov 7

"Birth of a Nation" Proved Gold Mine for Producers

IT was a cold, dreary, rainy day in the early part of last February that Theodore Mitchell, one of the best known press agents in New York, came shivering into the motion picture department of The American.

"I have a treat in store for you," he said. "I am going to show you one of the finest motion pictures you ever saw." It was the kind of day that brough tonly visions of a big open fireplace with crackling logs, and the idea of leaving the office for the sake of seeing a motion picture seemed about the most uninviting proposition that could be put to anyone.

Mitchell spoke so alluringly of the picture, however, that a taxicab was procured, and it skidded its way down to Twenty-third street, where we were ushered through corridors and finally into a tiny little dark room. It seemed like spending a pleasant afternoon in the Tower of London on a wintry day.

"D. W. Griffith has made the picture we are going to show you," said Mitchell, "and he thinks it is the best thing he has ever done. We think so, too, and now we would like to have some cold-blooded newspaper opinion on it."

"But why get so excited over a moving picture?" said the writer.

Soon there began the machine gun rattle of a picture machine in a small room, and the first scene of "The Birth of a Nation" was flashed on a tiny little four by six screen. There were just three of us in the little projection room and we were all wet to the skin.

There seemed absolutely no chance for enthusiasm, and if Mitchell were not such a popular fellow he would have been thrown out of a window. Within a few moments, however, we were all sitting erect and looking at scenes that appeared to be a little more interesting than any we had before observed on the screen. After the first reel had been run off we talked among ourselves and decided that the picture had some real merit, and that it would probably take rank with some of the leading picture successes of the day.

The second reel began to rattle away, and some of those tremendous scenes that have since startled the nation began to unfold themselves. The historical features appealed to us strongly, but the human love story that runs through "The Birth of a Nation" caught every one of us.

After about an hour we began to stretch our legs and say to each other that a year before, if anyone had ever said we would sit in a little dark room for over three solid hours to see a picture, we would have considered him insane. But we continued to sit, and continued to watch; and as we watched, the conviction began to dawn on all of us that we were looking at something that we had never before seen approached in the film business.

And then came the great ride of the Clansmen. As the night riders came tearing across the picture we involuntarily began to applaud, and the noise of the little company applauding seemed so ghastly that we looked at each other sheepishly in the half dark. And yet, that was a scene that was later to be applauded by millions of people, and to-day the writer defies anyone to see the Clansmen ride without applauding it.

At the conclusion of the film we talked, and the writer agreed with Mitchell that it was the best film that the world had ever seen and that Griffith had perhaps made a national name for himself. Every one concerned in the picture, we agreed, would make a lot of money.

On February 18 the picture was shown at the White House in Washington, and the next night a number of dignitaries saw it at the National Press Club in Washington. On March 2 the picture was formally presented at the Liberty Theatre in this city, and then all of the things that we had predicted began to come true.

This was the first picture that had ever been put out as a two-dollar picture, and the wise ones who hadn't seen the picture predicted that it would fail. Those of us who knew the great human appeal in it, however, knew that it would draw great crowds at any price. But even we were fooled as to its possibilities. The Liberty Theatre was fairly besieged by the public from the moment the picture was first run there.

On December 1 "The Birth of a Nation" will have had 725 consecutive performances in this city. The longest previous consecutive run any amusement attraction ever had in this city was "A Trip to Chinatown," which played 670 times when it was first presented. Henry E. Dixey played 645 times, and "Peg o' My Heart" ran 604 times. Of course, these plays played return dates, and played more times than the figures mentioned, but "The Birth of a Nation" will do the same, and it will probably have in the neighborhood of 2,500 performances in New York City before it is

Sherman Courier Nov 7

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING SOON.

This Great Picture Will Be Shown at Sherman Opera House for Three Days.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" begins its engagement at the Sherman Opera House 3 days starting Nov. 15, two performances daily at 8:15 and 2:30 P. M.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York City where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the Civil War. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for those results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before. Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. 18,000 people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. 3000 horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil War are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battelfield is shown stretching over an area af 10 square miles and upon these planes and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the real occurence. Holding the great affects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent assunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance.

You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The South is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of ventful politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is lead into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghost garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and return the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and all over the land's misery sounds the chorus of brotherly love in an allegorical dream which visions the re-union of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

this announce

Denver Morning Republican Nov 8

Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," Sherman Opera House, 3 Days Starting Monday, November 15

Charlotte D. Observer Nov 8

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NEXT WEEK

Notable Motion Picture Drama of the South to Be Seen at Academy Half of Next Week.

So tremendous was the demand for seats for "The Birth of a Nation" during its engagement at the Academy of Music, Richmond, two weeks ago, that a special matinee was played on Saturday morning to accommodate the overflow. From the normal capacity of the theater early in the week the crowds kept swelling as the engagement progressed until, at the Thursday night and Friday performances, it became necessary to station six policemen in the lobby to quell the confusion and prevent the crowd from storming the entrance and taking possession of the theater. No such scene had ever been witnessed in a Richmond theater.

In announcing the special Saturday morning matinee, Douglas Gordon, The Times-Dispatch critic, had this to say in his column:

"Nothing is needed now to attract people to 'The Birth of a Nation;' the only difficulty is to keep them from 'rushing' the theater. In order to prevent this—and, incidentally, to make a few more millions of dollars—the management has arranged to give a special performance on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock in addition to the regular matinee at 2:30.

"To save, if possible, the manager and treasurer of the house from going screaming crazy, this column certifies that the house is literally sold out for today's matinee and the regular matinee tomorrow. The last time this column saw the ticket-rack, there appeared to be a few seats—but very few—left for tonight, and a number for the 10 o'clock performance on Saturday morning. That, however, was before 9 o'clock last night; they may have sold seats on the chandelier by the time this is printed."

The company which played to this phenomenal business in Richmond is the same one that will begin a three days' engagement at the Academy of Music, Charlotte, next Monday night. Fearing a repetition of the Richmond congestion at the Tuesday and Wednesday performances, Manager Crow urges all who can possibly do so, to attend Monday night. Owing to the importance of the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," the advance sale of seats for all performances will be on sale at the Academy box office beginning at 9 o'clock Friday morning.

Charlotte Daily Observer Nov 8

One of the Big Battle Scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," Which Will Be Seen Here at the Academy of Music for Three Days Beginning Monday, November 15th.

Newark Call Nov 7 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Coming to Newark

The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's pictorialized spectacle of the Civil War and the South during the reconstruction period, will appear at the Newark Theater for two weeks, commencing Monday, November 15. The production to be seen here will be exactly the same as the one now at the Liberty Theater, New York, including a special symphony orchestra of thirty pieces.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theater, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising" against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina Jassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of this picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce.

MAE MARSH AS FLORA CAMERON IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

In "Birth of a Nation," at the Hancock tonight.

Lee and Grant at Appomatox in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium Theatre Four Days Commencing Thursday, Nov. 11th.

HANCOCK OPERA HOUSE.

Facts About "Birth of a Nation."

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theater, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theater, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theater, Chicago, starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, New York, July 3; Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18. All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

The play contains 5000 scenes, presents 18,000 actors and 3000 horses, cost $500,000 for actual production expense and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's Theater, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5000. Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used.

A regular traveling organization of fifty people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts, to readjust the theaters to scientific focal requirements.

A complete symphonic orchestra is carried.

Wash. Times Nov 8

"The Birth of a Nation."

A well known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils or water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation." The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the land of Eutopia.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Auditorium three days, starting Thursday, Nov. 11.

Newark Evening News Nov 10

A delegation headed by Oliver Randolph, colored, a local lawyer, appeared at the Mayor's office this morning to protest against the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Newark Theater next week. The delegation was received by Mr. Moody and their protest was referred to the Board of Police Commissioners for disposition.

Wash D. C. Herald Nov 8.

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Among all the film actors playing historical characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Auditorium three days starting Thursday, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox court house, Virginia, April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated Confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the South in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the South had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseries endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9th, under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard, were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant, on the contrary, lacked his full dress and appeared in the "fatigue" and dusky jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew the nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great event.

Austin American Nov 9

HANCOCK OPERA HOUSE.

"Birth of a Nation."

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order, which gets a round of enthusiastic hand-clapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Hancock, with matinee Tuesday and Wednesday, was verified as an actual historical event by G. L. Mordecai of 174 West Eighty-sixth Street, New York, the man to whom it happened. He said:

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive block-running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. The only channel of intercourse was closed when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, and father suggested that I should try to slip through the Northern lines and thence go to New York.

"I managed to elude the Union pickets in Virginia, took stage for Washington, but I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. President Lincoln was convinced I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'on one condition: that he takes oath not to return to the Southern States during the war.'

"I desired to thank President Lincoln. On being presented to Mr. Lincoln, I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.'"

Kansas City Journal Nov 8

Grand—"The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" entered upon its third week at the Grand yesterday and the tremendous spectacle, easily the most elaborate which has yet come from the moving picture producers, thrilled large audiences at both the afternoon and evening performances. It really matters little whether the appeal of this production is frankly to the race prejudices of the audience or whether, as the producers give out, it is really founded upon historical facts. The wonderful scenes enthrall those who sit under their spell and there is plenty in them to make them attractive to Northern audiences. There is enough that is undeniably accurate and which may logically be put forward as a propaganda against war and the Ku Klux are far enough in the past not seriously to offend the whites north of Mason and Dixon's line, where lynchings are by no means unknown.

The stupendous battle scenes, the thrilling tragedy of Flora Cameron, the terrific rides of the Ku Klux and all the other huge scenes in which the production abounds will continue to hold audiences spell-bound so long as hearts are thrilled with acts of daring, with spectacles of oppression, with the awfulness of war and with the sweetness of human love. Mr. Griffith has placed before the American people an unrivaled opportunity, one of which it is the duty of all to avail themselves. With certain possible expurgations, it might be wished that the spectacle could be put before the school children of the country, at prices within their reach. If a dispassionate hearing—or technically, a seeing—of "The Birth of a Nation" could be placed before them, many lessons of vital importance would be inculcated.

Instead of a mere sketch of the surrender of Lee and the assassination of Lincoln, the salient vital lessons of the war between the states could be taught, with the obsolete crimes of reconstruction, which have no fundamental basis or place in history, made incidental. Audiences might thus get lessons they need to learn, and they would not need to cheer the "triumph" of white over black or grind their teeth in impotent indignation at the "triumph" of black over white. There is really no question of color in the mission of such a spectacle as "The Birth of a Nation" could and should be made. In the meantime, however, it is the manifest duty of all who can to avail themselves of this unexampled opportunity of seeing what will hardly be duplicated for many a long day and which is unquestionably the most signal achievement of the moving picture producer to date.

Pittsburgh Press Nov 9

MILES.

Entering upon its eleventh week in Pittsburg "The Birth of a Nation" lasts night at the Miles theater showed, as usual, to a crowded house. This wonderful moving picture with its battle scenes, its thrilling gathering of the Klu Klux Klans; its pathetic love stories, its tragical scenes of death and misery, still holds the attention of Pittsburg audiences. The music of the Miles theater orchestra helps the effectiveness of the play to a remarkably degree. Dorothy Gish, Mae Marsh, Henry Walbott and others give faithful representations of characters which lived both before and during the Civil war. The play is a high water mark of the moving picture world.

Pittsburgh Post Nov 9

MILES—"Birth of a Nation" Film.

"The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle at the Miles Theater yesterday entered the eleventh week of its prosperous Pittsburgh run. The announcement that the engagement would close Saturday, November 27, has spurred intending patrons who like to purchase their seats in advance and thereby get the choice of desirable locations. The fact that the seats are on sale for the three last weeks has already created a demand for Thanksgiving Day tickets.

When the spectacle leaves the Miles the local opportunity for seeing it will be ended, the management announces.

Sunday Call Newark Nov 7

"Birth of a Nation" Coming to Newark

"The Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's pictorialized spectacle of the Civil War and the South during the reconstruction period, will appear at the Newark Theater for two weeks, commencing Monday, November 15. The production to be seen here will be exactly the same as the one now at the Liberty Theater, New York, including a special symphony orchestra of thirty pieces.

The first half of the spectacle, which was suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," exhibits the salient events of the war between the States. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's Theater, April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpet-bagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

MAE MARSH AS FLORA CAMERON IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of this picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce.

Wash D.C. Herald Nov 9

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order, which gets a round of enthusiastic handclapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Auditorium three days starting Thursday, was verified as an actual historical event by one of the spectators. G. L. Mordecai of 174 West Eighty-sixth street is the man to whom it happened. During the New York run of the play he visited D. W. Griffith's offices and told this remarkable story:

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive blockade running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama islands. I had served in the Confederate army, but had been honorably discharged on account of sickness. My father then wanted me to go as his agent to Nassau. The only channel of intercourse was closed, however, when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, so father suggested that I should try to slip through the northern lines and thence take steamer from New York.

"In civilian dress I managed to elude the union pickets in Virginia, crossed the Potomac, took stage for Washington, but in the latter place I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. It was feared that I would be court-martialed and executed, or at best held prisoner until the close of the war. My fiancee's father, Alderman Samuel Lewis of New York, later acting Mayor, came to Washington and worked in my behalf. Notwithstanding Secretary Stanton's opposition, he succeeded in convincing President Lincoln that I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'on one condition—that he takes oath not to return to the southern states during the war.

"I gladly took this oath and was released. Before leaving for the north for my marriage and residence in Alderman Lewis' family I desired to thank President Lincoln. On being presented I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.' I have never forgotten the great president's generosity and kindheartedness to a foe, and when I saw the picture that early experience was vividly unearthed."

Wash D.C. Herald Nov 9

AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the city of Atlanta. Imagine if you can a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles, apparently between the hills. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the photograph is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea.

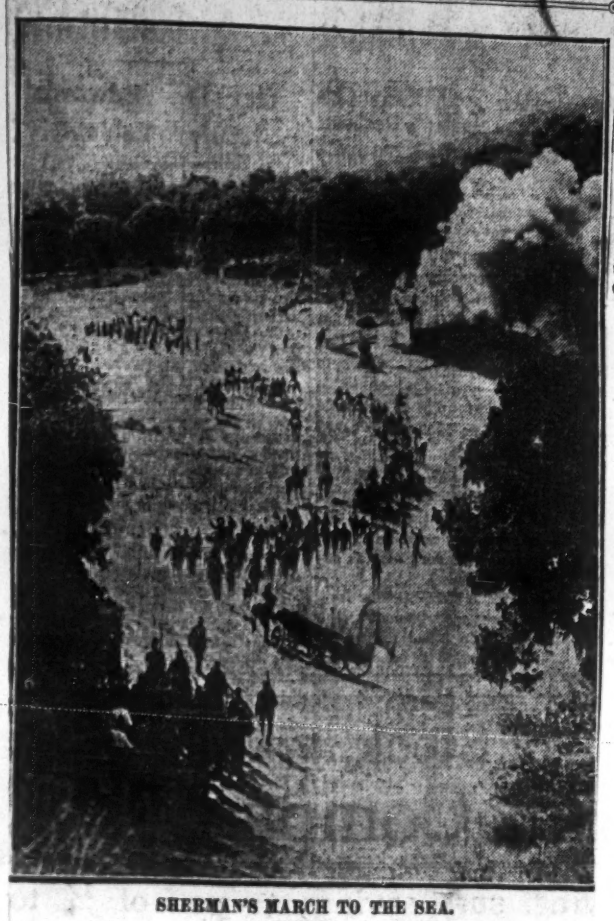
Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, chroniclers of the time fail to agree, but Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. Up the hills they rush, men, women and little children, an endless parade of misery, drear and hopelessness.

Sherman's army has cut its fearful swathe through the heart of the south. Another link has been forged in the chain that shall bind the Confederacy to the stake. Another move has been made in the big war game that is to end at Appomattox Court House with the surrender of Lee.

It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle. Auditorium three days, commencing next Thursday.

St. Louis Times Nov 7

200 of The Times Carriers at 'Birth of a Nation' Tonight



SHERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA.

Charlotte Daily Observer Nov 9

Abraham Lincoln Asking Divine Help—One of the 5,000 Scenes in "The Birth of a Nation."

TIMES CARRIERS TO SEE 'THE BIRTH OF A NATION'

Two hundred prize-winning carrier boys will see "The Birth of a Nation" at the Garrick Theater, Tuesday night, as guests of The St. Louis Times.

The entertainment will be in recognition of the work of the boys in getting new subscribers and increasing street sales of the paper.

"The Birth of a Nation," David Griffith's wonderful movie production, has been shown 145 times in St. Louis, and has been witnessed by nearly 200,000 St. Louisans.

One of its most thrilling scenes is the march of Sherman's army through Georgia to the sea at Savannah.

Charlotte D. Observer Nov 9

AMUSEMENTS

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

Joseph Henabery, the actor who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, was selected from 20 players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small but interesting detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington, April 14, 1865, but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the War President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his Cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in somber black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattox surrender the leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away!" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theater, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

Seats for the three days engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy will be placed on sale at the box office Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

Austin American Nov 10

HANCOCK.

"Birth of a Nation."

"Birth of a Nation," David Griffith's photoplay masterpiece, again thrilled, amused, aroused and soothed two capacity audiences at the Hancock Opera House yesterday afternoon and last night. The filmization is a marvel of photoplay, perfect in technique and superb in dramatic effectiveness.

Some of the most noteworthy scenes in the play were the Civil War battles, the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klans, the aftermath of the visit of carpetbaggers and the eventual restoration of peace. In no detail is the thread of the story lost. The old love theme of a Northern soldier for a Southern girl and a Southern officer for a Northern girl, with the chief obstacle in the form of the mulatto Lieutenant Governer who has been taught to believe he was socially equal to the whites, form the basis of the plot.

The photoplay abounds in realism, in perilous falls from horses, dangerous hand to hand conflicts and other numerous thrillers never before produced with so convincing effect.

The picture will be given again this afternoon and tonight.

Charlotte News Nov 11

"THE LITTLE COLONEL" leading a charge. One of the most exciting of the battle scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Wash. D. News Nov 10

Birth of a Nation Makes Decided Hit at San Antonio

In referring to "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Auditorium Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week, the San Antonio Express of November 2, says:

The "Rebel" yell crashed through the Grand Opera house last evening; the Union cheer drowned out the rumble of big guns and the crackle of infantry fire. And the Blue and the Grey arose together as one man when the "Star Spangled Banner" sounded the call to the patriotism that unifies. San Antonio greeted "The Birth of a Nation" with an ovation.

There were tears flowing unashamed and the fiercely exultant yell of victory to dash those tears away. For three hours the past unrolled, stage after stage, more the clasps of loved ones—the bleeding, heroic south, the cruelty of the "reconstruction," the bravery of both northerner and southerner, became real and clothed with warmth.

It was a wonderful evening, wonderful in several senses. In all its sunshine and peace and plenty the old south of "before the war" was re-created. The beginning of romances that the dark days to follow welded into unbreakable bonds, tempered by the fires of anguish and renunciation, came upon the screen in a manner so true that the story held the audience breathless. And no greater, no more realistic tragedy has ever been enacted than the leap to death, the only course with honor, "little Sister" took as the escape from the pursuing black.

Lincoln's Assassination.

It was one of the supreme scenes in this miracle-production of the moving picture camera. The frenzied rush of the exquisite daughter of the aristocracy from the pursuing degenerate, her slim figure hurling through space over the cliff, the birth of the Ku Klux, the vengeance—all in a swiftly moving panorama, without a flicker to tell of the mechanism—brought a sense of forgetfulness of self.

Tragedy and humor, love and hate, passion and purity, treachery and honor, the gamut of emotion and human nature was run by the genius of a film director. There is the scene of the assassination of President Lincoln in the old Ford theatre in Washington, a scene never to be forgotten by one who sees it in these pictures. It shows Lincoln in a flood of illuminating understanding, and there is something infinitely touching in the stricken tower of strength, when he crumples back in his chair before the bewildered audience and the startled players on the stage, too dazed to hold Booth as he falls from the president's box, tripping on the flag that drapes it.

The film history is well named "The Birth of a Nation." The brilliant audience at the Grand Opera house last evening sat enthralled at the unfolding of the significant passages in the dramatic development of these United States, acts of destiny performed through the medium of individuals that made the pulse to quicken, the blood to leap more freely, to course hot through the veins, to cause that tightening of the throat under the stress of emotion of the heart, and to send one away from the playhouse profoundly impressed. These pictures call forth every ounce of the patriotism that

Wash D.C. Herald Nov 10

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Art is long, says the poet, and outlasts throne of emperor. Occasionally, however, old art-ideals stay and totter to their fall, whilst a daring revolutionist seizes the scepter and remakes the world. This is exactly what David Wark Griffith, foremost of directors, is believed by many critics to have done by the production of his magnificent spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will be seen at the Auditorium for three nights and two matinees, beginning tomorrow.

Griffith had an idea that oral speech could be eliminated in great drama. He supplied the absence of words by a symphonic musical score which fits the action like a garment. Result: A new kind of grand opera—motion picture plus music plus mechanical effects—that bids fair to surpass the achievements of the dramatic stage on the one hand and the most pretentious works of operatic composers on the other.

The director put on "The Birth of a Nation," as no other filmed play—not even "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis?"—had been put on. He used half a great state for his locale; 150 years of American history as his subject; 18,000 people as his actors; 3000 riders and steeds as his cavalry; 5,000 scenes instead of a few score or a few hundred. His work dwarfed the old-fashioned stage art to such pettiness that many are wondering whether the so-called "indoor" drama is not doomed to long and possibly total eclipse.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an inspiring story of romance, love and patriotism culminating in the "times that tried men's souls," the times of Civil War and Reconstruction. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," it covers a far wider scope and imparts a vastly greater thrill. New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, crowded for many months the theatres where it was being simultaneously played.

For the first time in theatrical history a motion spectacle is being presented as a regular attraction at regular prices in regular first-class play houses. The success speaks for itself. The Griffith drama comes here with a baggage equipment of two sixty-foot cars, a complete staff including mechanical experts and stage crew, and a large symphonic orchestra regularly carried on tour company of 50 people altogether.

Lima Democrat Nov 10

Advance notices under head of "Amusements" are prepared and furnished by agents of the theatres and published by advertising arrangement with this paper.

Mae Marsh, who is "Beautiful even in tears" as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

"The Birth of a Nation."

It is a well known fact that lovers of photo plays have their favorites among the actors in the cast and rave over their cleverness and personal charm as if they were before them on the legitimate stage in actual flesh and blood.

Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron the younger daughter in the Southern household in "The Birth of a Nation, which comes to the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, by her successful appearance in many photo plays during her three years' career, has attracted by her elf like charm and naive personality, many admirers who greet with pleasure her appearance on the screen.

Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of theb rother back from the civil war; the making of "Southern ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black; the scene in the cellar with Miriam Cooper; the garden making that follows the return from the war; the Southern banquet; and the pretty scene where she rains kisses on her brother Ben's mouth to console him for temporary loss of his sweetheart Elsie. There is always a touch of comedy or of pathos where Miss Marsh appears. Her personality lends itself to fine temperamental treatment of any part she plays. Her expressive, ever changing, mood-adapting face, is one of the most valuable in all the list of film favorites.

She was discovered by David W. Griffith, the producer of many film successes, long before he made "The Birth of a Nation."

The engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy will begin Monday night and matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday. The advance sale of seats for all five performances to be given here will bep laced on sale Friday morning at the theatre boxoffice at 10 o'clock.

Pittsburgh Post Nov 10

"The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle now at the Miles Theater has attained the longest run of any entertainment in this city. In the last eight months it has been seen by 4,000,000 people throughout the United States.

Pittsburgh Press Nov 11

MILES.

"The Birth of a Nation," at the Miles theater, will begin its next to last week in this city. As previously announced, the end of this remarkable engagement, which long ago broke the record for a theatrical run here, will terminate Saturday, Nov. 27. This leaves two more weeks of opportunity for those who have not seen the most remarkable and interesting stage spectacle ever produced in this country. "The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters.

Lincoln Star Nov 10

THE BIRTH OF A NATION.

A Comedy Hit in the Picture That Is Wonderfully Pleasing to the Audiences Which See It.

A great deal of film comedy is horse-play, but David W. Griffith, in "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Newark Theater next week, proves that quiet, refined comedy is a big laugh-maker and pleases people better than the old-style crude methods.

One of the best laughs in "The Birth of a Nation" is the love-sick sentry in the hospital scene gazing at Elsie Stoneman. This particular bit is of the "sure fire" order, for never does an audience miss the rapt devotion of the sentinel and the haughty expression of the young lady rebuking him with a million-miles-away look.

Paul LeBlanc is the name of the young actor who has made the unexpected hit in the part. He is a New Orleans creole by birth and played comedy roles with Mme. Bernhardt before going out to Los Angeles, where Mr. Griffith discovered him. The costuming of the young soldier is wonderfully accurate to the period of 1864. Some of the recent Civil War portraits in the magazines and newspapers are almost doublets of this sentry figure, showing what care Griffith has used in reproducing the Civil War type.

Wash D. Times Herald Nov 10

Sherman's March to the Sea, in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Auditorium Four Days, Starting Tomorrow.

Daily Democrat Johnstown Nov 9

Birth of a Nation," Lives Up to the Advanced Reputation

If Nero had only been able to command the services of D. W. Griffith, who produced "The Birth of a Nation," the old Roman would not have been compelled to burn Rome in order to provide himself with a splendid spectacle. Griffith could have devised movie thrills that would have satisfied even a Roman tyrant.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been talked about so much and has been praised so much that the experienced theater patron goes to see it for the first time prepared to be disappointed. The feeling is that no picture could be quite as wonderful as "The Birth of a Nation" is represented to be. The film was shown at the Cambria theater yesterday afternoon and night. The production is one unique among modern hits. It lives up to its advance reputation.

In discussing the "Birth of a Nation" the temptation is to indulge in superlatives. This much is certain. The film is a revelation of what can be done with crowds, with distances, with primal human spectacles in the way of evolving a film production. Griffith works with the gigantic as skillfully as he works with the small. He is at once the Michael Angelo and the Meissonier of the moving picture world. Wholly aside from clap trap advertising and press agent nationalisms he has produced a film that will probably rank as the pinnacle in its line for years to come. At least really great pictures will be dated from the time of "The Birth of a Nation."

The incidental music is quite as clever as the setting of the various scenes. It prepares the mind for the development as it unfolds. The clarion call of the trumpet adds a note to the gallop of the clansman that is one of the most stirring bits of stagecraft that has found its way before the public during recent years.

[illegible] ed by a modern structure. [illegible] 60 be ed by a modern structure.

Griffith has throughout his spectacle struck fundamental notes. To him war is always horrible and peace the goal desired. The final scene is as eloquent in its protests against war as a Bryan peace lecture.

The fact that the Griffith who produced "The Birth of a Nation" is the same Griffith who is producing many of the Triangle productions that will shortly appear at the Cambria, gives an added interest to that series.

Daily Tribune Johnstown Nov 9

"The Birth of a Nation" a Really Marvelous Photoplay Spectacle

One might use all the adjectives Webster ever knew and then fall of an adequate description of the most remarkable of all photoplay spectacles, "The Birth of a Nation," which was witnessed by two large audiences at the Cambria Theater yesterday, and bids fair to break all attendance records today and tomorrow. The Griffith production is one that combines genius for staging with a complete knowledge of the value of effects, and the result is that audiences are fairly carried away by the action of the piece. "The Birth of a Nation" possesses every quality that a motion picture must possess to command and retain the interest of the spectator. It has action in abundance, it has thrills galore, it has pathos, and it has humor.

When Thomas Dixon, jr., wrote "The Clansman" he depicted on the printed page a condition that obtained in the South during the Civil War and the reconstruction period, during which that section of our country struggled in the throes of a great agony. The photoplay does more to enlighten the Northern mind than the book could hope to do, and in doing so it does not necessarily attack the negro race. It is made very plain that the frenzy of the negroes following the Civil War was due more largely to the machinations of the carpetbaggers from the North than to their own perverted ambitions.

The Griffith production is, with a few minor exceptions, historically accurate. The battle scenes were really marvelous, and the scenes depicting the assembling of the Ku Klux Klan and the organization's raids were thrilling to a degree rarely achieved in motion picture production.

In addition to Griffith as producer, credit must be given the splendid cast for their work in the several important roles of the photoplay.

Keystone Courier Nov 6

ORIGIN OF FOX TROT.

D. W. Griffith First Showed the Steps to a Noted Dancing Master.

The modern master of the film, like D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand this week must be a walking encyclopaedia of arts and sciences. And even then he must hire brains. When "Judith of Bethulia" was produced Griffith put a professor of archaeology at work drawing all of the dance positions of the figures in the fish dance of the Syriac tablets. Thus the dance to the fish god, after slumbering thousands of years, was revived to please the patrons of the theaters.

Next to the battle scenes and the marvelous replica of Ford's theater, Griffith took the keenest interest in the pictures of Southern life. The wizard of the film, who is himself an expert dancer, can stage and costume any kind of dance recorded in the history of that art. He was once rehearsing a performer named Earle Fox in a ballroom scene, when he struck into some funny little steps.

"There," he said to Fox, "put your name to that, take it around the country and make it and yourself famous." The player did so and that is where the Fox Trot originated.

"Dancing is the best of all exercise," says Griffith. "Did you ever stop to think that every conquering people has been a dancing people?"

Evening Telegram Nov 9

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IS MAKING HISTORY LIVE

Magnificent Photo-Play Now in the Closing Weeks of Its Triumphant Success

David W. Griffith's extraordinary achievement in his photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is that of making history live.

He has touched the high peaks of American history—the introduction of slavery, the War of Secession, the surrender at Appomattox, the death of Lincoln, the miseries of Reconstruction, and the restoration of the South to its own.

These things, it would have seemed a year ago, were beyond the motion picture camera.

The master producer had the faith of an enthusiast.

Within 12,000 feet of celluloid film he has successfully combined a thrilling, plausible and dignified presentment of national upgrowth with a real and human love story based on Thomas Dixon's book romance, "The Clansman."

Griffith has not only surpassed the art of the "indoor" theatre, but he has also developed a new art form far superior to that of the old style history or to the historical novel

The best characterization of the production so far is that of a very eminent public man who has called it "history by lightning."

Griffith employed 18,000 people in taking these historical pictures.

The battle scenes were actual duplicates of several of the Civil War conflicts, and so were the facsimiles of important events.

We see Lincoln among his counselors issuing the call for volunteers, Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, the revolver that Wilkes Booth fired, the Freedman's Bureau, the carpet-baggers in their excesses, and the thrilling rides of the Ku-Klux. The realism is almost uncanny.

"Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" marked great steps forward in the screen drama. "The Birth of a Nation" points a still more wonderful development, the old dramatic form having been thrown away and the epic or historical form substituted.

Had it not been for the daily matinees inaugurated when the season opened with the D. W. Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," it would have been impossible for the management to provide accommodation for the thousands of persons clamoring for admission.

It is hoped that through the continuance of these daily matinees in addition to the usual evening performances disappointment of those who have not yet seen this epoch-making film may be averted, but it is urged upon the theatregoer, as well as upon all those who have not yet come under the spell of "The Birth of a Nation," to arrange for early reservation of seats.

This is imperative, because of the fact that the engagement of the Griffith masterpiece will positively end on Saturday night, November 27.

Seats are still to be had two weeks in advance, but there remain only three weeks wihin which the picture may be seen in Philadelphia.

D. W. Griffith lays stress upon his declaration that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be seen except in the best theatres and at prices customarily charged for the highest grade of attractions.

"The Birth of a Nation" is stupendous in every way.

Charlotte D. Observer Nov 10

AMUSEMENTS

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Historical incidents are reproduced with such startling fidelity in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy of Music Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, that it possesses educational value beyond anything seen in a theater heretofore. The story of the South's reconstruction is re-enacted by players impersonating President Lincoln, Gen. Robert E. Lee, Gen. U. S. Grant and other great men of their period and among the incidents shown are the assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theater, Washington, the night of April 14, 1865, and the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox.

Teachers have been especially enthusiastic in recommending the spectacle to their students, as was instanced when "The Birth of a Nation" was presented in Spartanburg, S. C., recently. Dr. D. D. Wallace, professor of history and economics of Wofford College, wrote a letter to The Spartanburg Herald giving his opinion of the spectacle from the viewpoint of an educator and which read, in part, as follows:

"I believe that any man, no matter what his prominence, who had lived through the great tragedy of the war and reconstruction would understand it better for seeing 'The Birth of a Nation.' That is the service of the artist; he makes us understand life like we had not understood it before. I just thought as I sat there seeing the thrilling romance, the dramatic power, the mighty passions of men, that have made our history, how blind and dull we are to the greatness the deep springs of motive, of the life we live in. Every American is indebted to those who have made our history so vivid. Its grip will stay with me as long as I can remember.

"Of course from the standpoint of technical skill, many of the high-class pictures leave little to be desired. 'The Birth of a Nation' is wonderful in this regard. The get-up of the leading actors makes one feel as though Lee, Grant, Lincoln, Thad Stevens, Stanton, Seward, Andrew Johnsan were actually before you.

"Yes, thee are some horrible things in it; but there are some horrible things in life, and I don't know that we are going to get rid of them by pretending that they are not there. Taken all in all, it is something that no American, certainly no Southern man or woman, can afford not to see. I took the whole family except the baby, and if it comes along after she's big enough, I'll take her, too."

Seats for the five performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music will be placed on sale at the boxoffice Friday morning at 10 o'clock. The engagement will open with Monday night's performance and will continue Tuesday and Wednesday with matinees on those days at 3 o'clock.

Miriam Cooper in the quaint frock that she wears as Margaret Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Charlotte D. Observer Nov 10

THE MIRACLE MOVIE SEAT SALE OPENS

Reservations May Be Made at Box Office for This Engagement of Three Days.

Music lovers will find in the score of "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday more haunting melodies than have come to light in any musical comedy of the last 10 years excepting, perhaps, "The Merry Widow." The score is synchronized to the 5,000 scenes of the big Griffith speciacle, and it is played by an orchestra of 30—the largest symphony organization being heard on tour with any attraction this year outside of the large theatrical centers. Twenty of the musicians are carried by the company and the others are drafted from local talent.

The score runs the entire gamut of human emotion and in combination with the film, it portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the Old South, quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the War between the States. Then the first intimation of the national storm that is brewing, followed closely by the grim realism of war itself. Scene after scene or rapine and plunder, horror and desolation slips by in swift panorama and the gaunt specter of shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. Then the work of rebuilding the South, the dark days of negro supremacy, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

Quaint melodies of the South, forgotten by except the older generation; majestic strains from grand opera; light, ripping airs from the semi-classics—all are blended into a masterpiece of descriptive music running the two hours and forty minutes required for the presentation of the spectacle.

The engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music will begin next Monday night and will continue the rest of the week with matinees Tuesday and Wednesday. Seats for the entire engagement are now selling at the boxoffice. The advance sale at Hawley's drug store has been discontinued for the engagement only.

Johnstown Leader Nov 9

"Birth of a Nation" All That Was Said About It

"The Birth of a Nation" is all that the advance notices have said about it and more, this was the verdict of the two big audiences which looked upon the truly wonderful spectacle at the Cambria theater Monday.

The film is a revelation. It is filled with thrills, its war scenes are always as horrible as its protests against war are eloquent.

D. W. Griffith proves himself the Michael Angelo of the motion picture world. He has done with the great cast and the great setting he has given "The Birth of a Nation" something which probably no other living man could do.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a film that ranks as the pinnacle of its line and is likely to remain in the foremost for years to come.

The picture is one that should be seen by every school child, by every young American, by those who will be the men and women of America later on; and while on this first visit of a "Birth of a Nation," the prices are rather prohibitive for these, especially those whose parents are of limited means, there certainly must come a day when it will be possible for everyone to see it. It seems ridiculous to imagine that a wonderful spectacle such as "The Birth of a Nation" shall ever be laid aside. It cannot be forgotten. It surely must come again; and like other great plays and like great books, at reduced prices—prices that will be within the reach of all.

At the Auditorium

Confederate volunteers off for the war; scene from "The Birth of a Nation."

THEATRICS

AUDITORIUM.

Tonight.

Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," at the Auditorium the scene in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader what is no longer even a f hope he sits with bowed head of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots with trousers inside Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in his mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated southerner It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in grey who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then with military salute they part and the incident of Appomattox court house is closed.

AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen at the Auditorium three days, commencing tonight, exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities, where it has made record-breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this frame work they make those wonderful characters live again. They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great Battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across blood-stained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

Banner Seat Sale Recorded Today at the Academy of Music

Memories of the palmy days of the theatre, when the boxoffice was seldom without a line of waiting patrons and the "S. R. O." sign was never allowed to accumulate dust, were stirred by scenes of activity at the Academy of Music this morning when the seat sale for the engagement of the "Birth of a Nation" next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday opened with an unprecedented rush.

Playgoers of high and low degree took their places in the line as the sale continued through the day, making deep inroads into the tickets for the five performances to be given the company next week. The company is used advisedly because the services of fifty people are employed in each presentation. These twenty musicians in the traveling ganization, and these, with ten lo musicians, will make up the orch tra of thirty pieces to be heard each performance at the Academy.

A new standard of stage realism been set by D. W. Griffith in his spectacle of the Reconstruction, "Birth of a Nation," instead of a s company of actors he employed a of 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. staged a private war of gigantic portions and built a whole city, to destroy it afterwards by way of resentation of the burning of Atla

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," the great historical spectacle to be seen at the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1915

A SOUTHERN WOMAN PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO "BIRTH OF A NATION"

It Causes Much to Make One's Heart Ache; Much That Brings Pleasure and Happiness; Tears and Sunshine Are Well Coupled. It is a Revelation And History.

Teachers, Parents and Clubwomen of the South have been lavish in their praise of "The Birth of a Nation," the mighty spectacle which comes to the Grand next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. When the spectacle was shown in Norfolk recently, Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke wrote the following letter to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch:

"The Birth of a Nation is wonderful—Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a band of knights sent to make things work out as it was desired and none but these men could have accomplished it—There is much that makes one's heart ache: much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for resolutions adopted a short time ago by the John H. Reagan Chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus: "In indorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation' the John H. Reagan Chapter, U. D. C., feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to northerners, and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union. The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation" by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1123 Logan street, Los Angeles, acting president of the John H. Reagan Chapter.

Seats for the local engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" will be placed on sale at the opera house boxoffice next Friday morning at 9 o'clock, the usual plan of handling the sale at the Fariss-Klutz drug store having been called off for this engagement only. Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday at 2 o'clock.

WORDS INADEQUATE TO DESCRIBE GRIFFITH'S GREAT MASTERPIECE

There is no limitation to human ingenuity and endeavor, and the man who conceived the idea of photographing the historic events of the Civil war and converting them into a popular form of entertainment for a period of three hours must have a strong individuality, and a mentality that is worthy of recognition by the public at large. "The Birth of a Nation," which was presented at the Mishler theater last night, was the outgrowth of a single mind—that of David W. Griffith—whose name three or four years ago was not known beyond the confines of the small sphere in which he moved.

Wonderful as is the pictorial presentation of events that conspired to form a crisis in the history of the nation, and which culminated in a destructive internecine war, the echoes of which have scarcely died away, it is not less wonderful than the vision, the ability and the genius of its creator. "The Birth of a Nation" stands today as the crowning achievement of cinematography.

ADJECTIVES TOO FEW.

One might use all the adjectives Webster ever knew and then fall short of an adequate description of this wonderful production. It combines perfect staking with a complete knowledge of the value of effects, and the result is that spectators are fairly carried away by the action of the piece. It possesses every quality that a motion picture must have to command and retain the interest of the spectator. It has action in abundance, thrills galore, it has pathos and it has humor. Many times during last night's presentation the audience was brought up standing, thrilled by incidents that compelled the blood to leap and the emotions to run the entire gamut.

Wen Thomas Dixon, Jr., wrote "The Clansman," he depicted on the printed page a condition that obtained in the south during the Civil war and the reconstruction period, during which that section of the country struggled in the throes of a great agony. The photoplay does more to enlighten the northern mind than the book could hope to do, and in doing so it does not necessarily attack the negro race. It is made very plain that the frenzy of the negroes following the war was due more largely to the machinations of carpet baggers from the north than to their own perverted ambitions.

The Griffith production is, with a few minor exceptions, historically accurate. The battle scenes were really marvelous, and the scenes depicting the assembling of the Klu Klux Klan and the organizations raids were thrilling to a degree rarely achieved in motion picture production.

REVIEWER FAILS MISERABLY.

The reviewer who attempts to do justice to "The Birth of a Nation" will fail miserably, because there is so much to record, and especially so much of a dynamic quality, that any description in text must prove futile and inadequate. It alone would require a surpassig genius to convey an idea of the tremendous scope of one scene—a battle between the Blue and Gray armies—in which thousands of men and horses participate. And this is but one of a succession of incidents, from the declaration of war by the south, the prosecution of that struggle between brother and brother, the assassination of President Lincoln, the ruinous rule of northern adventurers and their ignorant, misguided black dupes, intoxicated with freedom for which they were wholly unfitted, and culminating with the breaking of this sinister rule by the united efforts of the outraged whites of the stricken southland.

And added to this is orchestration by a largely augmented orchestra that heightened the effect of the Griffith production, and affects that added to the realism.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be presented at the Mishler theater this afternoon and tonight, and tomorrow matinee and night. Judging by the large crowd that witnessed the initial presentation, it bids fair to make a record of attendance that will long stand in local photoplay annals.

Wash Daily Times Herald Nov 11

Battle of Petersboug in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Auditorium Three Nights commensing Today.

Charlotte Daily Observer Nov 14

Retreat of Gen. Lee's Army, as seen in "The Birth of a Nation," the great historical spectacle to be presented at the Academy of Music the first three days of next week.

Journal & Courier Nov 13

Only two weeks remain of "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's great photo-spectacle at the Liberty Theatre. It has had the longest run of any attraction ever on the stage here, and has been seen by more than 700,000 people. It has been shown at nine other places outside of New York.

N.Y. Comercial Nov 13

The final two weeks of "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty. It has been seen by 700,000 persons in New York which is far in excess of any attendance ever established during a continuous run. Ten companies are presenting the attraction in other sections.

St Louis Times Nov 13

Celebration at Garrick

Next Monday Night.

A notable achievement in the theatrical history of St. Louis will be celebrated at the Garrick Theater Monday evening, in the one hundred and fiftieth performance in this city of "The Birth of a Nation." This will mark the longest run that any attraction has ever played in St. Louis. The theater will be elaborately decorated for the occasion. The civic significance to St. Louis of a run of such duration, which represents an attendance of over 175,000 people will be recognized by the Million Population Club, under whose auspices Monday evening's performance will be given. There will be a number of distinguished guests which will include Gov. Major, Mayor Kiel, Colin M. Selph, Col. H. S. Rumsey, Charles H. Dawes, M. J. Collins, J. B. Thomas and the members of the Executive Committee of the Million Population Club.

Ev World Nov 13

"BIRTH OF A NATION" NEARS END OF RUN.

The final two weeks of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty Theatre, where this work is approaching the end of the most sensational run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York, which is far in excess of any attendance ever established during a continuous run in this city. This record is the more unusual when it is understood that ten companies are presenting the big attraction in other sections of the country.

Charlotte News Nov 13

"The Birth of a Nation" To Be Staged Here Exactly As the New York Run.

There has been some speculation as to whether "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown here with the full musical accompaniment and realistic stage effects used in New York, where many Charlotte people witnessed the big screen production. It it asserted the Griffith production will lack nothing in its local presentation of the vastness, realism and splendid artistry which made it a New York sensation. at the Academy of Music next Saturday, matinee and night, November 20. The scenes of the play are laid in a garden near Paris and in a French bathing resort, giving the girls all sorts of opportunities for picturesque costumes and lively action.

Seats will go on sale next Thursday morning at Hawley's Pharmacy.

Pittsburgh Post Nov 13

FINAL FORTNIGHT of the photo spectacle, "Birth of a Nation," at the Miles, in which Mae Marsh is a screen favorite.

Ev Herald Nov 13

"Birth of a Nation."

The final two weeks of D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty Theatre where this work is approaching the end of the most sensational run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York, which is far in excess of any attendance ever established during a continuous run in this city. This record is the more unusual when it is understood that ten companies are presenting the big attraction in other sections of the country.

Ev Sun Nov 13

LIBERTY—Only two weeks more remain of the record run for D. W. Griffith's marvellous picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which has deservedly broken all records for a run in New York.

Globe Gaz. Advertiser Nov 13

LIBERTY.—The final two weeks of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty Theatre where this work is approaching the end of the most sensational run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York.

Altoona Times

GRIFFITH'S GREAT FILM SUPERLATIVE

All Descriptions of "The Birth of a Nation" Utterly Fail to Do Credit to Film at Mishler Theatre.

It would be fatuous to attempt a description of "The Birth of a Nation," presented for the first time in Altoona last evening at the Mishler theatre. It is beyond description. There is a limitation to the power of the written word. It is reached when a critic essays to picture even feebly D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, woven with consummate skill around the greatest subject that America has to offer to the film.

It is an epic of the south, down-trodden and abused, exhausted and tortured, and a story of the south freeing itself from a menace that was worse than war. Beaten into the dust, the south refused to accept its fate Deprived of Abraham Lincoln, its kind and loving protector, it rose as one man and built for itself a new nation out of the tattered and sordid remains of what had once been the Confederacy.

It remained for one mind, that of David W. Griffith, to conceive the stupendous idea of visualizing the reconstruction of the south. He painted his scenes in bold colors. His canvas was a country for which $10,000 a day was paid so as to insure privacy. His pigments and his brushes were men and women numbering thousands, all obedient to a master will.

On the checkerboard of those stirring times he moved them hither and thither, and when it is all done out of history had come a brilliant page burned deeply on the human mind of today. No history can picture Lincoln as he was last night. No history can picture General Robert E. Lee and General U. S. Grant as they came on the screen. No history can reproduce that frightful scene at Ford theatre, Washington, when John Wilkes Booth murdered the emancipator and then leaped to the stage, crying "Sic Semper Tyrannis!"

"The Birth of a Nation" is founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman." The magnitude of Griffith's inspiration fairly takes away one's breath. He presents General Lee's last stand at Petersburg; Sherman's famous march to the sea; the death of Lincoln; the gathering of the clansmen, thousands strong, and their wild rides that struck terror into the hearts of those who would subserve the south to their own selfish interests.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a symphony in motion. Scene after scene strikes the eye like a blow. The staging of this great film is above criticism. The acting of such stars as Miss Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Miriam Cooper, Mae Marsh, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis and George Seigmann, is incomparable.

And the tender picture that Joseph Henabery drew of Abraham Lincoln brought tears to many eyes last night. His every motion was faithful to the great Lincoln. He was Lincoln reincarnated.

The special orchestra added realism to the film. The score, especially prepared for the photoplay, struck chord after chord in consonance with the action of the screen. The battle scenes and the rides of the Ku Klux Klan were worked up to a crescendo of tremendous power that brought people from their seats in responsive cheers. The Mishler has never witnessed such a triumph.

This afternoon the huge playhouse was again packed to the doors. Tonight and tomorrow, matinee and night, the wonderful film will be presented. An epoch in motion pictures has been created in Altoona. To miss "The Birth of a Nation" is to lose something that can never be regained.

A special performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will be given Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. This is being arranged especially for the school children of the city and county and those who are unable to attend in the afternoon or evening.

The Birth Of A Nation In Poetry, Art And Acting

By David W. Griffith

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

MOST remarkable of recent changes in the theatre has been the appearance of "kings that knew not Joseph"; of sceptres seized from dying dynasties and wielded by new hands; of rulers with Aladdin - like fortunes who dash from coast to coast, build transitory cities, engage and dissolve armies overnight and create ephemeral enterprises—all to make an American holiday—beside the magnitude of which much historical pioneering and concoction of actual events seem but child's play.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement kings—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Wark Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision animating Griffith undoubtedly comes from some obscure Welsh bardic strain.

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The Birth of a Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the plot. In this case there was a previous stage play. If we are wise, we forget that as much as we can, for the motion picture is a novelizing or story-telling form, not strictly a dramatic form. Then comes the research work—the reading of books, the study of pictures, the getting of atmosphere and color. Then comes the selection of types and the casting of characters. Then comes the rehearsing, for we have no 'stars,' but only actors and actresses who must sink their personalities into the general ensemble. Then comes the building of sets, the designing of costumes, the working out of detail. Then comes the actual taking of the picture, the interminable 'retakes' of scenes that are not quite right, the cutting and assembling of the negative, the scoring for the orchestra, the writing of the descriptive titles, the cutting and assembling of the positive, the incessant skirmishing with the National Board of Censorship, the exhibiting of the picture to audiences, the cutting and changing according to audience reaction, the issuing of state rights, the booking of road companies, the exploitation, the lithographing, the billboarding, the newspaper publicity, the magazine publicity, the lectures, the receipts, the checking of accounts, the auditing of books, the—"

"Stop!" I begged. "Isn't there any rest for you after the picture is finished?"

"Rest? Rest? Why, man, I'm working on the next picture already!"

"Is it true that you have had to build whole cities for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we built the city of Washington, D. C., as it was during the sixties, and in 'Intolerance' we built Babylon, the Judean hills, Jerusalem, Calvary, and the Court of Heaven. Then we destroyed them all by fire."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan, the Confederate army, the Union army, the Northern and Southern civilians, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian army, the Persian army, the Judean army, the Roman army, the Gallic army, the Huguenots, the Court of Heaven, and the Modern army."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of horses for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan horses, the Confederate cavalry horses, the Union cavalry horses, the Northern and Southern civilian horses, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian horses, the Persian horses, the Judean horses, the Roman horses, the Gallic horses, the Huguenot horses, the Court of Heaven horses, and the Modern horses."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of dogs for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan dogs, the Confederate army dogs, the Union army dogs, the Northern and Southern civilian dogs, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian dogs, the Persian dogs, the Judean dogs, the Roman dogs, the Gallic dogs, the Huguenot dogs, the Court of Heaven dogs, and the Modern dogs."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of cats for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan cats, the Confederate army cats, the Union army cats, the Northern and Southern civilian cats, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian cats, the Persian cats, the Judean cats, the Roman cats, the Gallic cats, the Huguenot cats, the Court of Heaven cats, and the Modern cats."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of rats for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan rats, the Confederate army rats, the Union army rats, the Northern and Southern civilian rats, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian rats, the Persian rats, the Judean rats, the Roman rats, the Gallic rats, the Huguenot rats, the Court of Heaven rats, and the Modern rats."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of mice for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan mice, the Confederate army mice, the Union army mice, the Northern and Southern civilian mice, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian mice, the Persian mice, the Judean mice, the Roman mice, the Gallic mice, the Huguenot mice, the Court of Heaven mice, and the Modern mice."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of elephants for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan elephants, the Confederate army elephants, the Union army elephants, the Northern and Southern civilian elephants, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian elephants, the Persian elephants, the Judean elephants, the Roman elephants, the Gallic elephants, the Huguenot elephants, the Court of Heaven elephants, and the Modern elephants."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of camels for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan camels, the Confederate army camels, the Union army camels, the Northern and Southern civilian camels, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian camels, the Persian camels, the Judean camels, the Roman camels, the Gallic camels, the Huguenot camels, the Court of Heaven camels, and the Modern camels."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of kangaroos for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan kangaroos, the Confederate army kangaroos, the Union army kangaroos, the Northern and Southern civilian kangaroos, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian kangaroos, the Persian kangaroos, the Judean kangaroos, the Roman kangaroos, the Gallic kangaroos, the Huguenot kangaroos, the Court of Heaven kangaroos, and the Modern kangaroos."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of giraffes for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan giraffes, the Confederate army giraffes, the Union army giraffes, the Northern and Southern civilian giraffes, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian giraffes, the Persian giraffes, the Judean giraffes, the Roman giraffes, the Gallic giraffes, the Huguenot giraffes, the Court of Heaven giraffes, and the Modern giraffes."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of zebras for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan zebras, the Confederate army zebras, the Union army zebras, the Northern and Southern civilian zebras, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian zebras, the Persian zebras, the Judean zebras, the Roman zebras, the Gallic zebras, the Huguenot zebras, the Court of Heaven zebras, and the Modern zebras."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of monkeys for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan monkeys, the Confederate army monkeys, the Union army monkeys, the Northern and Southern civilian monkeys, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian monkeys, the Persian monkeys, the Judean monkeys, the Roman monkeys, the Gallic monkeys, the Huguenot monkeys, the Court of Heaven monkeys, and the Modern monkeys."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of apes for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan apes, the Confederate army apes, the Union army apes, the Northern and Southern civilian apes, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian apes, the Persian apes, the Judean apes, the Roman apes, the Gallic apes, the Huguenot apes, the Court of Heaven apes, and the Modern apes."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of baboons for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan baboons, the Confederate army baboons, the Union army baboons, the Northern and Southern civilian baboons, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian baboons, the Persian baboons, the Judean baboons, the Roman baboons, the Gallic baboons, the Huguenot baboons, the Court of Heaven baboons, and the Modern baboons."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of gorillas for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan gorillas, the Confederate army gorillas, the Union army gorillas, the Northern and Southern civilian gorillas, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian gorillas, the Persian gorillas, the Judean gorillas, the Roman gorillas, the Gallic gorillas, the Huguenot gorillas, the Court of Heaven gorillas, and the Modern gorillas."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of orangutans for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan orangutans, the Confederate army orangutans, the Union army orangutans, the Northern and Southern civilian orangutans, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian orangutans, the Persian orangutans, the Judean orangutans, the Roman orangutans, the Gallic orangutans, the Huguenot orangutans, the Court of Heaven orangutans, and the Modern orangutans."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of chimpanzees for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan chimpanzees, the Confederate army chimpanzees, the Union army chimpanzees, the Northern and Southern civilian chimpanzees, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian chimpanzees, the Persian chimpanzees, the Judean chimpanzees, the Roman chimpanzees, the Gallic chimpanzees, the Huguenot chimpanzees, the Court of Heaven chimpanzees, and the Modern chimpanzees."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of gibbons for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan gibbons, the Confederate army gibbons, the Union army gibbons, the Northern and Southern civilian gibbons, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian gibbons, the Persian gibbons, the Judean gibbons, the Roman gibbons, the Gallic gibbons, the Huguenot gibbons, the Court of Heaven gibbons, and the Modern gibbons."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of siamangs for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan siamangs, the Confederate army siamangs, the Union army siamangs, the Northern and Southern civilian siamangs, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian siamangs, the Persian siamangs, the Judean siamangs, the Roman siamangs, the Gallic siamangs, the Huguenot siamangs, the Court of Heaven siamangs, and the Modern siamangs."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of lemurs for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan lemurs, the Confederate army lemurs, the Union army lemurs, the Northern and Southern civilian lemurs, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian lemurs, the Persian lemurs, the Judean lemurs, the Roman lemurs, the Gallic lemurs, the Huguenot lemurs, the Court of Heaven lemurs, and the Modern lemurs."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of tarsiers for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan tarsiers, the Confederate army tarsiers, the Union army tarsiers, the Northern and Southern civilian tarsiers, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian tarsiers, the Persian tarsiers, the Judean tarsiers, the Roman tarsiers, the Gallic tarsiers, the Huguenot tarsiers, the Court of Heaven tarsiers, and the Modern tarsiers."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of aye-ayes for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan aye-ayes, the Confederate army aye-ayes, the Union army aye-ayes, the Northern and Southern civilian aye-ayes, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian aye-ayes, the Persian aye-ayes, the Judean aye-ayes, the Roman aye-ayes, the Gallic aye-ayes, the Huguenot aye-ayes, the Court of Heaven aye-ayes, and the Modern aye-ayes."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of potoroos for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan potoroos, the Confederate army potoroos, the Union army potoroos, the Northern and Southern civilian potoroos, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian potoroos, the Persian potoroos, the Judean potoroos, the Roman potoroos, the Gallic potoroos, the Huguenot potoroos, the Court of Heaven potoroos, and the Modern potoroos."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of bandicoots for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan bandicoots, the Confederate army bandicoots, the Union army bandicoots, the Northern and Southern civilian bandicoots, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian bandicoots, the Persian bandicoots, the Judean bandicoots, the Roman bandicoots, the Gallic bandicoots, the Huguenot bandicoots, the Court of Heaven bandicoots, and the Modern bandicoots."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of wombats for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan wombats, the Confederate army wombats, the Union army wombats, the Northern and Southern civilian wombats, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian wombats, the Persian wombats, the Judean wombats, the Roman wombats, the Gallic wombats, the Huguenot wombats, the Court of Heaven wombats, and the Modern wombats."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of koalas for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan koalas, the Confederate army koalas, the Union army koalas, the Northern and Southern civilian koalas, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian koalas, the Persian koalas, the Judean koalas, the Roman koalas, the Gallic koalas, the Huguenot koalas, the Court of Heaven koalas, and the Modern koalas."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of kangaroo rats for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan kangaroo rats, the Confederate army kangaroo rats, the Union army kangaroo rats, the Northern and Southern civilian kangaroo rats, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian kangaroo rats, the Persian kangaroo rats, the Judean kangaroo rats, the Roman kangaroo rats, the Gallic kangaroo rats, the Huguenot kangaroo rats, the Court of Heaven kangaroo rats, and the Modern kangaroo rats."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of kangaroo mice for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan kangaroo mice, the Confederate army kangaroo mice, the Union army kangaroo mice, the Northern and Southern civilian kangaroo mice, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian kangaroo mice, the Persian kangaroo mice, the Judean kangaroo mice, the Roman kangaroo mice, the Gallic kangaroo mice, the Huguenot kangaroo mice, the Court of Heaven kangaroo mice, and the Modern kangaroo mice."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of kangaroo dogs for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan kangaroo dogs, the Confederate army kangaroo dogs, the Union army kangaroo dogs, the Northern and Southern civilian kangaroo dogs, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian kangaroo dogs, the Persian kangaroo dogs, the Judean kangaroo dogs, the Roman kangaroo dogs, the Gallic kangaroo dogs, the Huguenot kangaroo dogs, the Court of Heaven kangaroo dogs, and the Modern kangaroo dogs."

"Is it true that you have had to train whole armies of kangaroo cats for your productions?"

"Yes, in 'The Birth of a Nation' we had to train the Ku Klux Klan kangaroo cats, the Confederate army kangaroo cats, the Union army kangaroo cats, the Northern and Southern civilian kangaroo cats, and in 'Intolerance' we had to train the Babylonian kangaroo cats, the Persian kangaroo cats, the Judean kangaroo cats, the Roman kangaroo cats, the Gallic kangaroo cats, the Huguenot kangaroo cats, the Court of Heaven kangaroo cats, and the Modern kangaroo cats

Altoona Tribune Nov. 14

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" MARVEL OF MOVIE WORLD

David W. Griffith's Historical Spectacle Thrills Great Audience at Mishler

A SPECIAL SATURDAY MORNING MATINEE

"The Birth of a Nation," that magnificent marvel of the moving picture world, that spectacular animated photodrama of Civil war days, has at least reached Altoona. An audience that filled the Mishler theatre witnessed the initial presentation last night and those that composed it no longer marvel at people paying $2 to view the production. It will be presented twice today, afternoon and evening, and three times Saturday with presentations morning, afternoon and evening.

D. W. GRIFFITH

Producer of the mammoth spectacle, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," at the Mishler for three evenings starting Thursday, and Friday and Saturday matinees.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been talked and read about by the Altoona theatregoers for the past year. The first thing that spread over the country was the price of admission and then came news of its grandeur, its thrilling scenes and its fascinating story. When the announcement was made by Manager Mishler that it was coming there was a general feeling of gladness among the theatregoers and among other classes of people. The opening of the box office brought a new class of people for seats and from indications the three day's engagement will not be long enough to give all who will want to view the magnificent spectacle.

The picture is really a marvel of dramatic art and photography. It crowds practically the entire Civil war into the space of two and a half hours. The onlooker is hurried into the southland when war was declared to witness its devastation and horrors, is carried with Sherman on his march to the sea, right up to Atlanta, is privileged to witness the battle before Petersburg, and finally the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox Court House. These scenes are marked with thrilling events, marvelous in their great dramatic features and of a character that cause the blood to flow with a tingle of patriotism and bring forth stirring applause. Thousands of men and horses are seen in action in warfare and so realistic are the scenes presented that the onlooker can fairly hear the whizz of the bullets, the thunder of cannonading and the cheering of the fighting armies as they course back and forth over the battle grounds. They are scenes that are presented more forceful than history can tell.

The assassination of President Lincoln as he was viewing a performance at the Ford theatre by John Wilkes Booth, is one of realism. It held the audience spell-bound just as the act itself must have held the audience that witnessed it. Then follows the reconstruction of the south and the scenes presented are just as thrilling as those that preceded it. The "Klu Klux Klan," that organization that played a prominent part in the years immediately after the war, is presented in a manner as to portray the conditions that must have existed if history tells the truth.

Griffith's wonder drama deserves all that has been written and said of it. It is a marvelous production from its beginning to its end. It repeats history in a manner that is most thrilling. It is wonderful.

There is a pleasing story presented in connection with the play. It is one that centres around the Stonemans of the north and Camerons of the south. It shows sons of the families leading regiments in battle and it shows the daughters at home during the bitter strife. It sees one after another of the Cameron boys give their lives for the cause until there is but one left, "Little Ben," the school chum of Phil Stoneman, of the north. They meet in battle, they meet after the strife and they meet again at the altar when they marry each others' sisters and go off on their joyous honeymoon, uniting north and south in bonds that cannot be severed.

The demands for tickets for "The Birth of a Nation" has been such in the past forty-eight hours that Manager Mishler foresaw that there would be many school children who would not get the opportunity of viewing the historical movie production. To give them a chance he will present the production especially for their benefit Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at an admission fee of 25 cents.

Charlotte D Observer Nov 13

COUNTRY ACCLAIMS "THE MIRACLE MOVIE"

Big U. D. C. Organization in Los Angeles, Cal., Adopts Resolutions, Here Next Week,

Teachers, parents and clubwomen of the South have been lavish in their praise of "The Birth of a Nation" the mighty spectacle which comes to the

MAE MARSH
Who has endeared herself to millions as Flora Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Academy of Music next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday when the spectacle was shown in Norfolk recently, Mrs. Frank, Anthony Walke wrote the following letter to The Norfolk Ledger Dispatch:

"The Birth of a Nation" is wonderful! Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a brand of knights sent to make things work out as it was desired and none but these men could have accomplished it. There is much that makes one's heart ache: much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for in resolutions adopted a short time before, the members of the John H. Reagan Chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus: "In endorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation,' the John H. Reagan Chapter, U. D. C., feels great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to Northerners, and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union." The resolutions were forwaded to D. W. Griffith, producer of the "The Birth of a Nation" by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1128 Logan street, Los Angeles, acting president of the John R. Reagan Chapter.

Seats for the engagement of "The Birth of Nation" are now selling fast at the Academy box office for all five performances to be given here.

Variety, Nov. 12-1915

MILES (Wm. Patch, mgr.).—"The Birth of A Nation." Monday was its 118th appearance in Pittsburgh.

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novellists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my war picture, for the near view of hitez drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point is that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvellous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young, may be entirely revolutionized by its strange-ly new processes." picture play was laid out in facts, strict unity of time and place being always observed, the same sized figures shown in an unvarying time sequence of a single action.

"I remember what a sensation I caused in the old Biograph studios, in Fourteenth Street, when I invented the 'close-up' figures.

"That will never do at all,' objected the proprietor. 'The actors look as if they were swimming—you can't have them float on, without legs or bodies!' But I persisted, and had my way, though it was alleged that the audiences always knocked disapproval with their feet whenever the 'close-ups' were exhibited. Today the 'close-up' is essential to every motion picture, for the near view of

STAGE CAREFULLY SET FOR A MOVIE DRAMA"

"And now South Carolina in Reconstruction days is measurably before our eyes. Elsewhere the battlegrounds of the Civil War are springing into being, helped by expert advice of old 'vets' and modern West Pointers. The costumes, settings and documents laboriously prepared for the facsimile historical scenes like those of the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Lincoln assassi-

Enc World Nov 13

SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" LIBERTY THEATRE

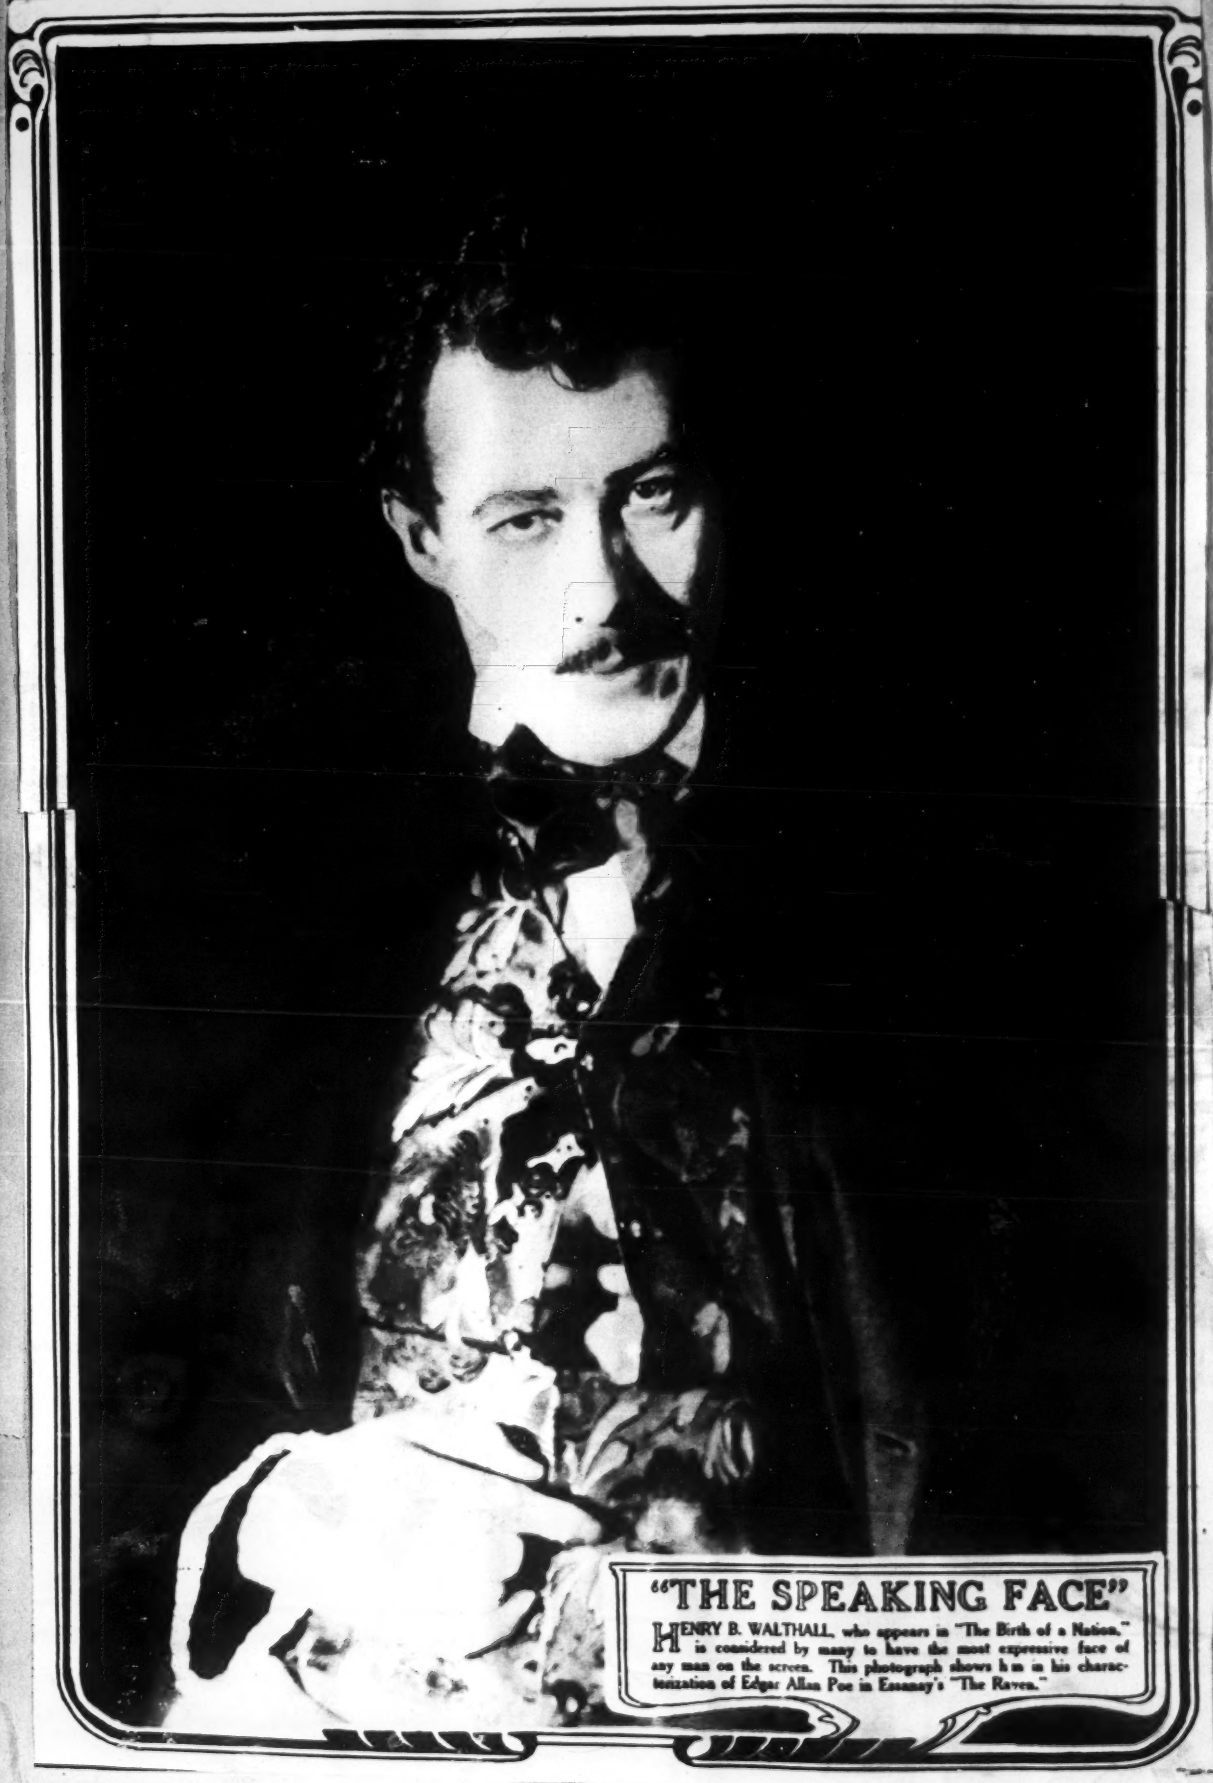
Greensboro Daily News, Nov. 10 & 1915

THE BIRTH OF A NATION TWICE CROWDS THEATER

Wonderful Film Witnessed by Hundreds Yesterday—Last Two Exhibitions Today.

Two capacity audiences witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand yesterday afternoon and last evening and nothing but wonderment at the massiveness of the epoch making film was to be heard on every side. The film is adjudged by Greensboro people, hundreds of whom have witnessed it, to be all and even more than advance notices claimed and there is no doubt but that two packed houses will witness the final showings this afternoon and tonight.

"The Birth of a Nation" is an appeal, a powerful one, for the abolition of war. The appeal is made in a forceful manner that might be termed as horrible, if the appeal did not strike home. By holding up the horrors of conflict, the makers of the picture sought to emphasize the blessings of peace at all times.



"THE SPEAKING FACE"

HENRY B. WALTHALL, who appears in "The Birth of a Nation," is considered by many to have the most expressive face of any man on the screen. This photograph shows him in his characterization of Edgar Allan Poe in Essanay's "The Raven."

Pittsburgh Press Nov 14

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION,"
At the Miles.

this announcement

ORCHESTRA OF THIRTY HERE WITH PICTURE

"The Birth of a Nation" Photodrama Attracting Much Comment—Big Crowds Coming.

It is expected that the box office of the Academy of Music will be a busy spot tomorrow morning when seats are placed on sale for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The sale will open at 10 o'clock.

The extent of local interest in the coming of the big Griffith spectacle has been a surprise even to the Academy management. Mail orders have been received from towns 75 miles distant and there have been many inquiries by long distance telephone as to the prices, time of performances and other details of the engagement. As the spectacle is being shown only in the important cities, due partly to the inadequate facilities in the smaller towns, it means a long journey for many people who are determined not to miss seeing it.

Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday, making five performances in all, and tickets for the whole engagement will be on sale at the box office from tomorrow until Wednesday, Sunday excepted. On account of the importance of the engagement and the fact that an unusual rush is expected, Manager Crovo will conduct the sale at the theater box office.

While "The Birth of a Nation" has broken all records in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago and other cities of the North, there is an especially good reason why it appeals strongly to Southerners. As most playgoers know, it is a mighty film drama taken from "The Clansman," but so thoroughly dwarfing the Dixon story and play that there is no comparison. D. W. Griffith employed 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses and used the great outdoors as his stage when he made his production.

A symphony orchestra of 30 accompanies the spectacle throughout the two hours and 40 minutes that it runs.

The Austin Statesman Nov 9-1915

"Birth of a Nation" Is Worth the Price

It costs $2 for the best seats in the Hancock Opera House to see "The Birth of a Nation," and this photoplay is worth the price charged. It is a film production that is true to the title. It depicts with a graphic hold events that were lived during a time when the hour of travail came to the United States. The days of reconstruction are thrown upon the canvas and the blood runs riot at the sight, for memories arise that sway the emotions.

It is not necessary to attempt to follow the plot of the screen play. It is of polyplot. There is not a minute when the eyes are not alert to catch the next move. A story is told without words, but it is a story of such lasting value that it is indelibly implanted.

And then again there is no partisanship in an offensive way displayed in the picture. Carpetbagger and camp follower are held up to the scorn they merited, while the renegade men and scalawags who deserted the South in the hour of her peril receive treatment no less severe. It takes a master mind for fairness to work out the details of this play as to be just to all in the manner that has been done.

No man who loves the history of his country can afford to miss this production. It tells more in three hours and tells it vividly and truthfully than can be learned by reading histories during the whole of a year, and the lesson that this play teaches is one that is inspiring in theme and is ennobling in effect. In these times of experimentation in governmental matters too little regard, it would seem, is occasionally paid to what has been learned at a great cost by those who have gone before. It was during the reconstruction days that all power came from a central point a great distance away. Local influences did not avail with those who were sent to make the South a Gethsemane for the people who lived there. Right, as it were, was born of might and might intended to hew to the line mapped out, though the heavens should fall.

But those who planned the crushing things failed to reckon with the blood that had been made ready for defense by the four years of warfare. There sprung up of necessity ways of combatting the forces of evil that had to depend upon ingenuity rather than upon brute force. Nor can one look at "The Birth of a Nation" without feeling that those who had fought beneath the winning flag had not abandoned their honor and their regard for fairness when the last battle flag was furled. Men who were bred as gentle folk and had lived as gentlemen joined hands with those who in the yesterday had been gallant foes upon battlefield and did their full part toward eradicating the evils of absent government.

But the story of the play is too replete with telling chapters to permit its being told here. It is worth $2 to see. It will give more than than amount of satisfaction to those who see it.

The Wonderful Production, "The Birth of a Nation," To Be Seen Here Tomorrow.

D. W. Grimth's historic spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will begin its widely-heralded engagement at the Academy of Music tomororw night and the advance sale indicates a period of capacity business for the playhouse. Strong local interest has been displayed in the offering, pjrobably because it is a film-and-music version of "The Clansman." Douglas Gordon, the Richmond Times-Dispatch play reviewer, described it as a theatrical offering that no Southerner can witness "without a lump in his throat and a glow of undying pride in heart."

Matinees are to be given Tuesday and Wednesday, making five performances in all, but Manager Crovo is warning his patrons not to wait for the final performances. Wherever the spectacle has been shown hundreds have been turned away on the last day. Those who can arrange to attend tomorrow night's performance can insure their own comfort and aid the manager in minimizing congestion by so doing.

While "The Birth of a Nation" is sometimes characterized as a motion picture, it is vastly more than that. The services of 50 people are employed in each presentation of the spectacle and one of the strong factors in its popularity is its elaborate musical score, played by a symphony orchestra of 30 men. Twenty of these are carried by the company and the others are recruited from the ranks of local artists. Then, too, the stage effects are an important part of the offering. A whole car load of special "sound effects" are carried by the company.

Griffith built his production upon Thomas Dixon's story of the reconstruction, "The Clansman," but he employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses. He used the great outdoors for his stage and it was in the reproduction of great battles of the war between the states that he demonstrated his almost uncanny skill.

While planning the Battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClelland on the Potomac. Like them, he had National Guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a subdirector.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone switchboard. From it field wires ran to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field telephones in Civil war time.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or Von Kluck, Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spick and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags, even, have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly war, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers.

It is hard, gruelling, continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the handgripe of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the Battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions.

The final two weeks of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty Theatre, where this work is approaching the end of the most sensational run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York, which is far in excess of any attendance ever established during a continuous run in this city. This record is the more unusual when it is understood that ten companies are presenting the big attraction in other sections of the country.

The picture shows which are still to be seen are: "The Birth of a Nation," which will begin to-morrow the last three weeks of its successful run at the Liberty Theatre.

Birth of a Nation' Griffith's Best

THE evolution of the dramatic spectacle is shown in many ways in the wonderful success of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," now approaching the end of the longest consecutive run ever played by a dramatic entertainment on the New York stage.

One forceful illustration of the bigness of theme and handling behind this epic narrative is the relationship of prominent historical characters to the story. Think of a plot and dramatic action so large that personages of historical renown become mere lay figures in the story.

This is the case of "The Birth of A Nation." Early in its action President Lincoln is seen at a cabinet meeting signing the first call for 75,000 Union volunteers. Clustered about the great leader of those strenuous times can be seen Secretary Seward and other members of the cabinet including Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War Stanton, and at the President's elbow was his then private secretary, John Hay, who afterwards became one of our great diplomats and also a literary light of America. These figures are only seen for a few fleeting seconds and do not arouse any great furore owing to the swiftness of the action Griffith has worked into his story.

Heretofore a drama with Lincoln as a character in it would have been built around his personal characteristics to the overshadowing of other effects. The same would have been true of men like Lee and Grant, but this great story traverses so swiftly over such a wide field of history that the character figures are merely incidental details. Though great care and much study was devoted to having these details made lifelike these facts are overlooked in the rush and sweep of the entire drama. It requires a pretty big story to overshadow such dominant figures of history, and the fact that audiences nightly are thrilled by this great drama without undue attention being paid to the moving characters in the story who have stepped from history's pages to give reality to the total effects sought is the surest evidence of its power.

The final two weeks of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty Theatre, where this work is approaching the end of the most sensational run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York, which is far in excess of any attendance ever established during a continuous run in this city. This record is the more unusual when it is understood that ten companies are presenting the big attraction in other sections of the country.

The final two weeks of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is in sight at the Liberty Theatre, where this work is approaching the end of the most sensational run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York, which is far in excess of any attendance record heretofore established during a continuous run in this city. This record is the more unusual when it is understood that ten companies are presenting the big attraction in other sections of the country.

Liberty.

The last two weeks of "The Birth of a Nation" begin to-day in the Liberty Theatre, where this work is approaching the end of the longest run ever known to the local stage. It has been seen by over 700,000 people in New York, which is said to be far in excess of any attendance ever established during a continuous run in this city.

MILES.

Tomorrow afternoon "The Birth of a Nation," at the Miles theater, will mark the twelfth week of its record-breaking engagement in this city and it will also mark the beginning of the last two weeks of its engagement here, for its stay is scheduled to cease on Saturday, Nov. 27. As the policy of the Griffith management is not to re-book a city after the original engagement has been finished, the next two weeks offer the only opportunities to see the justly famous spectacle in Pittsburg. "The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the usual conventional stage play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march to the sea and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh, radical policy of the stricken south; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpet-bagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

TOWN TALK

TTLE SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT E NEWARK THEATRE NEXT WEEK.

or leaders and titles) did not enter nto it. He replaced speech by mu-ic, and the old-fashioned stage ac-ion and scenery by the pictorialized ction of thousands of players in the reat Out-of-Doors. In brief, he taged the great battles, struggles nd critical events of 1861-'70 under months at the Liberty Theatre, New York. After Monday there will be daily matinees, and the usual house prices will prevail.

LIBERTY THEATRE — NOW PLAYING TWICE DAILY, INC. SUNDA — 42nd St. West of B'way, Night & Sat. Mat. 25c to $2.00, Other Mats. 25c to $1.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S GIGANTIC SPECTACLE

18,000 People

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

3,000 Horses

Cost $500,000

Took 8 Months To Produce

Has been seen by thousands of Educators and endorsed as the Greatest Illustration of a Stirring Period of Our National Growth.

A Gripping Epic which Reveals History in the making by means of a new form of Art Expression.

Many Teachers have written Mr. Griffin he has made their work easier.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

"The Birth of A Nation" is probably the most remarkable series of moving pictures depicting scenes of an American character that have been revealed in this country. The moving picture is a new art and has come to stay as a form of entertainment and as moving pictures showing scenes in the South before the civil war, battles and the raids of the Klu-Klux-Klan, "The Birth of A Nation" is a unique entertainment and will interest many teachers if they do not take the historical and political idea of Thomas Dixon too seriously. But in fairness to him it ought to be added that he presents what he believes to be a fair view. "The Birth of A Nation" is an improvement on the Southern histories of the Civil War. It glorifies Lincoln and reflects the idea that is growing in the South that his assassination was the worst thing that could have happened to the South. But the representation of Thad Stevens in the person of the brutal Stoneman, affronts the Union people who cherish his work and memory. Dixon wisely closes his scenes with pictures of the negroes at Hampton to give the impression that the best sentiment of the South now favors industrial training for the negro, and that tends to mitigate the effect of the pictures of "the carpet bag" negroes he presents.

But as a spectacle "The Birth of A Nation" is stirring and compels one to wonder what the possibilities of the moving picture may be. In this respect the spectacle is a wonderful work, however grim some of the scenes are. The battles were managed with superlative skill, as were the rides of the Klu-Klux Klan. The spectators applause no matter what their sympathies may be. "The Birth of A Nation" was adapted from Dixon's play "The Clansman" which he wrote in collaboration with William T. Price, the pastmaster of dramatic technique. "The Birth of A Nation" is at the Liberty Theatre for an indefinite period and is attracting crowds day and night.

Birth of a Nation Will Continue Over Sunday in Waco

Because of the immense sale of seats and, in consequence, the inability of many to see the production, the "Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Auditorium, will extend its engagement over Sunday. Tickets may be secured now for Sunday matinee and night.

The "Birth of a Nation," is having a most remarkable run in Waco. People from the entire Waco trade territory have been here to witness this marvelous production and climax of photo-acting. The production especially appeals because of its historic value. The pictures re-enact the epochal scenes in American history and with a vividness of movement and accuracy and loyalty to detail that is an exact counterpart of the original stirring events.

Of particular interest are the pictures to Southerners. The chief incidents of the Civil war period and the gloomy reconstruction days immediately following are featured. Battles in which the most glorious American heroism was performed, meetings and operations of the South's mysterious and relentless Ku Klux Klan and other stirring scenes of famous men and events.

Charlotte News 7oct17

THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG

Eighteen thousand men and 3,000 horses are seen in this reproduction of the conflict at the crater in "The Birth of a Nation," the big Griffith spectacle which begins an engagement of 3 days at the Academy of Music tomorrow night.

Augusta Chronicle Nov 12

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" GIVEN INDORSEMENT BY DR. WALLACE

"Stupendousness of the Thing Perhaps Stands Out Above Eveything Else," Says That College Professor—What Dr. Tillinghast Says of It.

Although "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown only in the most important cities of the South, D. W. Griffith has included a few college towns in the route of the company booked to appear at the Grand next Thursday, Friday and Saturday so that students may avail themselves of the educational value which the spectacle undoubtedly possesses. One of the smaller cities thus favored was Spartanburg, S. C., where two of the oldest institutions in the South, Wofford college and Converse college, are located.

Comments upon the spectacle were sought by the Spartanburg Herald from the professors of history at the two colleges and both praised it enthusiastically. Their statements follow:

Dr. D. W. Wallace, Wofford college: "The stupendousness of the thing perhaps stands out above everything else. I was very much in the same state of mind as a prominent minister who sat near me; he seemed unable to believe that he had actually seen what he had. It seemed impossible that such a stupendous drama could have been placed within the four walls of a house. I was swept along on the mighty current of the years from 1860 to 1876 with mind and emotions at such a pitch that I feel like I need a rest.

"I believe that any man, no matter what his prominence, who had lived through the great tragedy of the war and reconstruction, would understand it better for seeing 'The Birth of a Nation.' Taken all in all it is something that no American, certainly no southern man or woman, can afford not to see. I took the whole family except the baby and if it comes along after she's big enough, I'll take her, too."

Dr. J. A. Tillinghast, Converse college. "It is a wonderful achievement, undoubtedly, as an effort to show us in vivid panorama the drama that once was going on in stern reality among us, with a mixture of emotions, purposes, hopes, sacrifices, revenges, romance, a drama upon which the curtain fell so long ago that now few survive who saw it to remember it. The effort to tell this story in pictures, accompanied by music, as the constant reminder of many things that melody serves curiously to keep alive in us, is an effort probably reaching the summit in moving picture art.

"I am moved to say a word about it in this public manner for fear too many young people, knowing far too little of their country's history, and not likely to learn it from books, may miss this opportunity to learn a good deal that they will not soon forget. They may miss it merely for lack of understanding what it is. I feel since seeing it that all who can possibly afford to see it should do so."

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS, SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1915

'Birth of a Nation" Opens a Three Days Engagement Here Tomorrow

Newark N J Nov 13

TOWN TALK

ONE OF THE BATTLE SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE NEXT WEEK.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Liberty Theatre Film Success Booked for Newark Theatre Next Week.

If legal tangles and police board interference are overcome, Newarkers will have an opportunity next week to see "The Birth of a Nation." Manager Robbins has booked D. W. Griffith's great American play for two weeks at the Newark Theatre, and because the director picked suggestions for his theme from Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman"—objectionable to the negro race—opposition developed.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffiths plan is that words (except for leaders and titles) did not enter into it. He replaced speech by music, and the old-fashioned stage action and scenery by the pictorialized action of thousands of players in the great Out-of-Doors. In brief, he staged the great battles, struggles and critical events of 1861-'70 under natural conditions as nearly as possible similar to the original.

The result of Mr. Griffith's efforts is a new art for which no adequate name has yet been found. "The Birth of a Nation" combines spectacle, romance, domestic drama, comedy, tragedy, music and mechanical effects into a harmonious ensemble that captivates equally the eye and the ear. In a presentation lasting two hours and forty-five minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Josephine Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

With an orchestra of thirty, the production will be an exact duplicate of the original, which has been playing to crowded houses for nine months at the Liberty Theatre, New York. After Monday there will be daily matinees, and the usual house prices will prevail.

Sunday Call. Newark, Nov 14, 915.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND HIS COUNSELLORS.

One of the Impressive Historical Scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," the Big Spectacle Which Begins Its Engagement at the Grand Opera House Tomorrow Night.

The widely heralded engagement of D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will begin at the Grand Opera House tomorrow night. The advance sale indicates tremendous business for the spectacle throughout the three days' engagement and the management is fearful that many patrons who are planning to attend one of the final performances who have not yet obtained their tickets, will be disappointed. Those who can possibly do so should visit the box office early tomorrow and obtain tickets for tomorrow night, thus avoiding the congestion at the performances on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Matinees will be given Tuesday and Wednesday, at 2 o'clock and the evening performances will begin at 8:30. Seats for the entire engagement are being sold at the box office, the advance sale at the Faris-Klutz drug store having been called off for this engagement only.

Nothing like this wonderful attraction has ever been seen upon the local boards. It is given here exactly as it is being presented in New York city where the big drama has broken every record in the stage history of the first city in the country. In addition the piece has piled up record engagements in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

It covers a wide range of American history and touches only the highest points of interest in the great events that led up to and terminated the civil war. The force that slavery played in producing this crisis is traced from its inception to its abolition. While the basic theme is historical in its foundation its intent is the fundamental one of true drama. The forces which make for these results have been marshalled upon a larger scale than was ever dreamed of before.

Where directors of vast spectacle have dealt with hundreds in the past Griffith employs thousands. Eighteen thousand people fill his stage which has a vast territory for its background. Three thousand horses pass before your view in wild dashes over miles of country roadway. The decisive battles of the Civil war are reproduced in faithful detail and you see these conflicts fought again just as they were waged 50 years ago. Cities were built up only to be destroyed to lend force and verity to the dramatic narrative. One enormous battlefield is shown stretching over an area of 10 square miles and upon those plains and trenches 10,000 soldiers clash in a mimic warfare that is as real as if you were an eyewitness of the actual occurrence. Holding the great effects in tether is a story as tender and true as love and romance can be pictured. There are tears and smiles, noble sacrifices and heroic deeds of personal valor. Youthful dreams of love's fruition are rent assunder by the demons of war; home ties snap before the call to arms and suffering such as cannot be imagined is depicted in the crude manner that history is made when men surrender reason to passion and engage in a deadlock of armed resistance. You see the war start after being shown the causes which precipitated it. You see the great generals of the contending sections playing their desperate games of human pawns moved into the field of slaughter. Then comes the agreement for peace and Lincoln sets about his superhuman task of healing the wounds by the application of that great love which made him the towering figure of his age. A fanatic's bullet stills the heart which beat so evenly for all humanity. The south is thrown back into a worse fate than war. Their lands are overrun by a hungry horde of venal politicians and grafters. The poor negro is cajoled into a false understanding of liberty and in his ignorance is led into excesses by these scalawags of fortune. Out of it comes the ghostly garbed crusaders of a terrible era to once more set things aright and returns the lands and liberties of peace to their rightful owners and over the land's miserere sounds the chorus of brotherly love in a allegorical dream which visions the reunion of the divided sections and the welding of that national spirit which has made this nation so great after its baptism in its own blood.

A wonderful score of operatic reaches accompanies the narrative. It is all done upon a most stupendous scale. No detail has been overlooked. The drama is outlined and told in the most graphic form that has yet been devised by the brain of man for such a purpose. No wonder this work is epoch-making. It has set up new standards which it will be difficult to equal for many a year to come.

Sunday Call, Newark Nov 14 - 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Booked at Newark

D. W. Griffith's stirring photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is scheduled for a two weeks' run at the Newark Theater, beginning to-morrow. It is expected that the production will go on, despite opposition from part of the negro population. The first performance is to be given to-morrow night, after which there will be daily matinees, if the play is not finally banned.

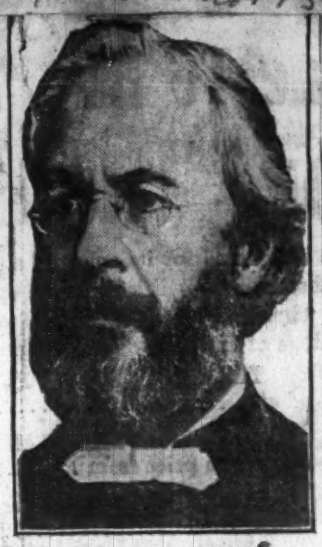
Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed film play in the world. Though suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider scope than "The Clansman" play. Mr. Griffith's new art covers 150 years of history and pictorializes the greatest events of the war between the States as well as those of the reconstruction period.

Lincoln, Lee and Grant, the early glories of the Confederacy; the devastation of General Sherman's march to the sea, the siege of Petersburg, the signing of peace at Appomattox, the assassination of the President in Ford's Theater, and the succeeding orgy of hate and oppression of the South—these personages and incidents pass rapidly before the enthralled spectator and lead up to the wonderful climaxes of Part II., which is devoted to what has been styled "the second struggle between the North and the South," a struggle caused by the attempt to impose carpetbagger rule upon the conquered States. The wild adventures and achievements of the Klu-klux-klan dominate the final scenes, which yield a happy ending of a double romance of Southern and Northern sweethearts.

Some idea of the magnitude of this spectacle may be gained from the statement that in making it Mr. Griffith made use of 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses. In the 5,000 scenes shown there are 200,000 faithfully accurate historic details. The battle scenes showing the struggle between the North and the South are said to be the most thrilling and convincing reproductions of warfare ever presented. And no less interesting is the score of classical, popular and original music which Mr. Griffith synchronized with the appearances of the important characters and the action of the principal scenes.

Plainfield Daily Press Nov 13

Dr. Parkhurst On "The Birth of a Nation"



By REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

IT is impossible to witness the film drama "The Birth of a Nation," now being shown at the Liberty Theater, and not want to say something about it.

Every one who has seen it is saying something about it. When one has been crowded upon, pressed down and run over it is against nature not to make some kind of an outcry.

That is the way one feels when coming out of the Liberty Theater. The thing is vast. It is overwhelming. Nothing like it has ever before been put upon the stage.

The tension of the performance is but a single feature of it, but it is that which one feels most poignantly after three straight hours. It begins in an easy way, but commences soon to find its muscle and goes on to the end, pounding upon one's senses with blows that come heavier and heavier, more and more rapid.

It is not apparent what are the grounds of the objections urged against it nor what is the animus of those who are scheming to have the exhibition prohibited.

The natonal board of censorship has approved it and reaffirmed its approval. The popular indorsement which the play has since received by the thousands who are seeing it daily will require more than small prejudices or moral eccentricities to disturb. In the meantime efforts to suppress it are thus far successful in nothing so much as in giving it wider and more remunerative publicity.

The intimate familiarity which David W. Griffith has shown with the events of the reconstruction period along with the detailed scholarly study which he has made of the wider territory of events which the play covers renders the production one of surprising educational value to those who were either young children still or even unborn in the stirring years of 1860 to 1870. A boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the film which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the classroom.

This drama is a telling illustration of the possibilities of motion pictures as an instrument of instruction in history.

The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it. It is in this respect exactly true to history, and if it reflects upon the negro as he was then it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties change with the passing of time.

The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. Every lover of peace must experience a certain painful gratification that just at this time the ghastly horrors of carnage can be brought so closely home to the eye. It is one thing to read about the trenches, the killing and the corpses. It is quite another thing to have them bodily pressed before the eye, with all the demoniac fury that marks conflict at close range. A well written description of a battlefield allows the place and the occasion to be invested with features of magnificence, with the heroism of the contestants and the glory of the victors. On Griffith's screen we see the real thing. There is no magnificence, no glory, but horror, brutality and stark butchery. It sickens with the sense of man's inhumanity to man. It makes war despicable and devilish. It conveys an indelible lesson to all who have been bewitched by those who have decked out the naked hideousness of war with tinsel drapery.

There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty done by a master artist's hand—the signing by the president of the proclamation for volunteers which marked the end of the old regime, the surrender of Lee to Grant and the assassination of the president in Ford's theater.

The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held was manifested in the way the great audience received the scene of a heartbroken southern mother pleading with him for her son, sentenced to death as a guerrilla. Every eye was dim with tears in the strangling hush that fell on the theater. What might not our country have been saved had the problem of reconstruction been left to the great heart—the one man who compassed within himself the resources of the intelligence, experience, breadth and sympathy of Abraham Lincoln!

"The Birth of a Nation" has my unqualified approval.

CHARLOTTE DAILY OBSERVER THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1915.

Poetry, Art And Acting

The Birth Of A Nation In Its Making

By David W. Griffith

nation. By the way, twenty-four 'Lincoln actors' were rehearsed before the right Lincoln was found! The Blue and the Gray, and the Southern white gentry all have been drilled under their respective leaders. And then film making begins.

"At an early stage of the work—after the rough outlines have been filled in—the scenario is thrown away. The building and rebuilding of the story, the piecing of initial flung over many miles of mountain and valley, show the opposing intrenchments and the artillery fire, display the riflemen formation over broken ground, the bayonet rush right up to the trenches, the deadly handgrips of individual enemies in physical struggle and the single acts of heroism or chivalry at close range—and all on a screen a few feet wide and a few feet high! This will give some slight

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards, and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER the Most Stupendous, Dramatic and Spectacular Enterprise that the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Realized!

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement kings—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Wark Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision animating Griffith undoubtedly comes from some obscure Welsh bardic strain.

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The Birth of a Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the plot. In this case the scenario ... as we can, for the motion picture is a novelising or story-telling form, not strictly a stage form; it is epic rather than dramatic; much of the work is of the great indoors. We have a period of history to cover; the scenes of a wide territory to revivify. Therefore, we must prepare the locale as well as the actors—the tasks of the landscape artist and, in some sense, of the civil engineer are before us. For a month the actors rehearse without the camera.

"STAGE CAREFULLY SET FOR A MOVIE DRAMA"

"And now South Carolina in Reconstruction days is measurably before our eyes. Elsewhere the battlegrounds of the Civil War are springing into being, helped by expert advice of old 'vets' and modern West Pointers. The costumes, settings and documents laboriously prepared for the facsimile historical scenes like those of the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Lincoln assassinate bits and the discarding of the useless go right on while we are living the history, so to speak, from day to day. Nearly twenty-eight miles of pictures—140,000 feet of film—are taken. And how much of these are used? At the finale we discover that we have thrown away eight-tenths of our product—we have remaining 28,000 feet, or, say, five miles of consecutive story. But that is twice too long. We condense, condense, condense. At the end of two months more of hard labor we have edited 'The Birth of a Nation' to 12,000 or 13,000 feet—two and a half miles —or, in theatre wise, two hours and forty-five minutes' stage entertainment."

"How about the cavalry and war effects?"

"We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked ...

"Our thousands and thousands of cavalrymen—in the present production we used 18,000 people altogether—own the entire countryside. Cameras are everywhere—the most effective ones for pictorial purposes being mounted on autos that travel ahead of the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, consecutive picture taking. Parallel with the onrush of the cavalry run one, two, three other Reconstruction stories. Each onrush is a bit contrasted with another short scene of entirely different character. The timing must be exact, yet the cyclonic rapidity must never seem to be relaxed.

"It will give you an idea of necessary, enormous complexity when I tell you that there are no less than 6,000 separate and individual scenes in the completed work. The battle pictures are as cunning a mosaic of the infinitely little as the cavalry charges or as the scenes of domestic life in the Carolinas. We exhibit the panorama of a battle-ideas of the tremendous technical difficulties involved."

"Will the motion picture ever develop into a true work of art?" was the next question, somewhat rudely asked of this wizard of the nature theatre.

David Griffith laughed—not a laugh of offended vanity or condescending superiority, but the easy, natural mirth of a master who expects to encounter many skeptics and doubting Thomases in the day's work.

"Why," he said, "the makers of pictures have already surpassed in many ways the art of the speaking stage. The old school are coming to us, are they not? And appropriating such of our devices as the 'cut-back' and the parallel action. And I could name one actress with a tremendous New York hit of two years to her credit who built up her justly famous part from close study of the methods of our Los Angeles picture actresses!

"Already it is admitted that as to poetic beauty the motion picture entertainment is far ahead of the stage play. Poetry is apparently a lost art in the regular theatre, but it is the very life and essence of the motion playhouse. We have staged most of Browning's stories, many of Tennyson's, innumerable Biblical and classical fables. Not only beauty but thought is our goal, for the silent drama is peculiarly the birthplace of ideas. No one can tell what the motion picture will become, for we are at present only at the infancy of it."

"Pardon me," I persisted, "but will the silent drama ever put forth immortal art products? Will there ever be a Shakespeare or a Homer of the movies?"

"No," mused David Griffith reflectively, "because the motion picture is acting, and the fashion of acting changes with each age. The stage work of Forrest, Macready, Kean or Kemble, for example, if it could be accurately reproduced, would appear crude, stiff and awkward to us of today. The acting of the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the 'story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point is that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvellous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young, may be entirely revolutionized by its strange-ly new processes."

Kansas City Post Nov 1915

"Birth of a Nation" Remains.

"The Birth of a Nation," showing events leading up to, during, and following the Civil war, will open the fourth week at the Grand. More persons have viewed this picture than have ever been attracted to any other play or picture in a Kansas City theater. One of the features of the production is the thirty-piece orchestra.

The new Empress theater, Twelfth and McGee streets, opens today with continuous vaudeville and pictures, the first performance commencing at 11 o'clock. Pictures will be shown from 11 a. m. until 2 p. m., at which time the first vaudeville show will start. An entire change of program will be made Sundays and Thursdays. Ora Youngblood and her "Twelve Musical Maids" will be the headline attraction for the first half of the week.

The headliner for the second half of the week beginning Thursday is the Famous Jackson Family, five pretty girls and one man, in a high class bicycle act. On the same bill are four Harmony Singers.

Columbia S.C. Nov 16

PRAISE PHOTOPLAY TO BE SEEN HERE

Daughters of Confederacy in Los Angeles Indorse "Birth of a Nation."

Teachers, parents and club women of the South have been lavish in their praise of "The Birth of a Nation," the mighty spectacle which comes to the Columbia theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. When the spectacle was shown in Norfolk recently, Mrs. Frank Anthony Walke wrote the following letter to the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch:

"'The Birth of a Nation,' is wonderful! Ku Klux Klan! What they suffered, lost and braved! This was a band of knights sent to make things work out as it was desired and none but these men could have accomplished it. . . . . There is much that makes one's heart ache; much that brings pleasure and happiness; tears and sunshine are well coupled. 'The Birth of a Nation' is a revelation and history carried out."

Mrs. Walke was not the first of the Daughters to praise the spectacle, for in resolutions adopted a short time before, the members of the John H. Reagan chapter, Los Angeles, expressed themselves thus:

"In indorsing the splendid production of 'The Birth of a Nation,' the John H. Reagan chapter, U. D. C., feel a great privilege. The wrongs of history righted, the fair presentation of that side of the question never known to Northerners and the wonderful spectacle itself, is an education and an artistic treat to the entire Union."

The resolutions were forwarded to D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," by Isabella O. J. Davis, 1128 Logan street, Los Angeles, acting president of the John H. Reagan chapter.

Seats for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" will be placed on sale at the theatre box office Friday.

Charlotte Daily Observer Nov 14

Night Gathering of the Clans, one of the thrilling scenes in the mighty Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a three days' engagement at the Academy of Music to morrow night.

MRS. LAMAR REVIEWS WORK GEORGIA U. D. C. DURING PAST YEAR

TELLS WHAT HAS BEEN DONE BY ORGANIZATION; MADE SUGGESTIONS.

STONE MOUNTAIN MEMORIAL URGED

THOMASVILLE, Ga., Nov. 11.—Mrs. E. Dorothy Blount Lamar, president of the Georgia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, today presented her annual report at the twenty-first annual convention of the Daughters. It was very interesting and complete.

The report endorses the "Birth of a Nation" and "The Battle Cry of Peace," two moving pictures intended to give a correct presentation of conditions in the South after the war. Of "The Birth of a Nation" she says:

Truth.

"It is a truthful portrayal of the sorrows of those times. It has done a magnificent work for us in setting the justice of our attitude toward our troubles at that period before an uninformed North. I have no patience with those time-servers who petition their city councils to prevent its presentation in the towns of the South. Our people know too little of what gave birth to the Ku-Klux Klan. Daughters of the Confederacy in all the years of their existence and in all their places of power could not reach the audiences that this presentation of 'The Clansman' has instructed and moved to tears and laughter, besides quickening universal love of the great figures of the North and South at that time. Call [illegible]"

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1915

Stage is Set for the Reception of Massive "Birth of a Nation"

Lillian Gish, who is seen as Elsie Stoneman in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a three days' engagement at the Grand tonight.

With a score of electricians and mechanics preparing the playhouse for the reception of the massive "The Birth of a Nation" production when the company arrives today the Grand Opera House is about the busiest spot in Greensboro today. Extensive changes in the stage and auditorium are necessitated by the coming of the spectacle that has enthralled New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other large cities, and neither effort nor expense is being spared by the local management to provide the company with proper facilities.

In the first place, extensive changes must be made in the rear of the orchestra floor, where a booth housing two large projecting machines and other electrical paraphernalia is to be installed. An optical expert sent in advance of the company measured to the fraction of an inch the distance necessary for proper focal adjustment in a theater of the dimensions of the Academy of Music.

Then the stage and orchestra pit require rearrangement. The bewildering array of equipment used in attaining the battle and other realistic effects requires every possible inch of space on the stage. Twenty men are employed "back-stage" in working the effects, not counting a squad of "supers" who do nothing but shout at the command of the stage director.

Tonight's performance will begin at 8:30. Matinees will be given tomorrow and Wednesday at 3 o'clock. Seats for all performances are on sale at the box office.

THE KANSAS CITY JOURNAL, NOVEMBER 14, 1915.

A HIGHLY DRAMATIC SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

GATHERING OF THE KU KLUX KLAN.

One of the intensely interesting scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand is the assembling of the Ku Klux Klan. It is said that the trumpet call used during the scene is the same as that which brought the "K. K. K." together in the reconstruction period of the South.

"Grand—'The Birth of a Nation.' With today's matinee at the Grand opera house begins the last week of the record breaking engagement of David W. Griffith's monster spectacle, 'The Birth of a Nation.' Three hours of the battle scenes ever staged are crammed with the most realistic effects ever pictured with the camera. The charming love story, developing during days of romance before the war, the days of reconstruction and the most remarkable battle scenes ever staged. It is war in the Carolina town of Piedmont, shown in preliminary days when the spectator suddenly finds himself in the midst of the most remarkable battle ever staged. Atlanta is captured and Sherman sweeps out on his march to the sea. Still more remarkable is the final battle showing the struggle in the trenches, the last line of entrenchments taking line after line of infantry until the attacking forces are finally decimated and the 'Little Colonel' rams the state in a still smoking cannon of the federals. In the last act, devoted mainly to the daring deeds of the Ku Klux Klan, the whole army of the mountaineers, their women and children is revealed in their gather in the marshaled forest and then whirl to the rescue of the white army of the southland. There are two performances every day, at 2:15 and 8:15, and there are prices to please all."

The State Columbia S.C. Nov 14

DR. WALLACE OF WOFFORD PRAISES GRIFFITH PLAY

Teacher of History and Economics Describes "The Birth of a Nation" as Stupendous and Illuminating—Gives One New Understanding of War and Reconstruction.

When D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was shown recently in Spartanburg, the Spartanburg Journal published an interview with D. D. Wallace, professor of history and economics at Wofford college, in which he discussed the spectacle from an educational standpoint. Inasmuch as the same company which presented the spectacle in Spartanburg is booked for a three days' engagement at the Columbia theatre, beginning Monday night, November 22, Dr. Wallace's views are interesting to Columbians.

The interview, as published in The Journal, was as follows:

"The stupendousness of the thing perhaps stands out above everything else.

"Why, sir, in giving my opinion of the 'Birth of a Nation,' the first thing that impresses me—I can't say that exactly either; for so many things impress me so powerfully that I hardly know where to start," said Dr. Wallace. "The stupendousness of the thing perhaps stands out above everything else. I was very much in the same state of mind as a prominent minister who sat near me; he seemed unable to believe that he had actually seen what he had. It seemed impossible that such a stupendous drama could have been placed within the four walls of a house. I was swept along on the mighty current of the years from 1860 to 1876 with mind and emotions at such a pitch that I felt like I need a rest.

"I believe that any man, no matter what his prominence, who had lived through the great tragedy of the war and Reconstruction would understand it better for seeing 'The Birth of a Nation.' That is the service of the artist; he makes us understand life like we had not understood it before. I just thought as I sat there seeing the thrilling romance, the dramatic power, the mighty passions of men, that have made our history, 'how blind and dull we are to the greatness, the deep springs of motive, of the life we live in. Every American is indebted to those who have made our history so vivid. Its grip will stay with me as long as I can remember.

"Of course from the standpoint of technical skill, many of the high-class pictures leave little to be desired. 'The Birth of a Nation,' is wonderful in this regard. The get-up of the leading actors makes one feel as though Lee, Grant, Lincoln, Thad Stevens, Stanton, Seward, Andrew Johnson were actually before you.

"Yes, there are some horrible things in it; but there are some horrible things in life, and I don't know that we are going to get rid of them by pretending that they are not there. Taken all in all, it is something that no American, certainly no Southern man or woman, can afford not to see. I took the whole family except the baby and if it comes along after she's big enough, I'll take her, too."

Penta Allegory in "The Birth of a Nation" at the Columbia Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of Next Week.

Oklahoman News. Nov. 13-1915

History Reproduced

The Oklahoma News - Nov 15

GRANT AND LEE AT APPOMATTOX.
A scene in "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Overholser the week beginning Nov. 22.

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1915

377

"BIRTH OF A NATION" IS WONDERFUL FILM

Great Picture Produced by David Wark Griffith Shown for First Time Here.

HUNDREDS ARE THRILLED

It is said, and apparently on good authority, that when David Wark Griffith outlined his plans for producing "The Birth of a Nation" to several of his business associates, each and everyone refused to share the financial responsibilities incumbent upon the production of the mammoth cinema drama founded upon the works of Thomas Dixon, a native North Carolinian. Likewise, it is stated that Mr. Griffith, even then acknowledged the foremost exponent of the best in picturedom, decided to produce what was destined to be the epoch-making movie by himself, he decided to take all financial risks—to make or break—on his own shoulders.

Perhaps 90 out of every 100 people in the United States are aware of the success of the venture of Griffith, a great sermon on the subject of "Believe in Yourself." When, on last evening, "The Birth of a Nation" was presented at the Grand before an audience that must be classed as great, each and every one, whether an admirer or hater of the silent drama, will be forced to admit that the great cinema drama is a lesson, a powerful lesson forcibly told.

Whether you be a southernor, acquainted with the period following the close of the war between the states, or merely one who has lost confidence, the drama is worth while—and the price Thomas Dixon's works have lost none of their powerfulness, in fact they have gained, through the deft touches of Griffith, the master hand at moving puppets, who, necessarily, do not have to possess talent if only gifted with that enviable trait known as obedience.

It was not with an obedient cast that Griffith evolved "The Birth of a Nation"—it was a great cast, great in all that the word implies. "The Birth of a Nation" is overwhelmingly, through the forcefulness of the story, the histronic ability of each of the principals and the adaptability of the hordes of supernumeraries, the clear photography, and the attention to every detail, a matter how trivial or inconsequential, shown by Griffith and his assistants.

Thomas Dixon's "Leopard Spots," "Clansman," and other works are too familiar to the people of the south to necessitate the repetition of the story unfolded so skillfully and entertainingly by "The Birth of a Nation." Suffice to say the doings of the Ku Klux Klan are visualized with emphasis, an emphasis that forces home the truth that Lincoln was a friend to the south and that his death was a sad blow to the cause of the south. There is the love story interwoven amid all those breath-taking scenes; a love story that grips, holds, impresses. But the historical value of the feature is alone enough to cause crowds of Greensboro people to rush into the Grand during the remaining four performances, two matinees and two evenings, today and Wednesday.

An orchestra of 20 pieces plays steadily during the showing of "The Birth of a Nation." The music lends enchantment to the movie. Yet there is another features not found in motion picture theaters—the effects. Each action is suited by some sound, be it a groan or the roar of a cannon, the sounds being furnished by what is considered a full company behind the scenes.

Don't miss "The Birth of a Nation" if you are a student of history, a lover of the spectacular, an admirer of the beautiful, or the craver of an entertaining story; the wonderful film contains all.

The Oklahoma News Nov 15

BIRTH OF A NATION.

"The Birth of a Nation," is the offering at the Overholser all of the week of Nov. 22, with daily matinees starting Tuesday. In a presentation lasting two hours and 45 minutes, it epitomizes the life of a nation. It carries the story from the introduction of African slavery down thru Civil war and reconstruction days. Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walhall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miram Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3000 horses and no less than 5000 scenes went to the making of the spectacle.

Austin American, Texas Nov. 9-15.

'BIRTH OF A NATION' PROVES UNIQUE FILM

Superb moving picture art is attained in "The Birth of a Nation," which was presented at the Hancock Opera House last night. From the romantic and belligerent novel, "The Clansman," the theme is so perfected that we have in the play the most stupendous and magnificent film production ever staged. Although there probably are idealists who do not corroborate the revival of past militarism the most exact critics can not refrain from giving this play their personal commendation.

The play is full of masterly conception and development, and many of the scenes attest to the vivifying touch of genius. The battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are shown with bold, straight forward realism the scene which represented the surrender of Lee to Grant is filled with poignant expression, and the scene showing the death of a young Southern girl who jumped from a precipice to avoid dishonor with a negro, teems with the very stuff of true tragedy. There is a realistic representation of the ignorant, newly-freed negro of that time depicting the horror in which they were held by their former owners. This contrasts strongly with the peace-abiding American negroes of today.

It is with a feeling of proud defiance that one views the suffering and trials which the Southland was forced to receive because of the hideous devastation of war, but a feeling of greater love when at last comes the merging of the two factions with the exit of the cruel and unlawful domination of the carpetbaggers.

The interest of the drama centers about the secret and magic Ku Klux Klan in their efforts to save the riddled South from an undignified and cruel ruling. Henry Walthall, who takes the part of Colonel Cameron, the leader of the Klan, can not be given enough praise. Mr. Walthall clearly shows in some of the dramatic scenes the artist he is. Miss Lillian Gish assumes the role opposite Mr. Walthall with perfect freedom. To these two film artists most of the success of the play is due.

The music, which is arranged for this production, is in keeping with the scenes and action. Many of the old patriotic tunes are worked in at the proper times.

It is evident that with the advent of such film masterpieces as this that the crude comedies and corruptive, worthless dramas which have been with us so long will be forced out entirely.

"The Birth of a Nation" deserves such an attendance as featured last night's performance, at the matinee and night performances today and tomorrow.

AMUSEMENTS

HANCOCK OPERA HOUSE.

"Birth of a Nation."

The incident of the young Confederate's release by President Lincoln's order, which gets a round of enthusiastic handclapping when presented in "The Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Hancock, with matinee Tuesday and Wednesday, was verified as an actual historical event by G. L. Mordecai of 174 West Eighty-sixth Street, New York, the man to whom it happened. He said:

"My father, a wealthy trader of Charleston, S. C., was engaged in extensive block-running operations between the Confederacy and the Bahama Islands. The only channel of intercourse was closed when the Federals captured Fort Fisher, and father suggested that I should try to slip through the Northern lines and thence go to New York.

"I managed to elude the Union pickets in Virginia, took stage for Washington, but I was arrested and thrown into prison as a Confederate enemy. President Lincoln was convinced I was not a spy. 'I will release the young man,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'on one condition: that he takes oath not to return to the Southern States during the war.'

"I desired to thank President Lincoln. On being presented to Mr. Lincoln, I remember he shook me by the hand and said: 'I am happy to know that I have been able to serve an enemy.'"

"Damaged Goods."

MOVIES SUPREME IN POETRY, ART AND ACTING SAYS DAVID W. GRIFFITH

DAVID W. GRIFFITH

Whose Work More Than That Of Any Other Director Has Advanced The Art Of The Motion Picture Play.

MOST remarkable of recent changes in the theatre has been the appearance of "kings that knew not Joseph"; of sceptres seized from dying dynasties and wielded by new hands: of rulers with Aladdin - like fortunes who dash from coast to coast, build transitory cities, engage and dissolve armies overnight and create ephemeral enterprises—all to make an American holiday—beside the magnitude of which much historical pioneering and concoction of actual events seem but child's play.

Among the mightiest of the new amusement kings—kings of the outdoor theatre—is David Work Griffith, producer of the mighty film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." A tall, clean-cut Kentuckian, thirty-five years of age, Griffith has no tricks of manner and no vanities. His father, General Griffith, commanded a Confederate brigade in the Civil War. The son had a good but not a liberal education, was an actor for a decade, then became a scenario-writer, finally a director and ultimately an independent producer of "silent drama." The executive ability to handle men in the mass must be a paternal inheritance; the poet's vision nation. By the way, twenty-four 'Lincoln actors' were rehearsed before the right Lincoln was found! The Blue and the Gray, and the Southern white gentry all have been drilled under their respective leaders. And then film making begins.

"At an early stage of the work—after the rough outlines have been filled in—the scenario is thrown away. The building and rebuilding of the story, the piecing of intimate bits and the discarding of the useless go right on while we are living the history, so to speak, from day to day. Nearly twenty-eight miles of pictures—140,000 feet of film—are taken. And how much of these are used? At the finale we discover that we have thrown away eight-tenths of our product—we have remaining 24,000 feet, or, say, five miles of consecutive story. But that is twice too long. We condense, condense, condense. At the end of two months more of hard labor we have edited 'The Birth of a Nation' to 12,000 or 13,000 feet—two and a half miles —or, in theatre wise, two hours and forty-five minutes' stage entertainment."

field flung over many miles of mountain and valley, show the opposing intrenchments and the artillery fire, display the riflemen forming for advance, the charges over broken ground, the bayonet rush right up to the trenches, the deadly handgrips of individual enemies in physical struggle and the single acts of heroism or chivalry at close range—and all on a screen a few feet wide and a few feet high! This will give some slight idea of the tremendous technical difficulties involved."

"Will the motion picture ever develop into a true work of art?" was the next question, somewhat rudely asked of this wizard of the nature theatre.

David Griffith laughed—not a laugh of offended vanity or condescending superiority, but the easy, natural mirth of a master who expects to encounter many skeptics and doubting Thomases in the day's work.

"Why," he said, "the makers of pictures have already surpassed in many ways the art of the speaking stage. The old school are coming to us, are they not? And appropriating such of our devices as the 'cut-back' and the parallel action. And I could name one actress with a tremendous New York hit of her credit who built up her of today may similarly seem unnatural or impossible to the people two hundred years hence. But the immortal stories will be there, the world's legacy of great characters and great scenes, to be picturized according to the changed ideals of the succeeding generations."

"What is your principal requirement as to motion picture actors?"

"Actors with souls!" was the emphatic response. "I know there is much talk of picture types, blonde types and all that, but over and above technical requirements, so called, is the demand for people of great personalities, of sincere, true emotion and the untheatrical expression thereof.

"Somehow, most of the stars who come to us from the regular stage lack the sincerity, at least in their earlier efforts before the camera. Mrs. Fiske, in 'Tess,' was a notable exception. I know she drew from me the tribute of tears. The Comedie Francaise actors, notably Coquelin and Le Bargy, who appeared in some of the French pictures, were wonderful in the breadth and strength of their exquisite character portrayals. On

"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg.

Facts About "The Birth of a Nation"

Five thousand scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards, and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece—were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of fighters—"War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces, synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER the Most Stupendendous, Dramatic and Spectacular Enterprise that the Brain of Man Has Yet Visioned and Realized!

"How is a big motion picture produced?" he was asked.

"Endless work—endless detail! Let me illustrate by the concrete example of 'The Birth of a Nation.' First comes the scenario or written outline of the play. In this case there was a previous stage play. If we are wise, we forget that as much as we can, for the motion picture is a novelizing or story-telling form, not strictly a stage form; it is epic rather than dramatic; much of the work is of the great indoors. We have a period of history to cover, the scenes of a wide territory to revivify. Therefore, we must prepare the locale as well as the actors—the tasks of the landscape artist and, in some sense, of the civil engineer are before us. For a month the actors rehearse without the camera.

STAGE CAREFULLY SET FOR A MOVIE DRAMA

"And now South Carolina in Reconstruction days is measurably before our eyes. Elsewhere the battlegrounds of the Civil War are springing into being, helped by expert advice of old 'vets' and modern West Pointers. The costumes, settings and documents laboriously prepared, for the facsimile historical scenes like those of the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Lincoln assassination. We exhibit the panorama of a battle-field.

"We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked up everywhere.

"Our thousands and thousands of cavalrymen—in the present production we used 18,000 people altogether—own the entire countryside. Cameras are everywhere—the most effective ones for pictorial purposes being mounted on autos that travel ahead of the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, consecutive picture taking. Parallel with the onrush of the cavalry run one, two, three other Reconstruction stories. Each onrush is a bit contrasted with another short scene of entirely different character. The timing must be exact, yet the cyclonic rapidity must never seem to be relaxed.

"I will give you an idea of necessary complexity when I tell you that enormous no less than 6,000 separate and individual scenes in the completed work. The battle pictures are as cunning a mosaic of infinitely little as the cavalry charges or as the scenes of domestic life in the Carolinas. We exhibit the panorama of a battle-field. We should be helpless without the aid of governmental authorities. An area of ten square miles is marked off, as for the Vanderbilt Cup races. On a certain day all vehicular or other road traffic is prohibited within this area. Signs of warning are tacked up everywhere.

"Our thousands and thousands of cavalrymen—in the present production we used 18,000 people altogether—own the entire countryside. Cameras are everywhere—the most effective ones for pictorial purposes being mounted on autos that travel ahead of the cavalry up to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour. Nor is it a case of straight, consecutive picture taking. Parallel with the onrush of the cavalry run one, two, three other Reconstruction stories. Each onrush is a bit contrasted with another short scene of entirely different character. The timing must be exact, yet the cyclonic rapidity must never seem to be relaxed.

"I will give you an idea of necessary complexity when I tell you that enormous no less than 6,000 separate and individual scenes in the completed work. The battle pictures are as cunning a mosaic of infinitely little as the cavalry charges or as the scenes of domestic life in the Carolinas. We exhibit the panorama of a battle-field.

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving the actors' lineaments conveys intimate thought and emotion that can never be conveyed by the crowded scene.

"I borrowed the 'cut-back' from Charles Dickens. Novelists think nothing of leaving one set of characters in the midst of affairs and going back to deal with earlier events, in which another set of characters is involved. I elaborated the 'cut-back' to the 'story within a story,' and to the so-called parallel action. I found that the picture could carry not merely two, but even three or four simultaneous threads of action—all without confusing the spectator. At one point in my latest drama four actions are represented simultaneously, by the device of switching scenes every few moments. Each action heightens the effects of the others—a technique that, so far as I am aware, is absolutely novel in story telling art. My point is that photographic drama is constantly progressing, and he is indeed foolish who would set arbitrary limits as to what it can or cannot accomplish in the course of its marvelous evolution. For one thing, the telling of history, the education of old and young, may be entirely revolutionized by its strange-ly new processes."

"Already it is admitted that as to poetic beauty the motion picture entertainment is far ahead of the stage play. Poetry is apparently a lost art in the regular theatre, but it is the very life and essence of the motion playhouse. We have staged most of Browning's stories, many of Tennyson's, innumerable Biblical and classical fables. Not only beauty but thought is our goal, for the silent drama is peculiarly the birthplace of ideas. No one can tell what the motion picture will become, for we are at present only at the infancy of it."

"Pardon me," I persisted, "but will the silent drama ever put forth immortal art products? Will there ever be a Shakespeare or a Homer of the movies?"

"No," mused David Griffith reflectively, "because the motion picture is acting, and the fashion of acting changes with each age. The stage work of Forrest, Macready, Kean or Kemble, for example, if it could be accurately reproduced, would appear crude, stiff and awkward to us of today. The acting of those who would have helped him to make his rule successful, declared, referring to Silas Lynch, the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina, "I shall make you the peer of any white man living."

"Little pet" sister, overlooking the advice of her brother, not to go too far from the house alone, goes to the spring for a bucket of water. She is observed by the black renegade, "Gus," who has been ordered away from the home by Ben Cameron. The negro proposes marriage to the young girl, who shrinks in fear and trembling from the lecherous black. Then, fear lending speed to her feet, she darts away, followed by the negro. Finally, she scales the highest point of a mountain crag, calling to the negro, "If you come closer, I shall jump," all the time sending forth agonized cries for help.

Ben Cameron is absent when his little sister leaves the home, and, when told by his mother that the child has gone, quiets the mother's fears, but, with deadly foreboding in his heart, he goes in search of the child.

As the negro continues his stealthy approach, the young girl gets closer to the precipice, then, with a shriek of despair, she makes the leap of death, in defense of woman's most priceless possession, her honor. Later, she is found at the foot of the peak by her brother who idolized her, crushed, maimed and bleeding. She dies in his arms, and then to that heart-broken brother comes a mighty resentment.

The inspiration for forming the Ku Klux comes to Ben Cameron as he sits on the bank of a river, meditating on the persecution that has come to his people as a result of carpetbag government, when two white children, their heads and bodies obscured by a white sheet, scare the wits out of a group of pickaninnies.

The negro renegade that caused the death of "little pet" sister is hunted down, tried before the Ku Klux tribunal, found guilty, executed and his body placed on the porch in front of the negro lieutenant governor's home. Growing by leaps and bounds, determined white men form companies and regiments of the Ku Klux, in defense of life and property.

Stoneman's race equality is made plain to him when Lynch, whom he attempted to place on an equality with a white man, proposes marriage to Stoneman's daughter, and who locks himself in the room with the girl, after she has spurned his advances.

The ride of the Ku Klux brigade, the rescue of Elsie and her restoration to her lover, Ben Cameron, after she has broken the engagement with him; the arrival of the clan at a cabin where Ben Cameron's father, mother and remaining sister have taken refuge with two union veterans, where they were besieged by negro soldiers, and the final disarming of the blacks, all these were greeted with the wildest applause by the audience last night.

Columns could be written of "The Birth of a Nation," but these would not suffice; the play must be seen to be appreciated, to be fully understood to give the people of the present generation a true conception of the sufferings and privations endured by the people of the south, and the effective manner in which they wrought their salvation.

The production of D. W. Griffith, masterful in its delineation will linger long in the memory of all who witness it, presenting as it does the birth of the woes and miseries of a subjected people, who, when denied the right of freemen, produced an army of men, whose work was swift, sure and silent; who visited stern justice on the despoilers of their homes, and who fought only that the superiority of the white race might prevail.

Waco, Texas, Tribune
Nov. 12-1915

BIRTH OF A NATION MORE THAN CLAIMED

WONDERFUL FILM DRAMA PORTRAYS HISTORY DURING IMPORTANT PERIOD.

Production Witnessed by Enthusiastic Audience—Climaxes Bring Applause.

"The Birth of a Nation," shown at the Auditorium theatre for the first time last night, has been described as history in action. It is that and more. In addition to the facts that usually find their place in a written history of a people there were the many pronounced emotions and feelings which moved the people of the south during the days immediately preceding the Civil war, during that conflict and in the reconstruction period that came upon the heels of the war. Advance publicity, and there had been much of this and of a very machines for their use.

favorable character, had led the people to expect much, but those who saw the master screen production last night found in it much more than they had really expected.

Certainly no other film has been so ambitious in its conception, seeking to portray as it does the history of a great people during the most important period in its career—the merging of a number of separate states into a great and indissoluble union, other of those which have touched upon historical subjects have supplied the facts in such great detail and with such marvelous accuracy. There are a few scenes which we would eliminate if we were trying to improve the production, and possibly a minor one or so that we might add, but taken as a whole it is a satisfactory production from a historical standpoint and this opinion is held also, by men who saw the pictur, and who lived through the reconstruc tion period in which the great epi rama has its final climax.

As the National Board of Censors which passed upon the productio early in the year, sets forth in it report, educationally, dramatically and artistically, this production marks great step forward in motion pictures and the large Waco audience which witnessed it last night—decidedly the largest of the year—received it en thusiastically. No such applause ha ever greeted any production here, th strong climaxes bringing forth yell and prolonged applause at frequen intervals. The splendid theme made all the stronger through the per formances of well known stars both on the screen and on the stage, and a symphony orchestra, specially train ed and equipped for furnishing an character of music or noise that i needed to convey the meaning of th moment, adds greatly to the effective ness of the production.

"The Birth of a Nation" will b shown at the Auditorium today an Saturday, matinee and night.

Waco Daily Times
(Texas) Nov. 12-1915

MIGHTY SPECTACLE IS BIRTH OF A NATION

MASTERLY PRODUCTION OF D. W. GRIFFITH SEEN HERE LAST NIGHT.

Wonderful in Its Delineation and Portrayal, Big Audience Enthralled by Griffith's Genius.

Times that tried the souls of men of the south, during the dark era of reconstruction, following the civil war, were made plain in the initial production of "The Birth of a Nation," shown last night at the Auditorium. The same magnificent spectacle, for that's what it is, will be seen at the Auditorium in matinee this afternoon and tomorrow, tonight and tomorrow night.

Veterans of the blue and gray were among the many present last evening, the major portion of these attending as guests of the Times-Herald. Some of the old Confederates were garbed in their uniform of gray.

Had it not been for the fact that a premier attraction, the queen's ball, was staged at the Cotton Palace last night, it is more than likely that the vast seating capacity of the Auditorium would have been taxed. As it was, many of the chairs on the first floor were occupied, while a large gathering was seated in the balcony.

Innumerable were the rebel yells that reverberated through the big playhouse when some especially thrilling scene was presented, or when the symphony orchestra, composed of more than 20 pieces rendered "Dixie," "The Bonnie Blue Flag" or other war-time songs. That the old veterans were more than pleased with the production was manifest in the generous praise they gave the production when the final scene was flashed on the curtain last evening.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a photo-play, for the reason that the production is so massive, includes so many characters and so many people that no theatre in the country is large enough in which to present the play. It is worth the price of admission, many time over, and it is a matter of sincere congratulation that the management of the Auditorium was fortunate enough to bring this very realistic production to Waco during the Cotton Palace season.

Founded on "The Clansman," by Thos. Dixon, Jr., the play brings out, in true relief, the traits, characteristics and traditions of the southern people, portraying them true to life, without exaggeration or elaboration, but correct, in the main, as to ideals and customs.

The play begins with a reproduction of a southern mansion, before the war, showing the old-time darkies, in their care-free happiness and devotion to their masters. The friendship existing between the eldest scion of the Camerons, at Piedmont, S. C., and the son of the great radical, Secretary of State Stoneman, who, following the assassination of Lincoln, decides to place the black on an equality with the white, and to treat the south as a conquered province, after the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox, is splendidly depicted. When the Stonemans come to visit the Camerons, Elsie Stoneam remains at home. Her brother brings with him a daguerreotype of his sister, which, one day, falls into the hands of Ben Cameron, who, soon after his enlistment, becomes a colonel in the Confederate army, and who recognizes in the picture the girl of his dreams. By singular coincidence, it is love at first sight between young Stoneman and Cameron's eldest sister. Lincoln's call for 35,000 volunteers follows soon after the Stonemans returned to Washington.

Just before the southern troops leave for the front, a grand ball is given. The picture shows a scene of revelry at the festivities, "age and childhood slumbering, while youth dances away the night." Youth is depiced by Ben Cameron and the others at the ball, while a vivid portrayal of childhood is given by his "little pet" sister, his father, the physician of the town, impersonating old age.

One of the most thrilling scenes in the play is the assassination of Lincoln, in Ford's theatre, April, 1865. The artist who concocted this scene leaves nothing to the imagination. The intensity of the situation is shown in all its dramatic completeness, with Wilkes Booth entering the president's box, unobserved, firing the fatal shot, the death of the president, the cry of Booth from the stage, "Sic semper tyrannis," and his escape from the theatre.

In the Cameron home, as in many other places throughout the south, news of the assassination is received with profound regret, the sentiment expressed by Dr. Cameron, when he says, "We have lost our best friend," meeting with a responsive chord. Lincoln has issued a pardon to Ben Cameron, after his two brothers were killed in the war, and after he had been wounded, and was in a military hospital, with Elsie Stoneman as his nurse, when a plot is laid to have him executed as a member of a guerilla band.

The next scene that took the house by storm was the leap of "little pet" sister from a lofty peak, when pursued by a black fiend. This comes after the house of representatives, where negroes outnumber the whites about six to one, passes a bill, providing that the whites shall salute the blacks whenever they meet them; after the white men of the south are disfranchised, by reason of carpetbag rule; after a bill has been passed, permitting the inter-marriage of whites and blacks, after Stoneman, spurning the advice

TOWN TALK Nov. 13-1915

ONE OF THE BATTLE SCENES IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE NEXT WEEK.

TOWN TALK Nov. 13 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Liberty Theatre Film Success Booked for Newark Theatre Next Week.

If legal tangles and police board interference are overcome, Newarkers will have an opportunity next week to see "The Birth of a Nation." Manager Robbins has booked D. W. Griffith's great American play for two weeks at the Newark Theatre, and because the director picked suggestions for his theme from Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman"—objectionable to the negro race—opposition developed.

A remarkable thing about Mr. Griffiths plan is that words (except months at the Liberty Theatre, New York. After Monday there will be daily matinees, and the usual house prices will prevail.

MIRAM COOPER IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE NEXT WEEK.

Newark Eagle, Nov 15, 1915

NEWARK TO OFFER "BIRTH OF NATION"

Spectacular Photo-Play Used 18,000 People in Production of Film.

D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which commences a two weeks' engagement at the Newark Theater tonight, is decidedly the most remarkable historical spectacle ever presented in America.

Petersburg and Atlanta, Apomattox and Ford's Theater, the foothills of South Carolina and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan live again in Mr. Griffith's 12,000 feet of superb motion picture, which took eight months to produce. It cost $500,000, employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses.

The great spectacle is an epitome of scenes, incidents, characters, passions and emotions of the whole great period from 1861 to 1870—the period occupied by the Civil War and Reconstruction.

Some idea of its remarkable popularity may be gained from the statement that it has in the past nine months played to over 4,000,000 people throughout the United States.

When the engagement of the production now at the Liberty Theater, New York, ends, this month, it will have scored 725 appearances, the record number of consecutive performances in the history of metropolitan theatricals. It has also broken length of run records in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago.

The production which will be seen here will be exactly the same as the New York one, including a symphony orchestra of thirty.

Lilian Gish., NEWARK.

"The Birth of a Nation," Greatest of All Filmed Dramas; Griffith's Famous Pictures of War and Reconstruction Days

From left to right: The Little Colonel at Petesburg, Lincoln in his box at Ford's theater. Below: D. W. Griffith, the producer; Confederate volnteers off for war, and Miss Lillian Gish, the heroine.

Following a sensational tour through Texas, smashing all box office records and turning hundreds away in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, D. W. Griffith's spectacle of civil war and reconstruction days, "The Birth of a Nation," will bring its Texas season to a close at Byers opera house with seven performances, starting next Thursday night. Morning matinees have been provided for Friday and Saturday to take care of such overflow crowds as have poured into the theaters all along the route. "The Birth of a Nation," partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season, and the extraordinary advance sale indicates that the playhouse will not prove nearly large enough to accommodate the eager throngs.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the battle on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the desolation wrought by Sherman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal President; the harsh, radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the struggle. Ben Cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories, appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, is the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, when nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theater on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Carolina legislature of 1870, are exact fac-similies of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the picture, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war; again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor, whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gish as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miriam Cooper, as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant, respectively; George Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant governor of South Carolina; Walter Long, as the renegade negro Gus; Raoul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden, as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron, as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theater projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices, which are 25 cents to $2, at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees. "The Birth of a Nation," at Byers, three days, starting Thursday night, Nov. 18, Friday and Saturday morning, matinees at 10:15, afternoon matinee at 2:30, nights, Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8:15.

For the first time in the state of Georgia, D. W. Griffith's mighty historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be presented at the Grand for three days, beginning next Thursday night. Matinees have been arranged for Friday and Saturday, making five performances in all, and seats for the entire engagement will be placed on sale at the box office Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been running for several months in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and San Francisco, brushing aside all theatrical records and establishing a brand new standard of stage enterengagement at the ETAOIN Qetao tainment. When it terminates its engagement at the Liberty Theater, New York, two weeks hence, it will have been presented 725 times, having been shown twice every day, Sundays included, since last February. Not even "Peg O' My Heart," "Within the Law," and other dramatic successes which enjoyed long metropolitan runs, can approach this record.

So in addition to being the first Georgia city to witness the spectacle Augusta will be privileged to see it while it is still at the height of its success in New York and the other large cities mentioned. Furthermore, it will be shown at the Grand exactly as it is presented at the Liberty Theater, with symphony orchestra accompaniment of thirty pieces and the wonderful stage effects that have helped to make it the most-discussed theatrical offering in the world. The services of fifty people are employed in each presentation so that it is vastly more than a moving picture, as it is sometimes characterized by uninformed people.

As most readers of the newspapers and magazines know, "The Birth of a Nation" is a magnificent picturization of the story of the South's reconstruction. D. W. Griffith, a young Kentuckian and the son of a brevet major in the Confederate Army, drew upon Thomas Dixon's books, "The Clansmen" and "The Leopard's Spots" for the love interest of his production, but he also folowed authentic histories of the reconstruction period in the building of his "big scenes." Thus in "The Birth or a Nation" one finds the mellowing love romances of the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of the North, shedding a soft glow over the darker scenes of battle and controversy.

Copying photographs of the period and obtaining first-hand descriptions from decrepit veterans who actually took part in the incidents, Griffith has reproduced on a great outdoor stage and with 18,000 men and 3,000 horses in his acting company, Sherman's march to the sea the battle of Petersburg at its height, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomatox, Lincoln signing his call for volunteers and the assasination of the war president in Ford's Theater, Washington by John Wilkes Booth the night of April 14, 1865. The audience sees Booth leap from the stage box with the smoking pistol in his hand and almost hears him shout his immortal "sic semper tyrannis."

"The Birth of a Nation" is a powerful combination of motion photography, music and startling stage effects, depicting as it would be possible in no other way to depict, what the South suffered that a nation might be born. While it is founded upon the Dixon novels and plays, it dwarfs them all so completely that there is no comparison.

Miriam Cooper, Who Plays Margare t Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Grand Next Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

THE BIRTH OF A NATION

This Great Picture Will Be Shown for Three Days at Sherman Opera House, beginning Tomorrow

The next attraction at the Sherman Opera House will be D. W Griffith's mighty spectacle "The Birth of a Nation." The engagement begins on Monday Nov. 15 and is for 3 nights and 2 matinees.

This is the great production which is still making a record run of over 600 performances in New York City where it created the sensation of the season. It is estimated that over two million people have seen the production since it was originally brought out in the east. It has other sensational runs in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles to its credit.

Mr. Griffith was eight months making this wonderful story. He employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and the total cost of the work reached the enormous figure of half a million dollars.

The story is one of romance and adventure linked to the most vital periods of American history. It records its facts with the rapidity of lightning and yet never departs from the fundamentals of the true drama. Love and conflict are its basic theme but a myriad of details illumine the narrative and lift it so far beyond anything our stage has ever known that the usual avenues of comparison do not offer a road to follow in this instance. Linked with the drama is an operatic score which carries recurrent themes with every vital scene and character in the epic. This wonderful score which is synchronized to the drama is in itself an incomparable work of art. An orchestra of twenty travels with the attraction to handle the musical features of the presentation.

That part of history dealing with the rise and fall of the slavery problem is the vital spark upon which Grifith has built his story. The conflict which this question caused is reproduced in great battles and in all the thrilling things which are a part of the war.

LILLIAN GISH
Heroine of
"The Birth of A Nation"

HERMAN'S MARCH TO THE SEA DEPICTED IN STIRRING SCENES IN FILMIZATION OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

ONE OF THE GREAT PANORAMIC OCCURRENCES IN THE PLAY.

BIG FILM DRAMA TO COME NOV. 22

"Birth of a Nation" Highly Praised by Dallas Newspaper.

The following review of "The Birth of a Nation," which will be at the Overholser the week of November 22, appeared in the October 5 issue of the Dallas Morning News:

"As the Iliad of Homer is to an acrostic by a jokesmith, so is 'The Birth of a Nation' to the ordinary run of one-reel screen dramas.

"And just as the immortal epic of the Trojan war moves majestically through the regal splendors of the ancient poet's imagination, so the vivid imagery of the film artists threw its soul-wringing concepts upon the visualized consciousness of the large audiences at the Dallas Opera house last night. There were thrills and tears and pulsing pride mingled at a score of climatic moments with smiles and sighs and unclassified emotions. The press agents told us much in advance concerning this major effort of the photographic dramatists, but they could not convey to us a complete appreciation of the picture's obvious fidelity; nor the dash and spirit of the spectacle. Indeed, perhaps they failed to impress us with the magnitude of the portraiture, or with the astonishing realism in which were set as in a frame the most tragic episodes of our national life.

"'The Birth of a Nation' is history in motion—a wonderful counterfeit presentment of those tempestuous years when this union of states was being reborn in unfathomed pain, into an indivisible unity of nationalistic purpose. Possibly there are incidents here and there upon the moving page which do not accord with our personal traditions or preferences, whether we be of the south or of the north by nativity. Also there are glimpses into a black inferno which we would in free choice avoid, but back of each incident, and all of them, is substantial historic justification, and it may be that we should not flinch at the sight of pictures of that which our forbears felt in every fiber of their hearts.

"But if there are scenes we would edit out, there are besides granite-thick basreliefs of sweet sentiment and martial splendors. Throughout the whole rolling panorama there are opportunities to indulge the most intense satisfaction, for into it is woven with every thread that order of Americanism which is best interpreted by those Americans who experienced in fact those tragedies which we of a later generation experience only in pictures.

"It is impossible quickly to render a critical judgment of this offering as a theatrical performance. That may come later, for there are to be many presentations of this production here. It will suffice for the present to say that the lavish expenditure of money necessary to produce this master film comprehended not only great crowds of miscellaneous actors, but also a cast of principals of the highest quality. These gave to the more intimate scenes a personality and a charm which seemed almost to reach out and grasp the heartstrings of those who sat in witness.

"A massive and virile play it is, and one to see over and over again. D. W. Griffiths is the central spirit in the making of the piece and the second part is founded upon Thomas Dixon's well-known novel, 'The Clansman.'

"The entire play is worked out with great care as to historical detail, and the parts are taken by actors of experience both in photodrama and on the stage. Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Robert Harroun, Miriam Cooper and other well-known stars of the motion picture screen have parts in the vast production.

"The musical accompaniment of the film drama is deserving of particular commendation. It is furnished by an excellent symphony orchestra of forty pieces, specially trained and equipped to furnish appropriate and natural accompaniments of incidental sounds and music with the silent drama of the screen."

Oklahoma Times
Nov. 15-1915

THE OVERHOLSER

D. W. Griffith's master production, "The Birth of a Nation," will be the attraction at the Overholser commencing an engagement of a week on next Monday night.

It will be brought here at exact reproduction of the great attraction which is now in New York where it has broken every record of the American stage. These achievements alone have aroused more comment upon the subject of this great story than was ever devoted to a theatrical enterprise before.

The merest statement regarding "The Birth of a Nation," leaps to superlatives because there is no other form in which it can be written. Simple facts in relationship to its developments sound extravagant until you have seen the production and realized a tithe of its sweep and power. It covers the essential details of American history ranging through three centuries. Actual battles are shown with tens of thousands of soldiers in the conflict; 18,000 people participated in the telling of the story. Three thousand horses were used to give the cavalry and other thrilling effects of the wild dashes over miles of territory. Cities were built up only to be destroyed by fire. The total cost of the entire production was in the neighborhood of $500,000. Five hundred costumers and seamstresses worked for three months to make the costumes worn by the people; 10,000 yards of cloth were worked into the costumes worn by the women while 25,000 yards of white muslin were used up in human story of love and romance weaves through the vast spread of the action and grips the hearts of the audience. The narrative is filled with tears and smiles. A symphonic score accompanies the action and lends a potent force to the drama.

Kansas City Journal
Nov. 15-1915

Grand—"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation," the most wonderful and by far the most thrilling motion picture ever screened, began its last week at the Grand yesterday, playing to two good houses. Interest in this master film has increased steadily from its opening performance here three weeks ago. There is a reason. The picture itself is its best advertisement. Every person who sees it makes it his special business to tell his relatives, friends and acquaintances not to miss it.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells the story of the death of another, the Southern Confederacy; the new nation, the New South, rising from the ashes of the old. It depicts in the most dramatic fashion the incidents which led up to the rebellion and horrors of war itself. It shows the assassination of Lincoln and burns into the hearts of men today the fact that in Lincoln's death the South lost its best friend.

The picture also gives a most graphic portrait of incidents surrounding reconstruction days following the war, the time of the "carpet bagger" in the South when whites were disfranchised and the blacks were in control. Incidents follow thick and fast which bring about the organization of the Ku Klux Klan, which swept like a Juggernaut over an already blood-stained and stricken land, bringing order out of chaos.

Yet through it all there runs a pretty love story which has for its climax the union of Northern and Southern hearts. The picture is greatly enhanced by an augmented orchestra. It brings spectators to their feet with martial music and in the next instant they are all but sobbing during the strains of an old familiar Southern air.

THE AUGUSTA CHRONICLE, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1915

D. W. Griffith, the Young Southerner Whose Genius Made Possible "The Birth of a Nation," to Be Seen at the Grand Next Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN VIVIDLY DEPICTED IN "BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's Masterpiece Is Reproduction of Many Historical Incidents—Germ of the Great Production Implanted in Griffith When a Mere Boy by Stories of the War Told by His Father.

Only the person who has witnessed "The Birth of a Nation," with its 5,000 scenes of romance, strife and historical incidents, can appreciate the wonderful genius of the man who conceived such a gigantic production and carried it to success beyond his own fondest dreams. D. W. Griffith, the master-producer, who thus distinguished himself, is the son of J. W. Griffith, of Kentucky, a Confederate brigadier general and it was probably due to the fact that he grew up with a poet's vision of the war between the states, based upon his father's narratives, that he was able to throw his soul into this particular undertaking.

As most playgoers know, the spectacle which comes to the Grand next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, is a re-enactment of the story of the South's reconstruction, based upon "The Clansman," by Thomas Dixon. Griffith employed 18,000 people and 3,000 horses and spent eight months in making his production. Among the historical incidents that he has reproduced are Sherman's March to the Sea, Lee and Grant at Appomattox, the assassination of President Lincoln and the Battle of Petersburg.

While planning the Battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully as Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a sub-director.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted Petersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone switchboard. From it field-wires run to his various sub-generals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field-telephones in Civil War time.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or Von Kluck, Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spick and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags, even, have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Seats will be placed on sale tomorrow morning for the local engagement of "The Birth of a Nation." Matinees will be given Friday and Saturday.

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS NOVEMBER 15, 1915.

The Wonderful Spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," Opens Tonight.

Everything is in readiness for the opening performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music tonight. While the advance sale is satisfactory, there has been a tendency here, as in other cities where the spectacle has been shown, to buy for the later performances and Manager Crovo is fearful many will be turned away tomorrow and Wednesday. Much confusion and disappointment can be eliminated if patrons will buy their tickets early and attend tonight's performance so far as possible.

The Griffith spectacle is founded upon "The Clansman" and it exhibits the salient events of the war between the states. The formation of the Confederacy, Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's assassination at Ford's theatr , April 14, 1865, live before the spectator of the Griffith drama. In the second half the South's "second uprising"—this time against the carpetbagger regime—is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner; Essie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

But the great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Tremendous battle scenes and the wild rides of the Ku Klux Klan are staged with thousands of participants. Eighteen thousand human actors and 3,000 horses were employed in the making of the picture, which cost half a million dollars and took eight months to produce. Some idea of its immensity is gained from the fact that there

Nov. 15-1915

THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN,

The Birth of a Nation.

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be seen at the Overholser theater next week exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record breaking runs. This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all else the greatest thing that has been achieved by one producer.

Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours! You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making.

Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this framework they make these wonderful characters live again. They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling.

The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across blood-stained plains. The human note [illegible] in and through the entire [illegible] and lends itself to the mighti[illegible] story ever unfolded.

St Louis Times
Nov. 15-1915

GARRICK.

"The Birth of a Nation" celebrates its 150th performance in this city Monday night at the Garrick. Gov. Major, Mayor Kiel and other prominent men will attend. A banquet will be given by the picture managers at the Jefferson following tonight's performance.

this announcement a[illegible]

Oklahoman News

285

A NOVEMBER 15, 1915.

GRANT AND LEE SEEN IN 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

Altho the leaders of the opposing forces in the Civil war appear but for a moment in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Overholser for a week starting Nov. 22, the scene in which Gen. Grant receives the surrender of the army of the south from Gen. Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photo-play.

As the scene unfolds Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature rises, the contract between the two men is striking. Grant, about five feet eight inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop is without his sword, and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top-boots with trousers inside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror. A statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend and is accepted as such by the man in gray who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for with military salute they part a moment fate each other. Then and the incident of Appomattox court house is closed.

The Birth of a Nation.

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's massive spectacle, coming to the Overholser next week, is the largest and most important production of a decade, yet not a word is spoken thruout the performance of nearly three hours. Several of the actors are of Southern lineage. Henry Walthall, who plays the heroic role of the little Confederate colonel, is a member of the well-known Walthall family of Alabama. Miriam Cooper, who appears as Margaret Cameron, is a direct descendent of Charles Carroll, the Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Griffith is the son of a brigadier general of the Confederate army.

At the Theaters

THE OVERHOLSER

Gathering of the Klu Klux Klan a Scene in "The Birth of a Nation"

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil war and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Overholser all of next, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation," Gathering of "KuKlux Klan—"The Birth of a Nation."

producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on 'the day of days." Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handles this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of old North state. The race of the northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course. It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

St. Louis Star
Nov 16/15

MAJOR DELIVERS $324 ADDRESS ON 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

Auditors in Los Angeles and New York Hear Speech of Governer.

Governor Major delivered a 12-minute address at Hotel Jefferson last night concerning the one hundred and fiftieth performance in St. Louis of the "Birth of the Nation," over the long distance telephone at the rate of $27 a minute. His audience consisted of D. W. Griffith, producer of the film, who was listening at Los Angeles, Cal., and J. J. McCarthy in New York. The Governor's speech cost the company $324. Fifty men "listened in" at St. Louis.

After the Governor had finished, Postmaster Selph delivered a seven-minute speech, followed by Mayor Kiel, who spoke for five minutes. An additional five minutes was consumed by Guy Crosswell Smith, local manager for the company, in introducing the speakers. The twenty-nine minutes of speaking cost a total of $783.

Governor Major and the others were entertained at a performance at the Garrick Theater preceding a banquet, of which the telephone speeches were a feature.

Among the guests were: Mayor Fred W. Moliman of East St. Louis; Col. H. S. Rumsey and M. J. Collins of the Governor's staff; Colin M. Selph, Postmaster; Charles H. Daues, City Counselor; L. C. Dyer, Congressman; Homer Bassford, William M. Ledbetter, William Marion Reedy, J. M. McKelvey, Commissioner of Public Buildings; Florence McCarthy, J. L. Edwards and E. P. Lampkin, president of the Million Population Club.

THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1915.

The Birth of a Nation.

The new theatric art invented by David M. Griffith in producing "The Birth of a Nation," coming to the Overholser Monday night for a week's engagement, has enabled him to surpass by far any stage spectacle. "Ben Hur" and "The Blue Bird" were supposed to be the high-water mark for such productions. They sink into insignificance beside this epic of American history with its 5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 riders and 200,000 details, the result of eight months of tireless labor and the expenditure of half a million dollars.

The war plays of the stage such as "Shenandoah," "Held by the Enemy" and "Barbara Frietchie" seem tame after seeing the splendors of "The Birth of a Nation." In the Griffith spectacle the scenes of sheer beauty and strength are of Homeric grandeur. The night-riding of the Ku Klux Klan looms like a company of avenging specters sweeping along the moonlit roads. There is a pictorial punch in every scene.

This realistic picture of history in the making is of untold value to old and young. Besides the historical worth of this great spectacle the constant emotional throb of the romantic story thrills the hearts of all. It is the supreme achievement of modern histrionism in its new guise, untrammelled by the limitations of the theater.

St. Louis Republic
Nov. 16

FIFTY IN ST. LOUIS HEAR PHONE TALK ACROSS CONTINENT

Guests at Million Population Club Banquet Also Converse Over Line.

Fifty persons in St. Louis, including Mayor Kiel and Gov. Major, listened to telephonic communication between New York and Los Angeles at 12:15 o'clock this morning, and in turn exchanged felicitations with those at either end of the transcontinental line, more than 4000 miles long.

The affair was in celebration of the 150th production of The Birth of a Nation in St. Louis. The St. Louisans were guests at a dinner at Hotel Jefferson, given under the auspices of the Million Population Club. The telephoning was arranged over the lines of the Bell system.

Each dinner guest placed a receiver to his ear promptly at 12:15 o'clock and heard plainly an exchange of greetings between D. W. Griffith, producer of the play, and J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the film company. Griffith was in Los Angeles, McCarthy in New York. The talks lasted for half an hour.

The St. Louisans were told from the New York end that, judging from the patronage of The Birth of a Nation in the two cities, St. Louis is decidedly a better show town than New York.

Gov. Major and Mayor Kiel congratulated Griffith and McCarthy. New York, Los Angeles and St. Louis newspaper men exchanged greetings.

The after-dinner speakers were: Mayor Kiel, Gov. Major, Col. Frederick D. Gardner, Richard Spamer, dramatic critic of the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT; W. M. Ledbetter, managing editor of the Republic, and Otto F. Karbe.

St. Louis Republic
Nov 16/15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SCORES LONGEST ST. LOUIS RUN

Banquet Marked by $27 a Minute Cross-Continent Telephone Talks Follows 150th Performance.

The longest run that any theatrical attraction has ever reached in St. Louis was celebrated at the Garrick Theater last evening in the one hundred and fiftieth consecutive presentation in St. Louis of D. W. Griffith's photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation." After the performance a supper was served at Hotel Jefferson.

The Garrick was elaborately decorated with flags and flowers. The guest of honor, Mayor Kiel, occupied a box. The audience included Fred W. Mellman, Mayor of East St. Louis; Postmaster Colin M. Selph, E. P. Lampkin, president of the Million Population Club, and the Executive Committee of this organization.

At the hotel a long-distance conversation took place at 12:15 a. m. between Gov. Major and Mayor Kiel and Mr. Griffith at Los Angeles, Cal., and J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Corporation in New York. When the connection was made Guy Croswell Smith, manager of "The Birth of a Nation" in St. Louis, introduced Gov. Major to Mr. Griffith and Mr. McCarthy. Each of the 50 guests were supplied with individual long-distance receivers and listened to the exchange of felicitations over the 4,000 miles of cross-continent wire. Following the telephone conversation, which cost $27 a minute, there were short addresses by Postmaster Selph, who also officiated as toastmaster, Richard Spamer, William M. Ledbetter, Raymond Walsh, Otto F. Karbe and Col. Fred D. Gardener.

The guests at the supper included Homer Bassford, Louis H. Waltke, George A. Wipperman, Judge J. Hugo Grimm, Charles R. Graves, Dr. W. U. Kennedy, M. B. Anderson, J. N. McKelvey, J. B. Thomas, M. J. Collins,

St. Louis Star
Nov. 16/15

MAJOR DELIVERS $324 ADDRESS ON 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

Auditors in Los Angeles and New York Hear Speech of Governor.

Governor Major delivered a 12-minute address at Hotel Jefferson last night concerning the one hundred and fiftieth performance in St. Louis of the "Birth of the Nation," over the long distance telephone at the rate of $27 a minute. His audience consisted of D. W. Griffith, producer of the film, who was listening at Los Angeles, Cal., and J. J. McCarthy in New York. The Governor's speech cost the company $324. Fifty men "listened in" at St. Louis.

After the Governor had finished, Postmaster Selph delivered a seven-minute speech, followed by Mayor Kiel, who spoke for five minutes. An additional five minutes was consumed by Guy Crosswell Smith, local manager for the company, in introducing the speakers. The twenty-nine minutes of speaking cost a total of $783.

Governor Major and the others were entertained at a performance at the Garrick Theater preceding a banquet, of which the telephone speeches were a feature.

Among the guests were: Mayor Fred W. Moliman of East St. Louis; Col. H. S. Rumsey and M. J. Collins of the Governor's staff; Colin M. Selph, Postmaster; Charles H. Daues, City Counselor; L. C. Dyer, Congressman; Homer Bassford, William M. Ledbetter, William Marion Reedy, J. M. McKelvey, Commissioner of Public Buildings; Florence McCarthy, J. L. Edwards and E. P. Lampkin, president of the Million Population Club.

Nov. 16-1915

THE BUTLER CITIZEN.

"BIRTH OF NATION" WAS FINE SUCCESS AT MAJESTIC THEATER

The "Birth of a Nation," David W. Griffith's marvelous picturization of the story of the Clansman, dealing with the incidents leading up to the Civil war and the reconstruction period following the war, opened a three day engagement last night at Majestic theater to a crowded house.

The story in pictures begins with the home of the Cameron family in the south, the abolition meetings in the north and the stirring political events leading up the declaration of war in 1861. Facsimile pictures are given of Lincoln signing the first call for troops, historical scenes, scenes in the white house during the war, the surrender of General Lee at the close of the war and the assassination of President Lincoln. Battle scenes and hospital scenes are pictured in the first act with a vividness that is startling and an effect on the audience that is little short of marvelous.

Many of the women in the audience were in tears over some of the pathetic scenes, while a few men suddenly contracted colds in their heads in a most amazing fashion. The youngsters in peanut heaven were in exstracies of delight over the stirring events. In one place where the orchestra ceased playing for the moment to make the scene more effective a misguided youth in the gallery blew his nose like a trumpet, nearly upsetting the equilibrium of the audience.

The second act deals with the reconstruction periods after the war concerning which Allen Tourgee and others have written much and which is a matter of cold history.

The election of the negro legislature and the negro Lynch as lieutenant governor, the establishment of a military rule by negro soldiers aided by unprincipled white politicians are pictured with startling effect that holds the audience spellbound while the assembling of the Ku Klux Klansmen and the rescue of the Camerons from the cabin in the country and the daughter of Stoneman from the treacherous Lynch are the most thrilling spectacles ever witnessed at the Majestic theater.

An excellent orchestra of 17 pieces adds wonderfully to the effect of the TRENTON EVENING TIMES, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1915.

THEATRICAL

"BIRTH OF NATION" FOR TRENT AGAIN

"The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's photoplay spectacle, is attracting renewed attention at the Trent Theatre, where it is being given this week for a return engagement. The success of the first presentations is expected to be repeated. Two shows are to be presented daily during the remainder of the week.

Large assemblages yesterday felt the power of the thrilling scenes and applause was often heard.

Accompanied by an enlarged orchestra, the supernumeraries behind the screen to make noises appropriate to the scene and a corps of operators, the production justifies the claims made for it.

Following historical data of the struggle between the North and South, the photodrama has the additional value of being very instructive. The story has been placed around the Southland's dealing with negroes after the Emancipation. With its thousands of performers in the battle scenes, the burning of Atlanta on Sherman's march to the sea, the shooting of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre, the operation of the "Ku Klux Klan," and the hundreds of other views in the three-hour presentation, the production is remarkable.

D. W. Griffith presents the offering which he has founded on Dixon's work, "The Clansman." Many months were spent in its preparation. Historical buildings were restored just to obtain the proper effects. The leads are in the hands of competent players. They include: Henry Walthall, Miriam Cooper, Mae Marsh, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoods Aiken, J. A. Beringer, Maxfield Stanley, Jennie Lee, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, Elmer Clifton, Robert Harron, Wallace Reed, Mary Alden, George Seigmann, Walter Long, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, William De Vaull, William Freeman, Thomas Wilson.

Globe-Democrat
Nov. 16, 15

FIFTY IN ST. LOUIS HEAR PHONE TALK ACROSS CONTINENT

Guests at Million Population Club Banquet Also Converse Over Line.

Fifty persons in St. Louis, including Mayor Kiel and Gov. Major, listened to telephonic communication between New York and Los Angeles at 12:15 o'clock this morning, and in turn exchanged felicitations with those at either end of the transcontinental line, more than 4000 miles long.

The affair was in celebration of the 150th production of The Birth of a Nation in St. Louis. The St. Louisans were guests at a dinner at Hotel Jefferson, given under the auspices of the Million Population Club. The telephoning was arranged over the lines of the Bell system.

Each dinner guest placed a receiver to his ear promptly at 12:15 o'clock and heard plainly an exchange of greetings between D. W. Griffith, producer of the play, and J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the film company. Griffith was in Los Angeles, McCarthy in New York. The talks lasted for half an hour.

The St. Louisans were told from the New York end that, judging from the patronage of The Birth of a Nation in the two cities, St. Louis is decidedly a better show town than New York.

Gov. Major and Mayor Kiel congratulated Griffith and McCarthy. New York, Los Angeles and St. Louis newspaper men exchanged greetings.

The after-dinner speakers were: Mayor Kiel, Gov. Major, Col. Frederick D. Gardner, Richard Spamer, dramatic critic of the GLOBE-DEMOCRAT; W. M. Ledbetter, managing editor of the Republic, and Otto F. Karbe.

TUESDAY Nov. 16-1915 THE ST. LOUIS TIMES.

Cross-Country Phone Talk at Birth of Nation Banque

Scene at the "Birth of a Nation" dinner given Monday night at Hotel Jefferson. At head table—Center, Postmaster Selph, toastmaster; to his left, Gov. Major, Col. Horace Rumsey, Guy Croswell Smith, manager of picture, and Richard Spamer. To Mr. Selph's right, Mayor Kiel, Mayor Mollman of East St. Louis, E. P. Lampkin, president of the Million Population Club, and William Ledbetter. Among others at the tables were Col. Fred Gardner, Edmond Koeln, Joseph Thomas, James M. McKelvey, Otto F. Karbe, Charles R. Graves, Martin Collins, Melville Stoltz and Walter Sanford.

One of the most interesting innovations ever conceived for a dinner entertainment featured the banquet given at Hotel Jefferson Monday night by the managers of the "Birth of a Nation" picture, in celebration of the picture's one hundred and fiftieth performance in St. Louis.

Those attending the banquet were given telephone receivers connected with central wire over which a conversation between New York and Los Angeles took place. The telephone communication was arranged by the picture managers and the Bell Telephone Company. At Los Angeles D. W. Griffith, producer of the "Birth of a Nation," was speaking. In New York J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Company, held the wire. Guy Croswell Smith, local manager of the picture, introduced Gov. Major and Mayor Kiel to both Griffith and McCarthy over the phone, and an exchange of felicitations took place. Everyone at the banquet heard the conversation through their respective receivers. The connection was perfect and the voices distinct.

At the Garrick Theater the house was properly decorated for the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary, Monday night. Gov. Major, Mayor Kiel and others who attended the banquet sat through the picture. The dinner was served at 11:30 p. m. at the Jefferson. Addresses were made by Mayor Kiel, Gov. Major, Col. Fred Gardner, Richard Spamer and others.

GRAND IS PREPARING FOR IMMENSE AUDIENCES AT HISTORICAL SBECTACLE

Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" Will Doubtless Fill Opera House at Every Performance—Ticke ts On Sale This Morning—First Show Thursday.

It is expected that a long line will greet the treasurer of the Grand when he opens the seat sale this morning for "The Birth of a Nation," the Griffith historical spectacle which is to be presented for five performances during the last half of the week. The engagement will begin on Thursday night and will continue Friday and Saturday at 3 and 8:30 p. m., making five performances in all.

Lillian Gish, Whose Golden Aureole Type of Beauty Makes Her One Of the Most Popular Principals in "The Birth of a Nation," to Be Seen At the Grand Thursday, Friday And Saturday, With Friday and Saturday Matinee.

Inasmuch as Augusta is the first city in Georgia to witness the spectacle, the Thursday night performance will be in the nature of a "first night," with society present in numbers. In fact Manager Tant urges that all who can conveniently attend the opening performance do so and thus aid him in minimizing the congestion that is always felt at the final performances in theaters where "The Birth of a Nation" is shown. In Richmond, where the spectacle was presented for a week at the Academy of Music, it became necessary to summon extra police to restrain the crowds from "rushing" the theater at the Friday and Saturday performances, and even an extra Saturday morning performance failed to relieve the situation. In Norfolk, where the company opened its southern tour several weeks ago, the line at the box office was unbroken for five days.

Extra ushers have been engaged to handle the Friday and Saturday crowds at the Grand, and while every possible step will be taken to prevent confusion, patrons can best insure their comfort by attending the opening performance.

The services of fifty people are employed in presenting "The Birth of a Nation" and the spectacle runs two hours and forty-five minutes. A symphony orchestra of thirty will play the elaborate score which is synchronized to its 5,000 scenes in which 18,000 people and 3,000 horses are seen.

St Louis Globe-Democrat Nov. 16.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SCORES LONGEST ST. LOUIS RUN

Banquet Marked by $27 a Minute Cross-Continent Telephone Talks Follows 150th Performance.

The longest run that any theatrical attraction has ever reached in St. Louis was celebrated at the Garrick Theater last evening in the one hundred and fiftieth consecutive presentation in St. Louis of D. W. Griffith's photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation." After the performance a supper was served at Hotel Jefferson.

The Garrick was elaborately decorated with flags and flowers. The guest of honor, Mayor Kiel, occupied a box. The audience included Fred W. Mollman, Mayor of East St. Louis; Postmaster Colin M. Selph, E. P. Lampkin, president of the Million Population Club, and the Executive Committee of this organization.

At the hotel a long-distance conversation took place at 12:15 a. m. between Gov. Major and Mayor Kiel and Mr. Griffith at Los Angeles, Cal., and J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Corporation in New York. When the connection was made Guy Croswell Smith, manager of "The Birth of a Nation" in St. Louis, introduced Gov. Major to Mr. Griffith and Mr. McCarthy. Each of the 50 guests were supplied with individual long-distance receivers and listened to the exchange of felicitations over the 4,000 miles of cross-continent wire. Following the telephone conversation, which cost $27 a minute, there were short addresses by Postmaster Selph, who also officiated as toastmaster, Richard Spamer, William M. Ledbetter, Raymond Walsh, Otto F. Karbe and Col. Fred D. Gardener.

The guests at the supper included Homer Bassford, Louis H. Waltke, George A. Wipperman, Judge J. Hugo Grimm, Charles R. Graves, Dr. W. U. Kennedy, M. B. Anderson, J. N. McKelvey, J. B. Thomas, M. J. Collins,

The Pittsburgh Post Nov 16-15

MILES—"Birth of a Nation" Film.

Entering yesterday the last two weeks of the unprecedented run in Pittsburgh which began the first week in September in the Nixon, "The Birth of a Nation" photo spectacle attracted more crowds to the Miles Theater.

The potent influence of the orchestral accompaniment continues to make itself felt in the stirring projection of these swift-moving scenes picturing those history-making days of the 60s. Spectators are thrilled anew by the sweep of music attuned to the spectacle of marching troops, the rush of the galloping Ku Klux Klan, the battling at Petersburg, and the thousands of other scenes.

Among the favorites pictured in the action is Lillian Gish, who has just arrived here, staying with relatives in Knoxville.

The greatest motion picture achievement, the triumph of D. W. Griffith, is to close the record run of 14 weeks Saturday, November 27.

Stage THEATRES Screen

Conducted by D. F. STEVENSON, Dramatic Editor

"BIRTH OF NATION" BEST IN FILM ART

D. W. GRIFFITH'S AMAZING SPECTACLE REPEATS SUCCESS AT TRENT.

ORCHESTRA IS LARGER

Presented in exactly the same manner as in this city last September, with the same accompanying effects and the same symphonic score, "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's gigantic film achievement, repeated its previous success here at the Trent theatre yesterday afternoon and evening.

Two large audiences cheered, applauded and sent forth volleys of whistling response in recognition of the wonders of this historic spectacle. The tremendous powers of the battle and the mob scenes—so numerous throughout the story—held the two crowds spell-bound. All were on the seat's edge, it seemed. All eyes were commanded by the rapid-fire action.

"The Birth of a Nation" is unquestionably a stupendous undertaking, embracing as it does the chaotic times of the terrible war between the North and the South and the bloody race riots that ran rampant for months following their union. As the Civil war and the Reconstruction period that followed form the basis of the story, the picture is brimful of patriotic deeds and splendor—a fact that accounts for a great deal of its popularity.

Of incalculable valfie to the presentation of this masterpiece is the symphonic music, arranged by Joseph Carl Briel and representing typical tunes of war times, as well as martial melodies and tripping bars that set the foot astir. The accompanying music is a distinguished feature. The orchestra is augmented to the extent of thirty pieces, there being three pieces more than in the orchestra that accompanied the picture in September.

Scene after scene in both parts of the film—that of the war and of "The Clansman" story—shows minute detail, even in the portrayal of the cowardly assassination of President Abraham Lincoln while he was seeing the performance of "Our American Cousin," at Ford's theatre, Baltimore, April 14, 1865. Then there is Lincoln's call for troops, a ball on the eve of the battle of Bull Run, the first triumph of the Confederacy, Sherman's devastating march to the sea, the burning of the city of Atlanta, the siege of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and finally the tumultuous scenes of the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan. Slavery and colored servitude in the south are shown in all their horribleness.

Also, there is a soothing love interest running through both acts, this being between a Northern girl and a Southerner and a Southern girl and a Northerner. Henry B. Walthall is conspicuously clever in the chief male role, and Mae Marsh is admirable in the leading feminine part. Others in the ensemble are: Lillian Gish, as the Northern girl; Miriam Cooper, a beautiful girl, as the Southern girl; Spottiswood Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, George Seigman, as the mulatto lieutenant governor; Walter Long, as the renegade negro; Joseph Henaberry, as Abraham Lincoln; Raoul Walsh, as John Wilkes Booth; Donald Crisp, as General Grant, and Howard Heye, as General Lee.

The program of effects, electrical and otherwise, enhances to an unusual extent the effectiveness of the picture.

Fortunately—or thanks to the enterprising methods of Manager Moses—the spectacle will remain at the Trent theatre for the week, to offer two presentations daily. It would not be exaggeration to say that almost every one who saw it last September will want to see it again. The amazing qualities of production are sufficient to draw ten more capacity houses. Don't miss it!

D. F. STEVENSON.

Butler Pa. Times 11/14/15

CROWDED HOUSES FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

IMMENSE CROWD OF BUTLER PEOPLE GREET FAMOUS PICTURES OF "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE MAJESTIC.

Capacity huses greeted the famous picture, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Majestic theatre on Monday evening and this afternoon, all records at the big playhouse having been broken for these fine pictures, detailing the stories of the Civil war and the re-construction period.

The pictures are certainly wonderful in conception and marvelous in execution, displaying the highest skill on the part of designers and actors.

The story in pictures begins with the home of the Cameron family in the South, the abolition meetings in the North, and the stirring political events leading up to the declaration of war in 1861. Fac-simile pictures are given of Lincolin signing the first call for troops, historical scenes and scenes in the White House during the war, the surrender of General Lee at the close of the war, and the assassination of President Lincoln. Battle scenes and hospital scenes are pictured in the first act with a vividness that is startling and an effect on the audience that is little short of marvelous.

An orchestra of 17 pieces, made up of skilled musicians, furnish the music while the pictures are being shown and adds to the intensity of the dramatic scenes which make up this really wonderful picture.

The pictures will be shown this afternoon and evening and tomorrow afternoon and evening, with indications that each performance will be to crowded houses and that the people will be more than pleased with the great show.

this announcement —

BIRTH OF NATION MAKES GREAT HIT AT THEATRE HERE

SPLENDORS OF SUBLIME PHOTO-PLAY NOT HALF TOLD IN PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENTS —MAGNIFICENT SPECTACLE

No stage play was ever written or ever can be written which thrilled or will thrill its beholders as does the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," which opened for a three-day engagement at the Majestic theatre in this city Monday evening. While the splendors of the picture have been told in the announcements previous to the appearance of the screen play here, it is not within the power of any writer to do justice to the magnificence of D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle. While practically everyone in Butler has seen screen plays, there is a difference in the pictures of "The Birth of a Nation" which separates them from the ordinary photoplay. The Majestic theatre was packed to the doors Monday night and the pictures made a great hit.

In the "Birth of a Nation" there are hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors and armies operating as they do in times of war, covering a wide field and performing countless evolutions in the movements necessary to properly show the effect of battles. In fact the play is a whole art gallery of scenery, of hunmanity, of still life and life in wildest career. There are portraits of things, of furniture, of streets, homes, wildernesses; pictures of conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, amries; pictures of family life, of festivals and funerals, ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower-gardents, hypocricy and passion, ecstay and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny. Picturesquely shown are the Southerners in their wealth and luxury at home, their wind-swept cotton fields, the ballroom with seething dancers, soldiers riding away to war and soldiers trudging home defeated, with poverty ahead of them and new and ghastly difficulties arising on every hand—the epic of a proud, brave people beaten into the dust and refusing to stay there.

The pictures shifted with unending variety from huge canvasses to exquisite minatures. Now it was a little group of refugees cowering in the ruins of a home. A shift of the camera and the beholder is looking past them into a great valley with an army fighting its way through. One moment Abraham Lincoln is seen brooding over his emancipation proclamation and another he is yielding to a mother's tears.

Starting with the period just previous to the great war between the states the play deals graphically with the war's beginning, its prosecution and finish and the troublous times of the carpethaggers and their government of the south, when the black man took the place of white and chaos reigned until the secret organization known as the Ku Klux Klan, weirdly garbed, carried the fiery cross through the land and forced a betterment of conditions. The Clansmen, hundreds of them, mounted, made a great spectacle in the film.

Rev. Charles H. Parhurst, the famous divine of New York, gives it as his opinion that a boy can learn more true history and get more of the atmosphere of the period by sitting down for three hours before the great panorama which Mr. Griffith has produced with such artistic skill than by weeks and months of study in the class-room. Dr. Parkhurst also further remarks that the battle scenes which Mr. Griffith has depicted are of surpassing power and realism. There are also scenes of surpassing dignity and beauty. The tender affection in which Mr. Lincoln is held is always manifested by audiences in the scene of the heart-broken southern mother pleading with him for the life of her son who has been sentenced to death as a spy. There are few eyes in which

NEXT WEEK.

Monday—"The Birth of a Nation." 8:30 P. M.

Tuesday—"The Birth of a Nation." Matinee 3 P. M. Night 8:30.

Wednesday—"The Birth of a Nation." Matinee 3 P. M. Night 8:30.

"The Birth of a Nation."

The Virginian-Pilot and the Norfolk Landmark.

The realistic picturization of an epoch in history is what D. W. Griffith undertakes to do in that masterpiece of motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which was presented at the Colonial last night to a packed house, and regardless of whether the play is one calculated to do good, insofar as vivid and graphic portraiture of the turbulous and chaotic days of the Civil war and the days of reconstruction is concerned, the production is a thrill with the spirit of tumult and confusion and abounding in the horrors of war, of rapine and desolation.

For sheer tenseness of dramatic interest, Mr. Griffith's work is probably without parallel. Certainly in perfection of effect, in photography and in the thousands of details that have gone into building this greatest epic of film history, the producer has shown a degree of genius not attained by any other. In historical accuracy he builds Ford's theatre and presents with faithful attention to actuality the assassination of Lincoln; the session of the black legislature in South Carolina is shown in a hall constructed from a photograph. Sherman's march through Georgia, the burning of Atlanta, the fighting around Petersburg, the gathering of the Ku Klux—these furnish subjects for spectacular scenes on a scale beyond the dreams of the living stage.

It is a production that holds its audience as has nothing else in the memory of this writer.

The play is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, but Griffith's master hand has subordinated the blatancy of the book.

It portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the old South, quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the great outbreak. Comes the first intimation of the national storm that is brewing. Then the war. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation follows; and the gaunt spectre of war shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. The great battle that determined the war is staged; then comes the peace of war—a sickly, miserable peace. The work of rebuilding the South commences under the guidance of Lincoln; then the assassination of the one man who could control the dissenting force. The dark days of negro supremacy in the South are pictured. Follows the rise of the Ku Klux Klan. A swee, though sometimes sad, love strain surges through the land's misrerers and scenes relieving the high tension of the spirit of the drama are introduced.

With the coming of the Ku Klux the negro supremacy is put down though more bloodshed, following a gerilla warfare. The production shows the agony that the South endured that a nation might be born.

Winsome Mae Marsh, as Flora, the ill-fated youngest daughter of the South Carolina Camerons, handles the leading feminine role in a captivating style. Starry-eyed Lillian Gish is exceptionally good as Elsie Stoneman, the daughter of the leader of the Radical party. Josephine Crowell acted the part of Mrs. Cameron, a mother of many sorrows, and Miriam Cooper, a sweet and winsome Margaret Cameron, a daughter of the Old South. The role of Col. Ben Cameron was handled by Henry Walthall. Elmer Clifton was Phil Stoneman. George Seigmann was cast in the role of the ambitious negro lieutenant governor, Silas Lynch.

The music throughout the entire production is a notable feature.

BIRTH OF NATION WAS STUPENDOUS

Greatest Photoplay of Old South, Civil War and Reconstruction, and Most Gripping and Inspiring Yet Presented Here.

The "Birth of a Nation," seen for the first time at the Academy of Music last night was the greatest presentation of one of the greatest dramas in the South history that has thus far been given to the public as a grand photoply.

From the beginning of the photoplay showing Southern home-life till the last sweep of the Ku Klux Klan across the vista, the affair held interest, emotional, well-nigh overwhelming at times, and the presentation, lasting from 8:30 till 11:30 last night, was witnessed by a large house.

The great picture is based on the story in "The Clansman," and in the beginning it is announced on the screen that the purpose is to destroy the desire for war by showing its horrors, and in this latter purpose the play was unparalleled, unless some great artist shall be able to depict the European war and its horrors.

Among the notable pictures were the trench-fighting, part of this at night, and the shelling of the opposing armies; the pictures of Lincoln; and the tragedy of Lincoln's death, the South's hardest blow.

Reconstruction.

But for real excitement, when the nerves tingle and the applause grows uproarious at times, let one choose the presentations of reconstruction scenes, and the reign of terror that threatened the whole South till the "Invisible Empire," of the Ku Klux Klan appeared on the scene, beginning with the conception of the idea to its fullest realization, when the mysterious riders saved women, children and a whole town from the dangers of a mob of negroes incited by carpet-baggers.

Pictures Are the Best.

Nothing approaching in extent and artistic prepartion has perhaps ever been seen in this city. The pictures are alive with life and color and every scene whether at close focus or distant, brings out the figures in the scene perfectly.

The photo-play was remarkable in the fixed attention which it held, and it was peculiar in that there were but two brief moments of laughter. It was war and its horrors, and the spectators, keyed to the full realization of the word, did not want to laugh. It was a tribute to the skill of the photoplay that the vast house at the Academy did not laugh but a few times, and then it was at some negro mammy's antics. The crowd had absorbed the spirit of the author of the play, and the applause which greeted some of the wonderful scenes was immense.

Ku Klux Ride.

But the riding of the Ku Klux Klan, and their timely arrival at critical moments when besieged fugitives from their homes, or when white men and women were in danger, and when a whole town had become filled with rioting negroes—these were such as to make the spectator realize the power of this "Invisible Empire" probably as nothing else in the whole play did. The feature as a technical piece of work is great, as is the whole presentation, but the drama, and that hardly melodrama to the Southerner, of the Ku Klux Klan is beyond the limits of description. Men and women applauded these scenes with gusto and with tears sometimes in their eyes.

The photoplay will be seen this afternoon and tonight, and tomorrow afternoon and night ,and there is no doubt but that every presentation will bring out a large house, and that many will feel impelled to return to witness theg reat entertainment again before it leaves this city.

Veterans to See Play.

This morning one or two ladies of the city, who are much interested in the Confederate veterans secured the consent of the management of the "Birth of a Nation," to confer with Manager Crovo as to giving the Charlotte veterans an opportunity to see the great play Wednesday afternoon, and Mr. Crovo readily granted the request.

Confederate veterans will be admitted free to the play tomorrow afternoon, and are asked to be present at 2:30 p. m. in order that they may

29D

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS NOVEMBER 17, 1915.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Producer of "The Birth of a Nation," the great historic spectacle be seen at the Academy of Music today.

Last Performance of "The Birth of A Nation" to be Staged in the Academy Today.

Tonight's performance of "The Birth of a Nation" will mark the passing of the big Griffith spectacle from the local theatrical map and those who have not yet witnessed it should not delay in purchasing tickets. While the advance sale indicates a capacity audience, there are still some good seats to be had at the boxoffice.

It is doubtful that Charlotte playgoers will have another opportunity to see "The Birth of a Nation." The company now at the Academy is the only one on tour in the south and it is booked for long engagements in Atlanta, New Orleans and the principal cities of Texas. So tremendous has been the patronage during the local engagement that Manager Crovo has tried to arrange a return date but he has been given scant encouragement owing to the bookings mentioned.

As to the possibility of the spectacle being presented later in the smaller theaters, it is stated that Mr. Griffith will not allow "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown except at his regular scale of prices and in theaters having adequate facilities for staging the spectacle.

Nov. 17th 1915

FORT WORTH RECORD.

Velerans Will See "Birth of a Nation" Thursday Afternoon

Veterans of the war between the states, wearers of both the blue and the gray, will witness the great film play, "The Birth of a Nation," Thursday afternoon at the Byers as guests of the management. Decorators from Washer Brothers early Thursday morning will start to work dressing the boxes to be occupied by the old soldiers in a fashion suited to the occasion.

It is also quite probable that each veteran will be provided with miniature flags as they stand in line ready for the march to the opera house to the music of a fife and drum. It is expected that they will keep step in a way that will be the envy of the Texas National Guard.

Manager Greenwall of the Byers wants every veteran present, as he feels that the picture will be enjoyed by the old boys who saw in reality what the picture depicts.

The Pittsburgh Post, Nov. 17-1915

But another week remains to see "The Birth of a Nation" now at the Miles Theater. Saturday evening, November 27, will bring to a close in this city the long engagement of the famous Griffith spectacle.

Nov. 17-1915

THE OKLAHOMA NEWS.

"BIRTH OF A NATION"

David Wark Griffith who startled the world with his wonderful combination of film and operatic drama called "The Birth of a Nation," the Thanksgiving week attraction at the Overholser theater, is a native of Kentucky. He began his public career as an extra actor in a Louisville stock company. He also studied grand opera and developed a splendid baritone voice. He became interested in pictures as a scenario writer but the technical side of the work fascinated him. He commands the largest salary ever paid a director of any amusement enterprise in this country.

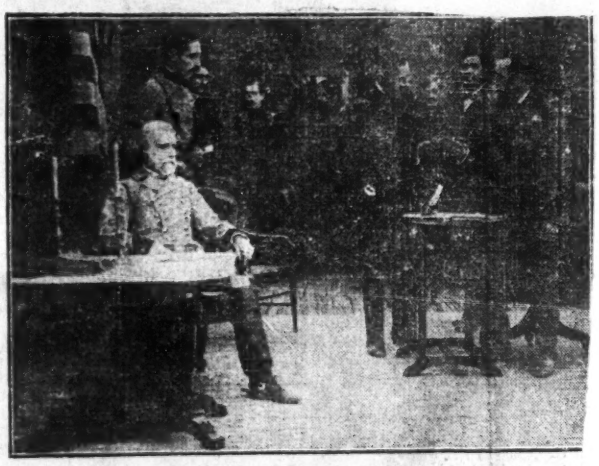
Nov. 17-1915

THE OKLAHOMA TIMES

THE OVERHOLSER

Among all the film actors playing histor cal characters in "The Birth of a Nation" spectacle to be seen at the Overholser beginning Nov. 22, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp have received the most compliments on the faithfulness of their work, the one as General Robert E. Lee and the other as General U. S. Grant.

The picture shows General Lee surrendering to General Grant in the Wilmer-McLean mansion at Appomattox court house, Va., April 9, 1865. It is a most faithful reproduction of all the personages in the great historic scene and of the minute details of the action.



LEE AND GRANT

At Appomatox in "The Birth of a Nation"

It is well known that many supporters of the defeated confederacy wished to prolong the struggle by means of a guerilla warfare similar to that used by the Boers towards the close of the Anglo-Boer war. In fact John Wilkes Booth supposed that in killing President Lincoln he would have the support of the south in a new struggle. But General Lee was of a different temper. He realized that the south had been beaten in a fair struggle on the fields of battle and that prolonging the fighting would merely add to the horrors and miseires endured by his people. Therefore, after the battle of Five Forks, he opened negotiations with Grant and on the morning of April 9th under the budding apple trees of an Appomattox orchard were determined the terms of peace which were formally written down at the Wilmer-McLean house in the afternoon.

Lee had dressed for his last public occasion with great care. Grant on the contrary lacked his full dress and appeared in the 'fatigue" and dusty jack boots of the hard campaign. Strangely enough General Lee had no pencil to write with. A pocket ink stand and pen were lent by an officer of the general staff, and it was with these that the historic document of surrender was written. Afterwards an effort was made to arrest and indict Lee for treason, but Grant, who knew Lee's nobility of character and how he had fulfilled to the letter all the surrender obligations, prevented any such disgraceful sequel to the great vent.

H. Denison Morning Gazette Nov. 17, 1915

MANY DENISONIANS AT TEND "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Quite a number of Denisonians attended the "Birth of a Nation" at Sherman yesterday afternoon and last night, and others are going today and tonight. Those who saw these pictures speak in the highest terms of the spectacle, and say that the large audience was moved to tears time and again during the performance. These pictures are the most magnificent ever staged, and may never be shown in this vicinity again. A matinee this afternoon and the show tonight finishes the engagement.

Charlotte News Nov. 17-1915

"Birth of a Nation" Seen by Veterans— Last Show is To-night

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the great play, "The Birth of a Nation," was presented before another large house. Last night and this afternoon at 3 o'clock many members of Mecklenburg Camp, United Confederate Veterans were present to witness the play at the kindly invitation of the management. It proved an unusual opportunity to carry the veterans back to the days of civil strife, and many wept while others shouted at the realistic productions of the film, in which they had once been moving actors.

The play has scored a great hit in this city and with the performance tonight will have given five shows here, each one of which has been presented to a full house.

The pictures are such as cannot be forgotten and to those who were not well versed in war history, the Ku Klux Klan, the aftermath of the great war and other features, proved great in their educational value.

The "Birth of a Nation" will be received with enthusiasm in the South wherever it is shown.

29/1

Nov. 17th 1915

CHARLOTTE DAILY OBSERVER

THE MIRACLE MOVIE HERE AGAIN TODAY

Last Two Performances to Be Given at the Academy This Afternoon and Night.

Today's performances of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Academy of Music will afford playgoers of Charlotte and surrounding towns their final opportunity to witness the film-and-music version of "The Clansman." Nothing that the Academy has offered in years has awakened so much local interest and it is expected that the playhouse will be jammed to its capacity this afternoon and tonight.

While the advance sale indicates two large audiences, there are still some good seats for both performances to be had at the boxoffice and those who have not yet witnessed the spectacle are urged to make their purchase as early as possible.

If there is any hope among those who have not yet bought their tickets that "The Birth of a Nation" will eventually be seen in the smaller theaters it is a forlorn one because D. W. Griffith, the producer, has stated emphatically that he will never allow it to be shown except in first class playhouses at prices customarily charged for the best attractions. In fact only the largest theaters can provide the proper facilities for staging the spectacle, as those who have seen it can understand.

M V

2-17-1915

THE STATE: COLUMBIA, S. C.

RICHMOND'S MAYOR LIKED PHOTOPLAY

George Ainslie Says "The Birth of a Nation" is Thrilling Spectacle.

George Ainslie, mayor of Richmond, wrote as follows, under date of October 28, to Daniel Shea, manager of "The Birth of a Nation," which photospectacle is to be exhibited shortly at the Columbia theatre:

"I have not heard the slightest unfavorable comment on 'The Birth of a Nation,' the photoplay now showing in Richmond, but, on the contrary, those who have been fortunate enough to have seen it, and who have related their impressions to me, have given it unstinted praise.

"I saw it myself and I consider it the most thrilling, gripping presentation of any theme I ever witnessed.

"Of course, there are scenes, particularly in part 2, that one might well wish had never been acted in real life, but the indisputable record proves their truth, and thousands of persons now living in this country can testify that they knew and saw them. They were, however, of a time half a century gone, and why any one should think that their mimic portrayal in this day should cause either immediate breaches of the peace or disorders in the friendly relations between the whites and blacks of today is beyond my comprehension. Such results should follow only where very little provocation was needed.

"While I think that each community should decide the question of the presentation of the play for itself, I can say that in Richmond, where the colored population is about 38 per cent. of the total, the peace and good order of the community were never better, and that we have no reason to believe that any race antagonism will be engendered by the presentation of this play here.

"Artistically, musically and mechanically, your offering is simply wonderful, and I wish that all of our good friends and fellow citizens, particularly those in the Northern States, could see it."

this anno

The Belleville Post Zeitung
Nov. 18-1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

D. W. Griffith's Meisterstück, „The Birth of a Nation", wird an zwei Tagen, am Sonntag und Montag, den 28. und 29. November in dem hiesigen Washington Theater aufgeführt werden.

Das Stück wird genau so hier aufgeführt werden wie es in New York aufgeführt wurde, wo alle bisherigen Leistungen auf der amerikanischen Bühne bei weitem übertroffen hat. Es ist ein historisches Drama aus der amerikanischen Geschichte und deckt einen Zeitraum von drei Jahrhunderten. Wirkliche Schlachten werden aufgeführt, an denen Abertausende von Soldaten theilnehmen. 18,000 Personen betheiligten sich an der Aufführung um das Wandelbild herzustellen außer 3000 Pferden, Kavallerie: Städte wurden gebaut um wieder durch Feuer zerstört zu werden. Die Kosten der Produktion beliefen sich auf $500,000. Nähere Einzelheiten werden in späteren Ausgaben folgen.

Daily Oklahoman
Nov. 18-1915

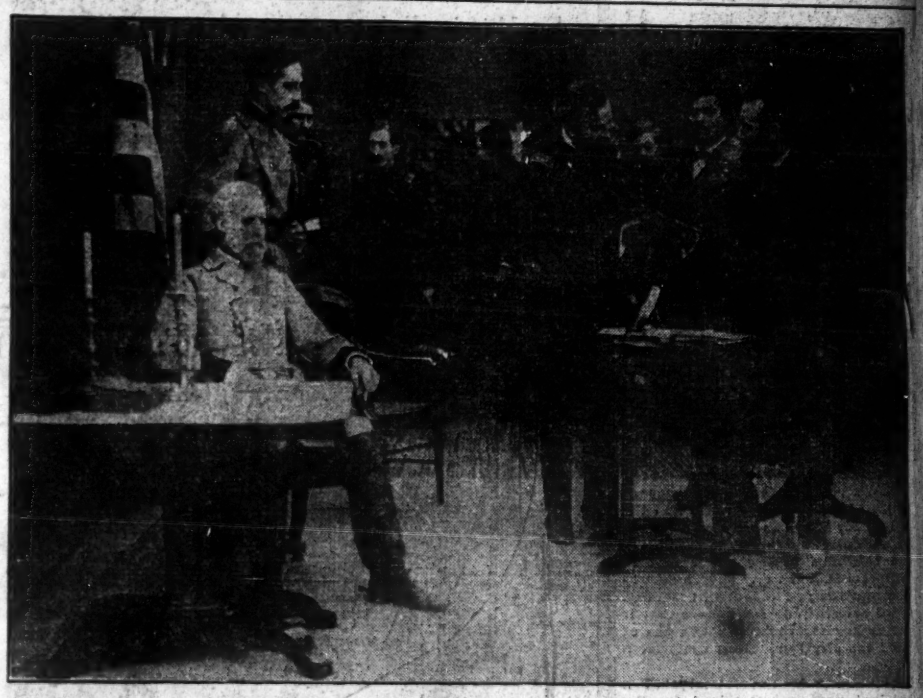
3/93

"Birth of a Nation."

The Thanksgiving week attraction at the Overholser theater will be D. W. Griffith's wonderful production, "The Brith of a Nation," which begins its engagement Monday night. This mighty spectacle has turned the theater records of America topsy-turvy. It holds the long distance runs in New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco to date and is making a triumphant tour which is causing more comment than anything ever undertaken in the drama of this country heretofore. It is a story of American history, showing the rise and fall of slavery in this country and the terrible suffering that was endured before a solution of this problem was reached. It is not so much history as it is drama and romance in a new form of expression, with an operatic accompaniment in the way of a symphonic score which shows the power of blending the two in this unique projection. Nothing like it was ever seen before. Nothing its equal is likely to be accomplished until D. W. Griffith has time to select another theme for his genius of expression.

FORT WORTH RECORD. THURSDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 18, 1915.

Surrender of Lee's Sword at Appomattox In "The Birth of a Nation," at the Byers



The film portrayal of the surrender of the sword of General Lee to General Grant at Appomattox is one of the marvelous examples of detail in "The Birth of a Nation," which begins a three days' engagement at the Byers tonight. Every historical character can be recognized in this scene.

Ft. Worth Record
Nov. 18th-15

VETERANS WILL SEE 'BIRTH OF A NATION'

Blues and Grays Will Meet at Courthouse Tonight at 7:30 o'Clock.

Veterans of the war between the states, regardless of which side they served on, will see "The Birth of a Nation" Thursday night as guests of Manager Greenwall of the Byers. They will meet at the courthouse tonight at 7:30 o'clock, where they will be formed in line for the march to the opera house with General Whitehead, Colonel W. T. Shaw and a Grand Army of the Republic commander leading the line.

Those having uniforms are expected to wear them, although the lack of a uniform will not be expected to keep anyone away. Manager Greenwall has reserved 120 seats, 90 for the Confederate veterans and 30 for the Grand Army of the Republic members. Wives of the veterans will share the seats, as will all widows of veterans. No seats have been provided for other members of the veterans' families.

Washer Brothers have arranged for their decorators to go to the Byers Thursday morning and the seats set aside for the guests will be decorated in keeping.

Veterans express heartfelt appreciation of the invitation extended by Manager Greenwall and are looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to seeing the greatest motion picture ever made depicting scenes they will long remember.

"The Birth of a Nation."

"The Birth of a Nation" will be the offering tonight and for the balance of the week. There will be matinees Friday and Saturday morning at 10:15 and afternoon at 2:30. Although the leaders of the opposing forces in the civil war appear but for a moment in W. W. Griffith's spectacular silent drama, the scenes in which General Grant receives the surrender of the army of the South from General Lee is one of the most striking of the famous photoplay.

As the scene unfolds, Grant is discovered seated at a plain table reading the draft of the terms of surrender. Lee is seated at the left of the room. The staffs of the two generals are grouped about. The expression on Lee's face clearly indicates his thought. A forlorn leader of what is no longer even a forlorn hope, he sits with bowed head most of the time while Grant is reading the important document.

As Grant, having finished reading, and having affixed his signature, arises, the contrast between the two men is striking. Grant, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, his square shoulders inclined to stoop, is without his sword and is wearing fatigue uniform. He wears ordinary top boots, with trousers outside. Boots and clothing are spattered with mud. Lee presents a different picture. He is carefully and correctly dressed, his six feet of stature and faultless form towering over his conqueror, a statue in gray. The contrast in manner is equally marked. Grant, with hand in pocket, approaches Lee with an easy swing, cigar in mouth, as usual, and offers his hand in a way that means much to the defeated southerner. It is not preliminary to a formal, meaningless handshake. It is the act of one who would be a friend, and is accepted as such by the man in gray, who grasps the extended hand and the great generals of the great war for a moment face each other. Then, with military salute, they part and the incident of Appomattox courthouse is closed.

Nov. 18th 1915

BELLEVILLE NEWS-DEMOCRAT,

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

which comes to the new Washington Theatre Sunday and Monday, Nov. 28 and 29, matinees and nights:

5,000 scenes, 18,000 characters, 3,000 horses. Approximate cost of production, $500,000.

Cities built up and then destroyed by fire.

The biggest battle of the Civil War re-enacted.

Ford's Theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest detail for the Lincoln tragedy.

A series of wild "Ku Klux" rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 25,000 yards and Ku Klux costumes 12,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes, invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells, costing $80 apiece, were used. Miles of trenches, thousands of fighters. "War as it actually is."

A musical score of 40 pieces synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

Twelve thousand feet of film in the public picture represent 140,000 feet of actual photography.

MAKING ALTOGETHER

the most stupendous dramatic and spectacular enterprise that the brain of man has yet visioned and realized!

Sale of seats on sale Saturday 10:00 a. m.

The Augusta Chronicle
Nov. 8th 1915

David W. Griffith in Action, Directing "The Birth Of A Nation."

"The Birth Of A Nation"—Confederate Forces Entrenched Behind The Crater At Petersburg. One of the Many Thrilling Scenes in D. W. Griffith's Mighty Spectacle "The Birth of a Nation" Which Opens Its Engagement at The Grand This Evening.

The Augusta Chronicle - Nov. 14-1915

'THE BIRTH OF A NATION" WINS ADMIRATION OF ALL WHO SEE IT

When Shown in Charlotte the People There Were in Delight Over it and the Newspapers urged Their Readers to See it, No Matter What the Cost and Effort.

"The Birth of a Nation" comes here tonight with the flush of success. It is in the papers wherever it has been shown, that it is a triumph—that it is worth any price at the box office. It has taken hold as the theatrical attraction of the year.

The Charlotte News—the attraction is showing there—is in great delight over it. It tells all its readers to not miss it—to see the sensational production at all costs.

Here are extracts from that paper, after witnessing it:

"The greatest presentation of one of the greatest dramas in the South history that has thus far been given to the public as a grand photoplay.

"But for real excitement, when the nerves tingle and the applause grows uproarious at time, let one choose the presentations of reconstruction scenes, and the reign of terror that threatened the whole South till the 'Invisible Empire,' of the Ku Klux Klan appeared on the scene, beginning with the conception of the idea to its fullest realization, when the mysterious riders saved women, children and a whole town from the dangers of a mob of negroes incited by carpet-baggers.

"The photoplay was remarkable in the fixed attention, which it held, and it was peculiar in that there were but two brief moments of laughter. It was war and its horrors, and the spectators, keyed to the full realization of the word, did not want to laugh. It was a tribute to the skill of the photoplay that the vast house at the Academy did not laugh but a few times, and then it was at some negro mammy's antics. The crowd had absorbed the spirit of the author of the play, and the applause which greeted some of the wonderful scenes was immense.

"But the riding of the Ku Klux Klan and their timely arrival at critical moments when besieged fugitives from their homes, or when white men and women were in danger, and when a whole town had become filled with rioting negroes—these were such as to make the spectator realize the power of this 'Invisible Empire' probably as nothing else in the whole play did. The feature as a technical piece of work is great, as is the whole presentation, but the drama, and that hardly melodrama to the southerner, of the Ku Klux Klan is beyond the limits of description. Men and women applauded these scenes with gusto and with tears sometimes in their eyes."

"The Birth of a Nation" engagement in Augusta begins tonight. It will also be shown Friday night and Saturday night. There will be matinees Friday and Saturday.

The State Col. S.C.
Nov 18th 1915

SEAT SALE BEGINS FRIDAY MORNING

Tickets for "The Birth of a Nation" Will Be Ready for Public Tomorrow.

"The Birth of a Nation," the massive spectacle of the South's reconstruction, concerning which much has been said and written, will be seen next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Columbia theatre, exactly as it is being presented in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities, with a symphony orchestra of 30 pieces and elaborate stage effects. The services of 50 people are employed in each presentation.

DAVID W. GRIFFITH
Producer whose genius made possible "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be presented at the Columbia theatre, November 22, 23 and 24.

Altogether, five performances will be given during the Columbia engagement of the spectacle. Except on Monday, when the whole day will be spent in installing the production and rehearsing Columbia musicians with the company's orchestra, a matinee will be given every day at 2 p. m. The evening performances will begin at 8:30 o'clock, and owing to the length of the spectacle, nearly thre hours, all the performances will be started promptly on time.

The company coming to the Columbia theatre is the one which has played to large business in Richmond, Norfolk, Chattanooga and other important Southern cities this season. It is the only one on tour, the seven others presenting the spectacle being installed for indefinite runs in as many large cities in different sections of the country. Seats for the engagement will go on sale at the Columbia theatre box office tomorrow morning.

Daily Oklahoman
Nov 19-15

"The Birth of a Nation."

A kind of artistic achievement easy for the film but impossible for the "indoor drama," is illustrated by the Ford's theater scene in "The Birth of a Nation," to be seen at the Overholser all of next week. The old-fashioned drama has long attempted to represent a stage within a stage, and some of such representations have been rather realistic. But in the film scene showing the assassination of President Lincoln, one sees not only the complete stage of Ford's theater in April, 1865, but also the auditorium of the theater, the audience and the historical figures in the boxes.

Laura Keene is playing "Our American Cousin," assisted by E. A. Sothern in the role of Lord Dundreary. They are startled out of their mimic parts by the shot that Wilkes Booth fired. The audience has risen to its feet as the shot is heard and cranes forward in a semi-panic to gaze at the great statesman whose head has fallen back in the stage box, and the assassin, Booth, who is leaping from the box to the stage and whose spur catches in the box draperies as he jumps, causing him to break his leg. This sort of historical realism has never been achieved before. It is part of what is meant by the so-called "new art," for which D. W. Griffith is responsible.

Spectators gaze at the scene with fascinating horror. It is too terrible, too awesome for applause, yet not a spectator but feels that in this impressive rendition Mr. Griffith has surpassed the greatest previous art achievements of the film drama.

Nov 14th 15

THE KANSAS CITY POST,

"BIRTH OF NATION" AT GRAND ANOTHER WEEK

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Grand theater another week on account of the large number of out-of-town orders that have not yet been filled. This will make five weeks for the great photoplay in Kansas City and it is estimated 100,000 persons will have seen it after the last showing Saturday night, November 27.

Nov. 19th 1915

THE NEW CASTLE HERALD

THRONG SEES GREAT MOVIE AT THEATRE

"The Birth Of a Nation" Draws Applause From Large Audience.

NO OCCASION FOR RACIAL FEELING

Wonderful Scenes And Thrilling Drama Depicted On The Film.

An enthusiastic audience, one composed of many who rarely attend a photo-play, packed the Opera House last night to see the initial showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city. Young, middle-aged, old, all seemed to appreciate the dramatic picturization of the Civil War period, and many of the most stirring scenes were heartily applauded.

Early yesterday afternoon practically all of the seats for last night's performance were sold and a number were obliged to make arrangements to see the picture later in the week. Notwithstanding the fact that the best seats sold for the unusual price of two dollars, the demand was undiminished and all who witnessed last night's performance were highly gratified.

In a number of cities, in fact, in New Castle there was a slight agitation against showing this production on account of the racial prejudice it might cause. However, after having seen the play such a fear would be dispelled. While a number of the scenes show conditions and bring out traits that were hazardous at that time, still the author in the portrayal of the two faithful and loyal freed slaves who help rescue their former master, depicts scenes that strongly emphasize their good qualities.

The story of the play was taken from Thomas Dixon's popular novel "The Clansman" which was widely read and dramatized a number of years ago. In fact, some of the scenes are practically identical. The quiet home-life of both the South and North before the war, the period of privation during the war and many stirring battles and engagements, the assassination of President Lincoln whereby the South lost its best friend, the disorganized condition of the South caused by exploiting men from the North instigating the freedom to take control, and finally, the formation of the Ku Klux Klan in self-protection, all are shown as nearly historically correctly as possible. At many of the most stirring scenes, especially the reproduction of famous battles, the audience loudly applauded.

As practically all of the seats for the remaining performances are being disposed of no doubt a large number of the people of this city will have the advantage of seeing this production which is extremely worth while.

Nov. 14th 1915

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS

"The Birth of a Nation" gave the critics of the city an idea of the miracles that the "movie makers" perform, and right on the heels of that masterpiece comes the wonderful attraction that the Broadway manager has been endeavoring but hardly expecting to secure. This stellar feature has been booked for today and tomorrow, and will be advertised in a way that is novel to say the least.

GREATEST PICTURE EVER PRODUCED AT THE GRAND TODAY AND SATURDAY

Chronicle Man Who Witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" Last Night at The Grand Declares It is Most Marvelous Spectacle Ever Presented on the Screen.

There is not a human being with red blood coursing through their veins who will not be thrilled in every fiber of their being by "The Birth of a Nation," the greatest motion-picture ever produced, showing at the Grand today and Saturday.

From the introductory scene to the final climax, the picture plays on the human heart as no other production has ever played, stamping D. W. Griffith as the greatest producer the world has ever known.

From the peaceful and happy southern home to the political cauldron at the national capital one is carried as the film is unwound, and as the action of the picture increases, the blood courses faster in the veins until the nerves are drawn to such a point as to almost drive one frantic, when just a touch of comedy is thrown in to give the necessary relaxation.

It shows the great battles of the War Between the States, the surrender of Lee and the great heart of President Lincoln, who forgives and forgets in his love for his people, the South coming into her own, until the assassin appears on the scene and takes the life of the one man who was loving a riven nation into peace, and then follows the reconstruction, the power of the carpetbagger, who incites ignorant negroes into acts of fanaticism, the suffering of the innocent and the struggle of a worn and weary but determined country to protect their home and the honor of their women.

Driven to desperation the Ku Klux Klan is organized, and while there were no doubt some acts of this organization that were not in keeping with the purposes for which it was organized, yet there is no one who does not recognize the necessity for such an organization, through whose daring bravery and determination, the torn and bleeding country was finally restored to her own, and the sunshine of God's love and blessed kindness has rehabilitated into the flower of the land, the home of the free and the land of the brave.

The picture is as nearly a perfect portrayal of the real scenes of the reconstruction period as could be drawn, as it was written by a son of the South, who was familiar with the greatest trials to which a country has ever been subjected.

There is nothing to offend or arouse passion in the breasts of the southern people, or any other, as to that, as it shows that those who wore the Blue and those who wore the Gray and who fought for their country, have not only a high regard for each other, but shows that there exists a brotherly love that the conflict only made stronger in the admiration for a fearless foe.

The negro is excused on account of his ignorance, and the old darkey who fought for his master shows that he is of the material that heroes are made of, and that he was willing to sacrifice even life itself in defense of the women and children left in his care.

To attempt to describe the great production would be folly, for one is carried through the entire gamut of emotions, and the mind is so centered on the rapid action of the picture that the grip is too strong to be described in words.

As a motion-picture, it is without question the greatest the world has ever seen, and it has an educational value that makes it a great teacher to those who have only read one side of the great question, and after seeing it, one can well understand why it drew, and is still drawing, more people in the North and East than any picture yet shown on the screen.

It is as nearly perfect in thought and action as could be conceived, and every man, woman and child in Augusta should see the wonderful production.

B. LEE SMITH.

NOVEMBER 19, 1915.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY ADVOCATE.

BIRTH OF A NATION BOOKED HERE TWO DAYS

D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" will be seen at the Washington Theater, Sunday and Monday, matinee and night, November 28 and 29, exactly as it is being given in New York and several other cities where it has made record-breaking runs.

This new force in the art of stage entertainment is perhaps the most widely discussed production ever made in America. It is above all also the greatest thing that has been achieved by a producer. Imagine condensing the living details of the most strenuous periods of American history into an evening's entertainment of less than three hours. You are not told about it nor is your imagination tested by rhetorical descriptions of what took place. Instead you see it by lightning flashes. It is history revived and shown in its making. Some of the greatest names that are written large upon the scroll of our country's fame appear upon the program. The players who enact the roles have studied the minute descriptions of these men both from photographs and intimate life studies and with this frame work they make these wonderful characters live again. They pass before your vision in a panorama of achievement. The accomplishment is startling. The entire action ranges over three centuries. It begins with the importation of the first African slave and it ends with the settlement of that question in the freedom of the enslaved. But before this end is reached the mightiest nation in the world passed through the throes of internecine strife and the high lights of those struggles are vividly brought out. Great battles are fought before your eye. Cities are destroyed by fire. Thousands of horsemen dash in wild rides across bloodstained plains. The human note weaves in and through the entire thread and lends itself to the mightiest story ever unfolded.

The State, Columbia S.C. Nov. 19-1915

Night Gathering of the Clansmen, a Scene From "The Birth of a Nation," Which Will Be Shown at the Columbia Theatre November 22, 23 and 24.

At the Columbia Theatre

NEXT WEEK.

Monday—"The Birth of a Nation." 8:30 P. M. Seats now.

Tuesday—"The Birth of a Nation." Matinee 3 P. M. Night 8:30.

Wednesday—"The Birth of a Nation." Matinee 3 P. M. Night 8:30.

"The Birth of a Nation."

It is expected that a long line will greet the treasurer of the Columbia theatre this morning when he opens the seat sale for "The Birth of a Nation." The big spectacle is coming for three days beginning next Monday night with Tuesday and Wednesday matinees and indications are that the audience at the opening performance will be one of the largest of the engagement. This has been true of every opening night of the company coming to Columbia and considering the strong local interest in the spectacle, the Monday night performance will probably take on the aspect of a gala "first night" with society present in numbers.

Dealing with historical events of the Reconstruction, the general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and sombre. But love interest and comedy of a refined sort illuminate the spectacle throughout its two hours and 40 minutes.

There is a typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disfigured its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds, we have pure comedy and the best of good feeling. No matter if within a few months they are to die on the field of battle, enemies, but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is a young daughter of the Southern home, almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister and guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when, to save herself from a worse fate than death, she jumps from a high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again, there is a scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "shuffling off" for the benefit of the Northern visitors. There is the shuffle and wing "Mississippi Sawyer," "Key in the Straw" and other which the darkies delighted. the play they have their se

And so through it all th of the lighter shade of li cast by the sombre sh And that is what make a Nation" such a tru the times whose life tragedy follows come life.

FORT WORTH RECORD.

"The Birth of a Nation" Masterpiece of Filming

"The Birth of a Nation" is the most wonderful picture ever placed upon the screen. The production cost $$$$,000, and it is a marvelous staging of civil war and reconstruction scenes. Since the coming of the silent drama, nothing has ever been attempted by an American producer upon the gigantic scale conceived and carried into execution by David W. Griffith in his masterpiece.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a historical, pictorial review of the bloodiest and most costly war ever staged in the western world, and the reconstruction scenes which are marvelous features of this acme of film, won for the play instant recognition by critics and playgoers on its initial presentation in the city of New York. It had the most wonderful run ever known in the center of population and theatricals. Its success in Chicago was a repetition of its success in New York. Everywhere presented it has captured the multitude and packed houses of interested spectators have been moved to tears by the pathetic stories of internecine strife in the dark and memorable past. It has appealed to southerners everywhere. It has appealed to the millions born since the close of the war between the states. Its groupings of individuals who acquired for themselves niches in the Hall of Fame and who were active participants in the bloody drama of conflict between the North and South are wonderfully true to life and are very holding.

David W. Griffith has been called an acknowledged wizard of the films. Those who witnessed "The Birth of a Nation" at the Byers last night will concede this without argument. Rupert Hughes said after witnessing this Griffith masterpiece, "It makes the most spectacular production of drama look like the work of village amateurs. It reduces to childishness the biggest things the theater can do, for here were hundreds of scenes in place of four or five; thousands of actors in place of a score; armies in landscape instead of squads of supers jostling on a platform among canvas screens. Here was the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem, rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here were social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies; here was a whole art gallery of scenery, of humanity, of still life and life in wildest period; here were portraits of things, of furniture, of streets, homes, wildernesses; pictures of conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies; pictures of family life, of festivals and funerals, ball rooms and battle fields, hospitals and flower gardens, hypocrisy and passion, ecstacy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny. There were the southerners in their wealth, with their luxury at home, their wind-swept cotton fields; here was the ballroom with its seethe of dancers, here the soldiers riding away to war and the soldiers trudging home defeated, with poverty ahead of them and new and ghastly difficulties arising on every hand. Here was the epic of a proud, brave people, beaten into the dust and refusing to stay there."

Rupert Hughes' pen did not exaggerate. It did not and could not tell the sublime story of this silent drama of the civil war, and the infamous period of reconstruction which followed. Thomas H. Dixon evolved the idea. Then "The Clansman" was born. David W. Griffith viewed "The Clansman" and out of his work shop came the powerful yet pathetic drama of the screen which has kindled the emotions of more than a million Americans and awakened the sleeping memories of an army of men and women who recall the South of their childhood with its desolation and its tears.

To be appreciated one must sit through this filmed masterpiece. As the brilliant Hughes has said, "The leagues of films uncoil and pour forth beauty of scene, face and expression, beauty of fabric and attitude and motion." They do more than this. No pen portrayal of their beauties has been overdrawn. This will be the offering at the Byers Friday and Saturday. There will be six performances. Morning matinees at 10:15; afternoon and evening at 3:15.

Belleville Post & Zeitung Nov. 19-1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

„The Birth of a Nation", D. W. Griffith's wunderbares Schauspiel kommt am Sonntag und Montag, dem 28. und 29. November im hiesigen Washington Theater zur Aufführung. Diese wundererregende Aufführung ist eine der kolossalsten Bühnenwerke, deren Gleichen man nur selten zu sehen bekommt und das wird in der ganzen Vorstellung, die drei Stunden dauert, kein Wort gesprochen.

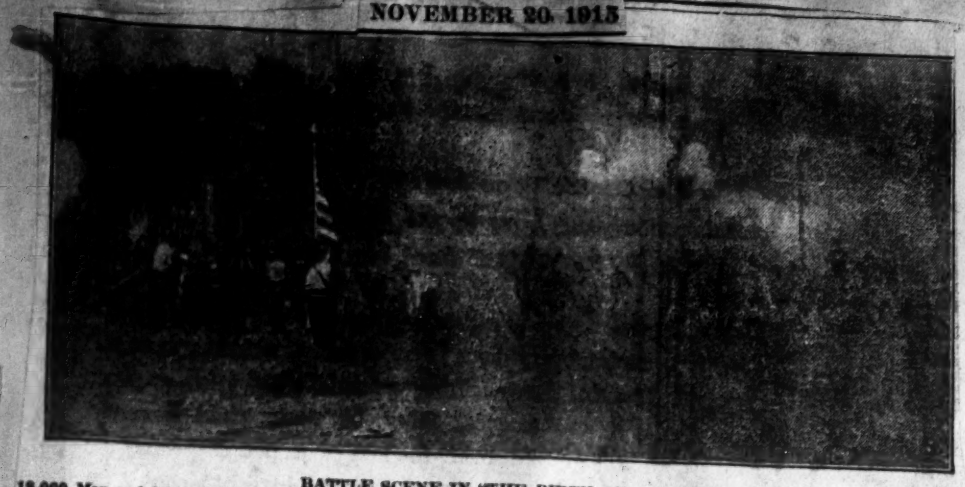
An der Vorstellung vor dem Camera haben 18,000 Personen und 3000 Pferde theilgenommen und Films durch die das Stück vor Augen geführt wird, haben eine Gesammtlänge von 12,000 Fuß. In der Rollenbesetzung der Hauptcharakteure hat man eine gute Wahl getroffen. Hy. Walthall, der die Rolle des Colonels der Konföderirten vertritt, entstammt einer alten Ansiedlerfamilie der Südstaaten. Miriam Cooper, als Margaret Cameron, ist ein Nachkomme von Charles Carroll aus Maryland, der die Unabhängigkeitserklärung unterschrieben hat.

Sicherlich werden viele unserer Mitbürger, die das Stück bereits in St. Louis gesehen haben, eine nochmalige Vorstellung sehen wollen.

Der Vorverkauf von Sitzen beginnt morgen (Samstag) um 10 Uhr im Theater.

THE STATE: COLUMBIA, S. C.,
NOVEMBER 20, 1915

The Tulsa Democrat, Tulsa, Okla.
Nov. 20-1915



BATTLE SCENE IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."
18,000 Men and 3,000 Horses Were Employed by D. W. Griffith in Producing the Great Historical Spectacle, Which Plays a Three Days' Engagement at the Columbia Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

At the Columbia Theatre
NEXT WEEK.

Monday—"The Birth of a Nation." 8:30 P. M. Seats now.
Tuesday—"The Birth of a Nation." Matinee 3 P. M. Night 8:30.
Wednesday—"The Birth of a Nation." Matinee 3 P. M. Night 8:30.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Music lovers will find in the score of "The Birth of a Nation," which comes to the Columbia theatre next week, more haunting melodies than have come to light in any musical comedy of the last ten years, excepting perhaps "The Merry Widow." The score is synchronized to the 5,000 scenes of the big Griffith spectacle, and it is played by an orchestra of 30—the largest symphony organization being heard on tour with any attraction this year outside of the large theatrical centres. Twenty of the musicians are carried by the company and the others are drafted from local talent.

The score runs the entire gamut of human emotion and in combination with the film, it portrays an entire period. The opening scene shows the old South, quiet in the unnatural calm preceding the War Between the States. Then the first intimation of a national storm that is brewing, followed closely by the grim realism of war itself. Scene after scene of rapine and plunder, horror and desolation slips by in swift panorama and the gaunt specter of war shows itself through the misery of the suffering people. Then the work of rebuilding the South; the dark days of negro supremacy, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

Quaint melodies of the South, forgotten, except by the older generation; majestic strains from grand opera; light, rippling airs from the semi-classics—all are blended into a masterpiece of descriptive music running the two hours and 40 minutes required for the presentation of the spectacle.

The engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Columbia theatre will begin next Monday night and will continue Tuesday and Wednesday with matinees at 3 p. m. Seats for the entire engagement on sale at the box office now.

Belleville Morn. Record
Nov. 20-1915

It is a well-known fact that lovers of the photo plays have their favorites among the actors in the cast and rave over their cleverness and personal charm as if they were before them on the legitimate stage in actual flesh and blood.

Mae Marsh, who plays Flora Cameron, the younger daughter in the Southern household in "The Birth of a Nation," at the Liberty Theater, by her successful appearance in many photo plays during her three years' career has attracted by her elf-like charm and naive personality many admirers who greet with pleasure her appearance on the screen.

Miss Marsh has many bits of fine acting in the picture. Among the most delightful are the welcoming of the brother back from the Civil War; the making of "southern ermine" with raw cotton and chimney black; the scene in the cellar with Miriam Cooper; the garden making that follows the return from the war; the southern banquet; and the pretty scene where she rains kisses on her brother Ben's mouth to console him for temporary loss of his sweetheart Elsie. There is always a touch of comedy or of pathos where Miss Marsh appears. Her personality lends itself to the fine temperamental treatment of any part she plays. Her expressive, ever changing, mood-adapting face, is one of the most valuable in all the list of film favorites.

She was discovered by David W. Griffith, the producer of many film successes, long before he made "The Birth of a Nation."

Washington Theater, Sunday and Monday matinee and evening, November 28 and 29. Seat sale opens at theater today at 10 a. m.

GRAND

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," following its record-breaking runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles, will be seen in one of its original productions at the Grand Opera House, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. This work, partly from the nature of the new art, partly from the opposition aroused, has excited keener curiosity than any other offering of the current season.

"The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation re-born through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the way; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the Southern States; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Serman's march and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the federal president; the radical policy to the stricken South; the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest of the play is based on the friendships between the Camerons of South Carolina and the Stonemans of Pennsylvania, two families involved in the truggle. Ben cameron, the gallant clansman of the Dixon stories appears again in the role of romantic hero; the piquant Northern girl, Elsie Stoneman, as the heroine. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the battle campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of the Lincoln tragedy, the peace at Appomattox, and the South Sarolina legislature of 1870, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. To do this, many times the amount of the time, energy and expense usually devoted to amusement enterprises had to be used. Eighteen thousand people and 3,000 horses appear in the pictures, which cost approximately $500,000 to produce.

Of equal importance to the scenes is the music that interprets them. It consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. Now grave, now gay; now sounding the loud diapason of war, again sweetly harmonizing love's sighs and rhapsodies; anon bringing back the old plantation melodies, or the crash of riot and rapine, or the welcome Ku Klux Klan call that fell so gratefully on the ear of Southern whites sorely oppressed by the "servants in the master's hall,"—it fits the changing scenes of the story like a flowing, beautiful garment. The marriage of this music to the film best of all entitled the producer to his well-earned laurel of having created a new art; a new kind of grand opera, so to speak, that had not even been conceived before.

Among the distinguished principals are Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished Alabama actor whose family is historically connected with the story, in the role of the clansman; Lillian Gisg as Elsie Stoneman; Mae Marsh and Miram Cooper as Flora and Margaret; Ralph Lewis as Congressman Stoneman; Joseph Henabery, Howard Gaye and Donald Crisp as Lincoln, Lee and Grant respectively, george Seigmann as the mulatto lieutenant-governor of South Carolina; Walter Long as the renegade negro Gus; Roul Walsh as Wilkes Booth; Mary Alden as the octoroon housekeeper Lydia; John McGlynn and Ernest Campbell as the good negroes, Nelse and Jake; Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron as the young soldiers; Spottiswoode Aiken and Josephine Crowell as Dr. and Mrs. Cameron, and many others.

The production to be seen here is identical in all respects with those of New York and Chicago. Two baggage cars of equipment and a company of fifty people are carried en tour. The latter includes a large symphony orchestra of expert musicians. Others in the party are a stage manager, complete crew, two picture-machine operators, together with optical experts to readjust the theatre projection and sittings to the latest scientific focal requirements. No advance will be charged on the regular metropolitan scale of prices which are 25 cents to $2.00 at the evening performances and 25 cents to $1 at the matinees.

The Pittsburgh Press
Nov. 20-1915

SCENE IN BIG PHOTO-PLAY

"BIRTH OF A NATION"
—MILES—

St. Louis Times, Nov. 20-1915

The Last Week of "Birth of a Nation."

The last week of the phenomenal engagement in St. Louis of "The Birth of a Nation" will come to a close next Saturday evening, with a record on the last night of having achieved 181 performances, being the longest run that any theatrical attraction has ever reached in this city. The Griffith masterpiece opened at the Olympic Theater on Aug. 30. It was thought at that time that the five weeks that had been arranged for would be a long enough stay in this city, but it was soon evident that a continuation was imperative to meet the demand for seats that even the large capacity of the Olympic could not accommodate. One more week was made possible by the shifting bookings at the Broadway theater, at the end of which period the famous production was moved to the Garrick, where capacity audiences have been the rule for the past six weeks.

Ft. Worth Record
Nov. 20-1915

AT THE BYERS.

"The Birth of a Nation."

Three large and enthusiastic audiences packed the Byers yesterday. "The Birth of a Nation," the most wonderful silent drama ever screened, was the offering.

This staging of war and reconstruction scenes is the sensation of motion picturedom, and it is as drawing and as holding in the city of Fort Worth as it has been in all cities where the films have been exhibited.

There will be three performances today, morning at 10:15, afternoon at 2:30 and the closing one tonight, beginning at 8:15. This will be the last chance. Those who fail to take advantage of it will miss an opportunity of seeing this Griffith masterpiece.

MAE MARSH

ALTON EVENING TELEGRAPH.

Allentown Leader Nov. 20 15

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle to Be Played Here Soon.

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theater, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theater, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theater, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18.

All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, two hours and forty minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's Theater, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a country for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece, were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty-foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theaters to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every board of censors in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, governors of states, judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as the result of war between the States and Reconstruction.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Temple Theater, Alton, November 30 and December 1, with matinees daily.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING TO THE LYRIC FOR AN ENTIRE WEEK

Allentown Highly Favored in Booking of the Greatest of Picture Dramas

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not a comedy, it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle. Comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the in a few months they are to die on the best of good feeling. No matter if withfield of battle, enemies but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home, almost a hoyden, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again there is the scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing "Mississipi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the somber shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life. "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Lyric for the entire week of Nov. 29.

BELLEVILLE NEWS-DEMOCRAT, SATURDAY, NOV. 20, 1915.

The Assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre

SCENE FROM D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASSIVE PHOTO SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION." SEE IT AT

WASHINGTON THEATRE, SUNDAY AND MONDAY,

MATINEE AND EVENING, NOV. 28th AND 29th.

SEATS NOW SELLING AT THEATRE, 25c TO $1.00.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen at the Washington Theatre Sunday and Monday, matinee and night, November 28 and 29, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Ku Kux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith élan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay so far as spectacular features are concerned.

Town Talk, Newark, Nov. 20-1915

BATTLE SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE.

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE.

THE GRIFFITH SPECTACLE.

Another Week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Newark.

At the Newark Theatre the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is meeting with the same phenomenal success which has made notable its appearances in the various large cities throughout the country. No more conclusive evidence that the people of Newark welcome the present engagement could be asked for than the audiences that have twice daily taxed the capacity of the Newark Theatre during the past week. Commencing with the afternoon performance Monday, November 22, this photo masterpiece will enter upon its second and last week in Newark.

The magnitude of this spectacular dramatic production makes by comparison all other theatrical offerings look inconsequential. Here are shown hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors and horses; armies in landscape in place of squads of mere supers jostling on a platform among canvas scenery. Here is the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here are social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here is a whole art gallery of scenery of humanity, of still life and life in wildest career. Here are portraits of streets, homes, wilderness; pictures of famous conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies; pictures of family life, of festivities and funerals, ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower-gardens, hypocricy and passion, ecstasy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny.

Here is depicted the South in its wealth, its home luxury and wind-swept cotton fields; here are shown its soldiers riding away to war and trudging home in defeat with poverty ahead of them and ghastly difficulties confronting them on every side. The realism of the work is amazing, astounding in its grandeur and faithfulness to actuality, and but a tithe of its charm is the unbroken fascination of its 12,000 feet of film.

The Daily Courier Connellsville Pa. Nov 20-1915

Newark Evening News Nov 20-1915

299

MAE MARSH in "THE BIRTH of a NATION" at the NEWARK.

THE BIG BATTLE SCENE, FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

THE CONNELLSVILLE NEWS, CONNELLSVILLE, PA.
Nov. 20-1915

One of the Big Scenes in "A Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial for Three Days, Starting Monday, November 29, at Night.

THE COLONIAL THEATRE.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Colonial for three nights, beginning Monday, November 29, with matinee on Tuesday and Wednesday.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular states, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Seats go on sale Wednesday morning.

D.W. GRIFFITH

"Birth of a Nation."

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a three days' engagement Monday evening, November 29, with matinees on Tuesday and Wednesday, at the Colonial theater. The first-class metropolitan producion is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying one baggage car of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people. Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider he Birth of a Nation" will bid fare- to local theatergoers of this city e Miles this week for the engage- here closes on Saturday evening. fore, but 12 more performances of thrilling and marvelous Griffith ie will be given at the miles. Birth of a Nation" tells by film asic the story of a nation rough the storm and stress of ine strife. Instead of the four enes of the usual conventional y its technique permits of film- lly thousands of scenes and a wide range of history and Slavery, the prime cause Lincoln's call for troops to southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march to the sea and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south, the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime— these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

ALTON EVENING TELEGRAPH

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle to Be Played Here Soon.

Premier performance March 3, 1915, at the Liberty Theater, New York. Some of the subsequent productions were: Tremont Theater, Boston, Mass., beginning April 10; Illinois Theater, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; Brighton Beach Music Hall, N. Y., July 3; Nixon Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., July 18.

All these were long runs of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 50,000 patrons weekly. Never before has a play run half a year simultaneously in so many cities, including also seventeen weeks in Los Angeles and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David W. Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18,000 actors and 3,000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, two hours and forty minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built up to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox. Ford's Theater, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a country for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth

Night photoplay of battle scenes invented and perfected at cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece, were used. Miles of trenches—thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty-foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular traveling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theaters to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every board of censors in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, governors of states, judges, publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as the result of war between the States and Reconstruction.

"The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Temple Theater, Alton, November 30 and December 1, with matinees daily.

Allentown Leader Nov. 20 15

"BIRTH OF A NATION" COMING TO THE LYRIC FOR AN ENTIRE WEEK

Allentown Highly Favored in Booking of the Greatest of Picture Dramas

The general character of "The Birth of a Nation" is of necessity sober and somber. It represents a critical period in the history of the States. It pictures a time that "tried men's souls" and is not to be approached in levity or with the view that there is "a laugh in every line." It is not a farce; it is not a comedy, it is simply a truthful picture of the times it portrays, and there was little of a comic nature about those times and events. Yet there is comedy in D. W. Griffith's filmed spectacle. Comedy of the most delicate sort, but comedy nevertheless.

There is the typical Southern home where all is good cheer. War's alarms have not yet disturbed its serenity. A Northerner is visiting his old college chum. Youth will be served, and in their playful wrestling and chasing each other about the old mansion and grounds we have pure comedy and the in a few months they are to die on the best of good feeling. No matter if withfield of battle, enemies but clasped in each other's arms.

Then there is the young daughter of the Southern home, almost a hoydea, playful as a kitten, up to all sorts of tricks with her brothers, sister, and their guests. Alas, later we see her tragic end, when to save herself from a fate worse than death, she jumps from the high cliff. Comedy that ends in tragedy, but comedy just the same.

Again there is the scene in "the quarters" where the negroes are "showing off" for the benefit of Northern visitors. There is the shuffle, buck and wing "Mississipi Sawyer," "Turkey in the Straw," and other steps in which the darkeys delighted. Later in the play they have their serious roles.

And so through it all there are bits of the lighter shade of life to be overcast by the somber shade later on. And that is what makes "The Birth of a Nation" such a truthful picture of the times whose life it portrays, for tragedy follows comedy ever. Such is life. "The Birth of a Nation" comes to the Lyric for the entire week of Nov. 29.

BELLEVILLE NEWS-DEMOCRAT, SATURDAY, NOV. 20, 1915.

The Assassination of Lincoln in Ford's Theatre

SCENE FROM D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASSIVE PHOTO SPECTACLE, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION." SEE IT AT

WASHINGTON THEATRE, SUNDAY AND MONDAY,

MATINEE AND EVENING, NOV. 28th AND 29th.

SEATS NOW SELLING AT THEATRE, 25c TO $1.00.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

A development no one would have believed possible a few years ago is seen at the Washington Theatre Sunday and Monday, matinee and night, November 28 and 29, of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," as a regular theatrical attraction playing to absolute capacity at a $2 scale.

"The Birth of a Nation" is indeed more than a film, for nearly 100 persons are employed in the mechanical effects and the music during the unreeling of its 12,000 feet of celluloid; yet not a word is spoken from the stage during the two hours and three quarters' performance. Mr. Griffith's photo entertainment combines a pictorial survey of Civil War history and of Ku Klux Klan days with a love story based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman." The battle scenes, engaging thousands of combatants drilled with the well-known Griffith élan and realism, are particularly effective. After seeing it, some optimists are rash enough to predict that the historical novels of the future will be told in pictures rather than in sentences. Certainly the "indoor drama" cannot henceforth hope to cope with the photoplay so far as spectacular features are concerned.

Seven Days, Newark, Nov. 20-1915

BATTLE SCENE FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE.

LILLIAN GISH IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE NEWARK THEATRE.

THE GRIFFITH SPECTACLE.

Another Week of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Newark.

At the Newark Theatre the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is meeting with the same phenomenal success which has made notable its appearances in the various large cities throughout the country. No more conclusive evidence that the people of Newark welcome the present engagement could be asked for than the audiences that have twice daily taxed the capacity of the Newark Theatre during the past week. Commencing with the afternoon performance Monday, November 22, this photo masterpiece will enter upon its second and last week in Newark.

The magnitude of this spectacular dramatic production makes by comparison all other theatrical offerings look inconsequential. Here are shown hundreds of scenes, thousands of actors and horses; armies in landscape in place of squads of mere supers jostling on a platform among canvas scenery. Here is the evolution of a people, the living chronicle of a conflict of statesmen, a civil war, a racial problem rising gradually to a puzzle yet unsolved. Here are social pictures without number, short stories, adventures, romances, tragedies, farces, domestic comedies. Here is a whole art gallery of scenery of humanity, of still life and life in wildest career. Here are portraits of streets, homes, wilderness; pictures of famous conventions, cabinets, senates, mobs, armies; pictures of family life, of festivities and funerals, ballrooms and battlefields, hospitals and flower-gardens, hypocricy and passion, ecstasy and pathos, pride and humiliation, rapture and jealousy, flirtation and anguish, devotion and treachery, self-sacrifice and tyranny.

Here is depicted the South in its wealth, its home luxury and wind-swept cotton fields; here are shown its soldiers riding away to war and trudging home in defeat with poverty ahead of them and ghastly difficulties confronting them on every side. The realism of the work is amazing, astounding in its grandeur and faithfulness to actuality, and but a tithe of its charm is the unbroken fascination of its 12,000 feet of film.

The Daily Courier Connellsville Pa. Nov 20-1915

Newark Evening News Nov 20-1915

99

THE BIG BATTLE SCENE, FROM "THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

MAE MARSH in "THE BIRTH of a NATION" at the NEWARK.

THE COLONIAL THEATRE.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—Many of the critics who have been sternest in their exactions of American dramatists announce their belief that D. W. Griffith has "put over" the great American play at last. Mr. Griffith's wonderful spectacle-drama, "The Birth of a Nation," is referred to the unique offering at the Colonial for three nights, beginning Monday, November 29, with matinee on Tuesday and Wednesday.

For many years American dramatists wrote able plays of particular states, cities or localities, ranging from "Alabama" to "The Henrietta" and from "Way Down East" to "The Great Divide." But no one man seemed to grasp the whole spirit and genius of America until David Wark Griffith picked a suggestion for his theme out of Dixon's "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Clansman" and started to develop it.

Among the distinguished actors in the cast are Henry B. Walthall, Lillian Gish, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Seigman, Walter Long, Elmer Clifton and Robert Harron. Eighteen thousand people, 3,000 horses and no less than 5,000 scenes went to the making of the big spectacle.

Seats go on sale Wednesday morning.

THE CONNELLSVILLE NEWS, CONNELLSVILLE, PA.

Nov. 20-1915

One of the Big Scenes in "A Birth of a Nation" at the Colonial for Three Days, Starting Monday, November 29, at Night.

"Birth of a Nation."

After more extensive and sensational publicity than has fallen to the lot of any other theatrical enterprise, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" will open a three days' engagement Monday evening, November 29, with matinees on Tuesday and Wednesday, at the Colonial theater. The first-class metropolitan producion is guaranteed to be the one shown here, carrying one baggage car of equipment, a symphonic orchestra of musical experts, and a complete traveling organization of 50 people. Many circumstances have conspired to make "The Birth of a Nation" the most widely discussed play in the world. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's Southern novels, it embraces a far wider

D.W. GRIFFITH MILES.

"The Birth of a Nation" will bid farewell to local theatergoers of this city at the Miles this week for the engagement here closes on Saturday evening. Therefore, but 12 more performances of this thrilling and marvelous Griffith spectacle will be given at the miles. "The Birth of a Nation" tells by film and music the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the usual conventional stage play its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters. Slavery, the prime cause of the war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the southern states; the ball on the eve of Bull Run, and the first triumph of Confederate arms; the devastation wrought by Sherman's march to the sea and the awful ordeal of the siege of Petersburg; Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the Federal president; the harsh radical policy to the stricken south, the uprising of the Ku Klux Klan and the overthrow of the carpetbagger regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

Newark Evening Star, Nov 20-15

$2 Motion Spectacle Only a Start

The Man Who Made "The Birth of a Nation" Says That One Day We Will Pay $5---It's Answering the Law of Natural Selection.

By D. W. GRIFFITH.

WHILE there has been a vast amount of comment regarding the advent of the $2 motion picture, it seems to me that there really is no occasion for surprise that a picture should be produced which vies with the best offerings of the dramatic stage. After all it is nothing but the old first law of nature—the survival of the fittest. The rest under is purely a question of selection and execution.

When it was first announced that we intended to present "The Birth of a Nation" in a regular Broadway Theater, which had never played a picture attraction before, the wiseacres of the theater world said it would not succeed. You see, they knew nothing of pictures. Most people had looked upon a motion picture drama as a ten cent proposition. They measured everything by the standard of price. It was not surprising that they overlooked the fundamental facts in the case and were unprepared to pass judgment upon this undertaking. But in all truth there was nothing daring or venturesome in it. You see, we knew what we had. That was an advantage which the other fellow had never taken into consideration.

The significance of this is in the proof of the big picture being an undoubted success. There will be many two dollar pictures. The success will depend entirely upon how well they are done, and reverts back solely to a question of merit. It takes great care, time and an enormous expense to produce a picture which will compare with the best the spoken drama can bring forth. But, given the theme, the understanding and the ability to project his ideals, the moving picture director has a material advantage over the stage director who puts on a comedy or a drama of contemporary life. The latter is confined and limited in his scope. He can show only certain scenes in the limits of three walls, and at best has only a few square feet in which to place his characters. For his background he must depend upon painted scenery and manufactured effects, which are, after all, only miserable imitations of natural objects. I do not mean this in a spirit of criticism. There are fundamental ideals of the spoken drama which make it the aristocrat of the arts. Every one of us has pleasant recollections of great moments when true dramatists enjoyed the privileges of artistic interpretations. When a great actor throws the best there is in him into the principal role of a fine play you have a combination which is irresistible. I have been impressed deeply by such performances upon several visits to the theater. What painting or piece of sculpture stands out in your memory to compare with this living, breathing thing you are part of for a single evening. Long years afterward in pleasurable reveries you recall the play and the player. Who ever saw Irving's matchless work in "Louis XI." can forget that wonderful scene when he urged the images on his cap to listen to him and yet was equivocating at the same time. Or can one ever quite efface from memory the majestic manner with which Mansfield, as Cyrano de Bergerac, tossed his purse to the crowd? These are specific instances to illustrate my meaning.

It was the art of interpretation glorified. The player and his mood became the great figure in such cases. With the moving picture it is different. The poetic simulation, the tour de force which arrests attention and makes memories that are to live, is a silent power. The brain behind this art is never revealed. It lends itself to that concealment which is one of the rarest attributes of true art. The living thing is subjective. There is no rivalry with the spoken drama. Each has its niche and, if artistically done, will live. The mere presentation may be ephemeral, but the ideas and the recollections go on and on as long as life lasts.

In motion pictures we have a larger field in which to operate. On the stage these so called "effects" are imitations at best. In the film play we show the actual occurrence and are not hampered by the size of our stage or the number of people we can crowd into the scene. If our story traverses to a battlefield we show an actual battlefield. If it means that 10,000 people were part of this conflict we engage 10,000 people, rehearse them in minute detail, and when we are ready we show you that scene as realistically as if you were looking down from a hilltop and watching an engagement of contending forces.

Let us look into the cost of this. This scene for a motion picture might cost you in the neighborhood of $75,000. But the cost ends with the taking of the original negative. There are no salaries after this, and the only expense is the comparatively slight one of making new copies from the original negative.

A big spectacle on the stage can at the utmost employ 400 people in a scene. This is an unusually large number. It takes the same time and pains to rehearse them that it does to handle 10,000 people in a motion picture scene. But the stage production goes on daily, with eight or ten performances a week, and the salaries and costuming of the supernumeraries run up to $2,500 a week, so that at the end of two seasons these forces have cost easily $150,000. Here you have twice the outlay for 400 people that it costs a motion picture director to employ 10,000. If there is any significance in these figures they point an important moral without need of further explanation. In the same way we can go afield and get anything we want. If there is a shipwreck we show the angry sea and the restless waves. For a lover's tryst we have but to pick out some sylvan dell and bring our players there and let them act as two people in love would act under a given circumstance, and the great audiences weave their own romances and do the larger share of the acting for that scene. Along the side lines we can have roses blooming in the sunlight with a snow crusted mountain in the background. In our drama the trees wave in the breeze and blades of grass damp with real dewdrops are none too insignificant to become a part of the action. You see, an observing director has the world for his studios. The centuries have been piling up these inexhaustible productions for him. He has but to use artistic sense in the matter of selection.

The motion picture is no longer an infant art. It is the newest and most powerful form of dramatic expression, and there is no end to which it can be carried. I firmly believe the day will come when great poetic pictures will not only compare with the best of the legitimate stage, but will be upon a parity with the greatest productions of grand opera and at corresponding prices. Remember, a few years ago it was the limit of extravagance to spend $500 on a moving picture production. At that time we played to five cent audiences. Now we spend $500,000 on a picture, and we crowd the theaters everywhere at $2 a seat. By this ratio what is to hinder the superproducer from spending three times that amount and getting $5 a seat for it?

Greatest Picture Continues at the Newark Theater

Of "The Birth of a Nation" which has crowded the Newark Theater twice daily this week and will play to capacity all of next week it is very necessary to quote the opinions expressed by the dramatic critics of the Star on last Tuesday:

"We should know this history, all of it. We should teach it to our children, in its entirety. The truth can do no harm, no matter how unpalatable it may be, and more of it is to be learned in three hours from 'The Birth of a Nation' than can be gleaned in the same length of time from any other source now at command.

"There are thousands of scenes and still more thousands of people and horses. Great armies fight their battles upon real fields. A whole city burns before one's very eyes. Regiments fight hand-to-hand battles in the trenches. Mobs surge up and down the city streets, not a few supers, mind you, but hundreds upon hundreds of people. One sees a whole Legislature in session and again sits breathless as the ranks of the Klan ride by. Why, the vastness of it all is simply staggering.

"As one sees the last picture in 'The Birth of a Nation' fade from the screen his first sensation is one of limitless wonder that any person, black or white or of whatever creed or nationality, should object to the play. It is impossible for him to divine a plausible excuse for the senseless police interference which it has met in various sections of the country or to understand the protests that have been lodged against it by the ignorant and fanatical.

"This marvelous screen production is no sense ministers to sectionalism. Neither does it instil or encourage race prejudice. The plain fact is that 'The Birth of a Nation' is history. It tells of the Civil War and the days of reconstruction. It is as if one sat in the window and looked out to behold the most momentous twenty years that this country ever saw or ever will see, for that matter, pass in procession before his eyes."

Traveler Cor. Sec.
March 29-15

Boston Post
April

Not Stop Nation"

...e connection the Mayor was
...he thought about the photo-
Birth of a Nation," now being
New York. Mr. Curley under-
...t there is nothing immoral or
...scenes of the play, and there-
...ill not have the power to stop even if the idea is offensive to
...t majority of the citizens.
Birth of a Nation" is based on Dixon's book "The Clansman." It alleged troubles caused by negroes South.
educated negro classes in New York,
...ny leading white citizens, are up in
...nd demand that it be supressed, but ...uthorities have thus far found that
...s more easily said than done.
...r drama also has the endorsement of National Board of Censorship, which ...des a substantial additional obstacle
...he enemies of the production to over-

Union
Springfield Mass
Apr. 3, 1915

UNWHOLESOME THEME FOR MOTION PICTURE DRAMA.

...e utilization of Rev. Thomas Dix-
...book, "The Clansman," as a basis
...an elaborate motion picture pro-
...tion represents a departure in
...rbid sensationalism that is to be
...plored and condemned, and it ap-
...ars from the accounts printed rela-
...e to the film called "The Birth of a
...tion" the protests that are being
...ed to Mayor Mitchel by prom-
...t New Yorkers are fully justified
...arious grounds. It is asserted the film exploits an unwhole-
...e theme in a pronouncedly of-
...sive way, and this, if true, is suf-
...cient to condemn it. But it is fur-
...her charged that the production dis-
...orts history and libels the Negro race,
...and in this regard is an affront to 10,-
...000,000 American citizens.

A certain degree of sensationalism
...s to be expected in the film drama, as
...n fiction. But there are limits be...nd which this tendency should not ...tolerated. Where a novel has ob-
...jonable features it is very easy to
...n those objections in a film pro-
...tion. The vivid, intense qualities
...give motion pictures such a pow-
...l appeal may readily be made,
...ugh the power of suggestion so
...racteristic of this medium, a cor-
...onding means of offense. For that
...a pronounced responsibility
...upon motion picture producers
...hose boards that pass on the pro-
...ty of films. The "yellow" film
...the "yellow" journalist, should be brought, by one means or another, to conform to some bounds of decency.

It is only fair to say that "The Birth of a Nation" was put on by a producer having a reputation for merit, that it is said to be well acted and in many respects a revelation of the spectacular possibilities of the "movies." These attributes do not excuse the excitation of race prejudice and other faults the production is said to embody. Perhaps the picture can be "toned down" to meet requirements, but the subject is not one to be commended for motion picture treatment.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.
APR 3

The New York Age recalls that the showing pictures of the prize fight in which Jack" Johnson defeated his white antagonist were suppressed in New York city on the ground that they would create racial antagonism, and it sees here a precedent for suppressing "The Birth of a Nation," Thomas Dixon's attack on the negro. The elimination of specially objectionable scenes appears to be a reasonable promise, and an agreement to this end is likely to be reached.

WORK FOR THE CENSORS

FOR the breeding of vicious race prejudice in impulsive and sinister minds incapable of forming a balanced, comprehensive point of view, "The Birth of a Nation," a motion picture drama founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," is said to be most ingeniously put together. The race malignity which this author has sought to capitalize in his books has been amplified and emphasized in this play. All that is worst regarding the Negro race—and much more than belongs to the Negroes as a race—is "played up" to its most fetching degree. To the maddening accompaniment of hoochy-coochy music there is the long pursuit by a lust-maddened Negro of an innocent white girl, who finally flings herself to destruction from a precipice, carrying her honor with her "through the opal gates of death." All manner of vicious rot designed to create race prejudice between whites and blacks is set forth. By the same token, if an author were to bunch together all the meannesses—many of them unspeakable—which white men have inflicted on Negro men and women of the South, an equally as bad showing could be made for the "superior race." But would a play with the latter purpose be permitted a production in any American city? Certainly not. It is greatly to be doubted if the Negroes would if they could care to produce such a play. Is it because the white race is superior in numbers and power that it presents such works to prove to the world its higher attainments in civilization and culture? As a sample of Mr. Dixon's logic and integrity he says that his drama "is not meant to reflect in any way on any race or people of today." The audience while in the theatre is presumed to hiss and to hate the Negro and then step outside and respect him and his rights when it meets him in the street. The play, which is supposed to represent conditions during the "Ku Klux Klan" period after the war, has much to say about "sowing the wind." Seemingly that is the present purpose of the production, and the sooner the censors suppress it in the name of fair play, common decency and a humane citizenship that desires honestly to build up rather than viciously to tear down, the better it will be for all.

LOWELL (Mass.) COURIER-CITIZE
APRIL 3 1915

Motion pictures are in for drastic supervision. So far there has been a sort of censorship on the part of the film makers themselves, but it is a voluntary affair lacking in proper authority. The law in this state and others has done something to purify the screens, but it has not done enough. There is the bitterest sort of opposition to a picture shown in New York, "The Birth of a Nation," which appears to be an outrageous calumny of the Negro race. White men and black men, Christians and Jews are protesting against its display and some of its features will be modified if it isn't suppressed altogether. In Boston Mayor Curley was disgusted with another picture which it is proposed to show in Tremont Temple. The picture business must be put under public control in the interest of public morality. And it is pretty sure to be as soon as the people can get around to it.

BROCKTON (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
APR 3 1915

A MAN who is presenting a big picture in New York, said to be "the last word" in the moving picture field, and who presents it in part as a $2 attraction, says he sees a time coming when there will not only be $2 pictures but others for which the public will pay $5 or $6 to see. He says that moving pictures have already driven certain classes of dramatic offerings to the wall. Melodrama, for example, he says is practically dead—that is, the kind of melodrama that depends on large scenes and the use of many people. No stage spectacle offering human beings themselves can begin to compete in number with the picture machine that can place before the spectator a battle with hundreds or even thousands of men engaged, and great numbers of horses and cannon and all that. He says the theatre will exist for some plays—the intimate plays that call for small theatres, and quiet chat, and the telling of stories in which scenery cuts comparatively little figure and the tale itself, told by a few people is the great thing. A happy outlook for some actors, truly; but big scenes for pictures will keep some of them busy. But how about the $2 and $5 and $6 proposition to see the movies? There will have to be some imagination shown and some remarkable scenes pictured if the pu... to the height ... indicated wh... that for an ev...

AN INSULT TO AMERICANS

From all accounts the colossal moving picture spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," now showing in New York, is in its essentials a gross and gratuitous insult to a large body of American citizens, the negroes. The New York World has denounced it unsparingly and other papers have protested it.

The objectionable parts are scenes depicting the negro, especially of "reconstruction" times, as a degraded and bestial being, devoid of honor or decency. His failings—or rather the failings of some—are magnified and his patience, his unutterable woes, the savage treatment of him in slavery are all absent from the screen. Surely he has right to justice in such a show as this.

The worst feature of the thing is that it inevitably inspires hatred of the whole colored race in the hearts of those who see it. It is no wonder that many influential citizens, colored and white, have protested to Mayor Mitchel against the offensive pictures, which Rabbi Wise calls "an indescribably foul and loathsome libel." They should be expunged forthwith.

Boston Traveler
Apr. 8 1915

ASK CURLEY TO STOP "...TH OF A NATION" AT TREMONT THEATRE

Prominent Bostonians Claim That Thomas Dixon Film Play Engenders Hatred Against the Negro Race.

Prominent Bostonians, including Francis J. Garrison and the Rev. Horace Bumstead, have signed resolutions, which have been sent to Mayor Curley, asking that the exhibition of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre, beginning April 10, be prohibited, on the ground that it engenders race hatred and is a gross libel on the Negro race.

The resolution, passed by the Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and which have been signed by other well known members of white and colored races.

The film is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman," and deals with the reconstruction period in the South after the civil war.

The following communication was sent to Mayor Curley by the association:

My Dear Sir: At a meeting of the board of directors of Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, held today, the enclosed resolution was unanimously adopted requesting a hearing for the purpose of opposing the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston. And I respectfully request that such a hearing be granted at some early date prior to April 10, 1915.

Very respectfully,
BUTLER LOVEJESON, Secretary.

Whereas, it is announced in the public press that "The Birth of a Nation" is to be produced at the Tremont Theatre in Boston, beginning April 10, 1915, and

Whereas, the film should not be shown in Boston—

First—Because it is a libel upon and an insult to a large number of Boston citizens.

Second—Because it engenders race hatred.

Third—Because it tends to a breach of the public peace.

Resolved, that the executive committee of the Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People respectfully request the Hon. James M. Curley, mayor of Boston, to grant to us a public hearing at an early date, prior to April 10, 1915, for the purpose of producing the evidence and showing the reasons why the film should not be shown in Boston.

FRANCIS J. GARRISON, HORACE BUMSTEAD, MARIA L. BALDWIN, JOSEPH P. LOUD, GEORGE G. BRADFORD, SAMUEL L. BROWN, MAY HALLOWELL, LOUD, BUTLER R. WILSON.

The following resolution also was passed:

"Resolved, that we earnestly protest against the exhibition in the theatres of Boston and vicinity of the picture entitled 'The Birth of a Nation,' a dramatic production of the literary [illegible] play, 'The Birth of a Nation,' which, like many previous productions of the same author, [illegible] a gross and demoralizing misrepresentation of the colored population of our country, unjust in fact, cruel in spirit, fruitful of race prejudice, demoralizing to whites and blacks alike, and dangerous to the public welfare. We appeal to the mayors of Boston and neighboring cities, and to all others in authority to use every power entrusted to them to suppress this [illegible] photo play."

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD

TREMONT THEATRE

Boston theatregoers will now have an opportunity of seeing the highest priced picture ever presented on the American stage, "The Birth of a Nation," which was presented at the Liberty on the two dollar scale of prices. Week after week it packed the Liberty theatre to the doors. Bostonians will have a chance for an exact duplication at the Tremont Theatre, beginning next Saturday afternoon, April 10. There will be an invitation performance next Friday evening. The story of "The Birth of a Nation" is one of rare interest in American history. Everything will be the same as in New York, and there will be an orchestra of 40.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
APRIL 8, 1915

PROTESTS PROVE OF NO AVAIL

Mayor Curley Decides to Allow Picture Play "The Birth of A Nation" to Open Engagement

DECISION ANNOUNCED AT CONCLUSION OF HEARING

The moving picture play, "The Birth of A Nation," will be allowed to open its engagement at the Tremont Theatre Saturday afternoon.

This was the announcement of Mayor Curley at the conclusion of a protest hearing at City Hall yesterday afternoon, which was attended by about 600 persons, of whom perhaps 500 were colored.

Mayor Curley at one time during the progress of the hearing had declared that he did not intend to make any decision upon the matter yesterday, but that he would take it under consideration. David W. Griffith, who wrote the scenario of "The Birth of A Nation," had replied, in answer to the Mayor, that if the "cliff scene" as called—should be deemed immoral by the Mayor and proper authorities after they had witnessed a presentation of the pictures, it would be eliminated from the play. While summing up the evidence presented at the hearing, the Mayor was interrupted and remarks made by remonstrants to the effect that his "purpose" in asking the elimination of the "cliff scene" alone, would not be successful; that the entire play should be prohibited.

The Mayor replied that, if there was any suspicion that he had any personal purpose in the matter whatever, he would not ask the elimination of any portion of the play.

"Therefore," he said, "I shall allow the play to proceed and leave it to the Police Commissioner and the Municipal Censor to say whether or not it should be discontinued." He then declared the hearing closed.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which requested the hearing, was represented by Atty. Butler R. Wilson. Among the speakers presenting this side of the case were Miss Mary White Ovington, a New York settlement worker; Moorfield Storey, J. P. Loud, architect; Rev. Dr. Francis H. Rowley, president of the B. P. C. A.; Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church; Rev. M. W. Thornton of the Charles St. M. E. Church, Joseph Gould, social worker, William Monroe Trotter, representing the National Independent Equal Rights League, also spoke against the allowance of the presentation of the play. Numerous affidavits and letters from prominent persons were placed in evidence, protesting the production.

The respondents were represented by Atty. John P. Cusick. Aside from his remarks, the only other speaker for the respondents was D. W. Griffith, author of the scenario of "The Birth of a Nation." John B. Schoeffel, manager of the Tremont Theatre, and Albert M. Sheehan, business manager, were, however, present at the hearing.

At the opening of the hearing Mayor Curley stated that perhaps it was not in accord with the statutes that the hearing had been granted. He then read the law relative to theatrical exhibitions or performances, showing that the Mayor and Police Commissioner must agree that any part of a performance is objectionable before further presentation can be prevented.

Of the speakers for the remonstrants, Miss Mary White Ovington, J. P. Loud, and William Monroe Trotter were the only persons who had witnessed a presentation of the play. None of the others had either seen the play or read a manuscript of "The Birth of a Nation."

Moorfield Storey said that "if it is immoral for persons to beat, assault and kill, then it is immoral to produce this play."

The New York advertisements say that it is founded on "The Clansman." "The Clansman" was written for political purposes; to discredit the colored man, hold him unreliable before the law, dishonest, and unfit for office. This was the purpose of the book and it is the purpose of the play.

"We object just as some of you gentlemen would if priests and the Catholic Church were slandered in the same manner."

Among the many letters presented in evidence by the remonstrants were those of Pres. Frederic O. Howe, Lillian D. Wald and Rev. Charles S. McFarland of the National Board of Censorship, all of whom [illegible] presentation of people and [illegible] history in a [illegible] was never dreamed of be[illegible] has also linked music to his [illegible] the use of accompanying [illegible]

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
APRIL 8, 1915

BY F. H. CUSHMAN.

When David W. Griffith started the outdoor staging of the Civil War and Reconstruction scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," which will be shown at the Tremont Theatre beginning Saturday, he was confronted with seemingly insuperable difficulties. An area of private war was required about as large as the corner of Belgium occupied by the Anglo-French forces. Thousands of cavalrymen had to be shown, in an historic raid of the North Carolina clans. Their run was to be over many, many miles of typical Southern sandy roads. Though an acknowledged wizard of the films, Mr. Griffith is not a "war lord," with power to commandeer.

In this emergency, the county authorities of "The Birth of a Nation" producing locale were applied to. They finally consented to mark off an area of ten square miles for the use of the horsemen. Along all the roads within this area, the county commissioners posted notices forbidding all traffic on "the day of days."

Pedestrians were also warned off. But the roads themselves did not look southern. David Griffith handled this difficulty—with the authorities' permission—by remaking such of the highways as would come within the camera's eye. Many tons of sand and gravel were spread by gangs of his workmen. Landscape engineering changed the look of the landscape to the rounded hills, piney woods and deep gullies of Old North State.

The race of the northern clansmen to rescue their South Carolina brethren took place on the appointed day, without an accident or a flaw. After it was over, Mr. Griffith's men scraped the sand off the macadam roads, took down the signs, and life in the sleepy countryside resumed its normal course.

It cost about $25,000 to do the trick—the producer thinks it was worth all it cost, particularly after hearing the enthusiastic comments of "The Birth of a Nation" patrons on his work.

Little Cafe Girls Athletic

BOSTON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR
APRIL 8, 1915

CENSORS TO DECIDE AFTER VIEWING PROTESTED FILM

Censors representing Mayor Curley will pass on the photo-play "The Birth of a Nation" at a private showing at the Tremont Theater Friday night.

Several hundred persons, mostly negroes, protested the play at a hearing before the mayor yesterday, calling it objectionable to their race. That the play is based on a book which is prejudiced against the negro was alleged by Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Butler R. Wilson of the same association and others.

David W. Griffith, producer, and his attorney, John P. Cusick, said the play was based on historical facts. Mr. Griffith, in a statement, says the motion-picture is a form of speech, and declares free speech is the constitutional right of every citizen.

AMERICAN
ess: Boston, Mass.

APR - 8
1915

GRIFFITH TELLS OF FAMOUS FILM

The following statement has been sent to this newspaper by D. W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation":

To the Editor of the AMERICAN:

"We regret very much that on our first appearance in Boston we should be engaged in such an unpleasant dispute. But we are indeed glad from the bottom of our hearts that it is in Boston we are making this battle—in Boston, the very beginning of the liberty of the American people.

"If it is right for historians to write history, then by similar and unanswerable reason it is right for us to tell the truth of the historic past in motion pictures.

"If we as a people and as individuals are afraid to face the truth, then in the interest of our children we must conquer this fear and glean all that we can possibly learn of the past in order to guide our footsteps away from the terrific pitfalls that may await our future. If the descendants of the people that fought the battle of Bunker Hill, whose red drops made possible our freedom in action as well as in speech, say they do not want to know the truth of any part of American history, then I shall be the last man in the world to dispute their will.

"No society or association that is organized can keep this picture from being accepted throughout the rest of the civilized world. We do not believe that according to constitutional [illegible] this country to suppress [illegible] American [illegible] tion." We [illegible] the Tremont Theatre on the old accepted [illegible]

April 10. An invitation presentation will be given on Friday evening and the public will have its first chance on Saturday.

AMERICAN
ess: Boston, Mass.

APR - 8
1915

MAYOR'S CENSOR TO INSPECT FILM

Mayor Curley, following a hearing granted on request of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, declared he would not interfere with the initial production of the film show, "The Birth of a Nation."

"I shall allow the play to proceed and the municipal censor and a representative of the police commissioner may pass upon its merits," said the Mayor.

Many in the crowd of more than two hundred people, mostly colored, hissed as the name of President Wilson was mentioned. The incident occurred as John F. Cusick, counsel for the theatre where the film is to be shown, told of its having been seen and approved by the President and his Cabinet at the White House.

Among those who appeared in favor of the petition were: Moorfield Storey, president of the association; Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church; Joseph P. Loud, a Boston architect; Dr. Francis Rowley, the Rev. M. W. Thornton of the Equal Rights League; B. R. Wilson, and Munro Trotter.

Butler Wilson, counsel for the association, declared the play tends to excite hatred for the colored people.

Mr. Cusick, counsel for the theatre, said that the play is based only upon historical fact, and that there is no attempt made to ridicule the colored race. He said the National Board of Censors had endorsed the play, and that there are as many white villains in the play as there are black.

EVENING RECORD
ess: Boston, Mass.

APR 3 1915

MAYOR ASKED FOR HEARING ON THE BIRTH OF NATION

Claim Is Made That the Dixon Motion Picture Play Engenders Race Hatred

A public hearing on the question of the presentation in Boston of the motion picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," has been asked of Mayor Curley. The request comes from the Boston branch of the Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This association passed resolutions saying that the film engendered race hatred, and was a libel on the negro race.

The resolutions have been signed by prominent Bostonians, including Francis J. Garrison and Rev. Horace Bumstead. The play is based on Rev. Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and deals with the reconstruction period after the Civil War.

Among the resolutions passed by the Society for the Advancement of the Colored Race was this one, which was sent to the Mayor:—

"My Dear Sir: At a meeting of the board of directors of Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, held today, the enclosed resolution was unanimously adopted requesting a hearing for the purpose of opposing the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in Boston. And I respectfully request that such a hearing be granted at some early date prior to April 10, 1915."

POST
Boston, Mass.

APR 4 19[illegible]

Next Saturday afternoon the Tremont Theatre will open with "The Birth of a Nation." This does not in any way refer to the late Carrie, but to a moving picture spectacle showing the development of this country from the introduction of slavery, the secession of the Southern States, the Civil war, the assassination of President Lincoln and the period of reconstruction, concluding with an apotheosis of universal peace and the settlement of all international differences. Over in New York, I am told, the pictures created a sensation, not only from the interesting nature of the subject but the manner in which they were presented. It is the first time since the introduction of motion photography as a public amusement that regular theatre prices have been paid for this type of entertainment.

Various novelties are to be introduced, I understand, and on the stage will be actors and actresses to give additional realism to the pictures. I also hear there will be costumed attaches in the lobbies and as ushers, attired in the garb of long ago, who will lend an atmosphere of picturesqueness to the show. I [illegible] how long "The Birth of a Na[illegible] it has been in Boston and other cities, [illegible] of the most elaborate and costly of motion picture [illegible]s and begins its course at high prices in leading [illegible]ers. Determined efforts should be made to stop it on the grounds of its false, immoral and hate-inspiring influence.

TRAVELER & EV
[illegible] Mass.

PROVOCATIVE OF RACE PREJUDICE

To the Editor of The Herald:

It is announced by advertisement in the daily newspapers that the play entitled, "The Birth of a Nation," is to be performed in Boston beginning on next Saturday afternoon. This is a moving picture drama founded on a novel written by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, a mischievous and unscrupulous novelist who has done his best in his writings to misrepresent the colored people of the Southern states, and to inflame race prejudice. Miss Jane Addams of Chicago well describes the play as a "pernicious caricature of the Negro race" and as an attempt to make the Negro "appear worse than childish and brutal and vicious—actually grotesque and primitive and contemptible." It contains a wicked libel on the race to which belong many most respectable, excellent law-abiding citizens of Boston, and its performance in this city should not be permitted.

The colored people of this country today are suffering the effects of race prejudice in every relation of life. In large parts of the country they are denied the right to vote, are lynched and often tortured if only suspected of crime, are restricted as to residence, employment, education, and everywhere the equal opportunity to which every American citizen is entitled is denied to them. This condition of things is deplorable, and every good citizen should set his face against every attempt to increase the prejudice from which they are now suffering. This is essential to the future of us all, for no state can prosper in which any considerable body of citizens is exposed to systematic injustice.

I earnestly hope that the public opinion of this city will assert itself, and that the authorities will exercise their power to prevent the proposed performance of this play, which in the attempt to make money excites the prejudices and passions of the spectators, while it misleads and perverts the opinion of a generation unfamiliar with the truth of the history which it distorts.

MOORFIELD STOREY.

Boston, April 5.

POST
Boston, Mass.
APR 4 191[illegible]

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith has selected Bost[illegible] as the second city of importance i[illegible] America to present his epic in motio[illegible] pictures, "The Birth of a Nation" which will be produced for the fir[illegible] time here on Saturday afternoo[illegible] April 10, at the Tremont Theatre [illegible] an indefinite engagement. Mr. Gri[illegible] has taken for his theme the deve[illegible]ment of the nation and its relat[illegible]ship to the part the slavery pro[illegible] played in bringing about Daniel [illegible]ster's prophecy of a nation, one and i[illegible]divisible. The action begins with t[illegible] introduction of slavery into the co[illegible]nies and then the start of the ab[illegible]tion movement and the stirring t[illegible] leading up to the secession of [illegible] Southern States and the outbrea[illegible] the Civil war.

The audience is carried throug[illegible] four years of strife to the dea[illegible] President Lincoln in Ford's T[illegible] The eight years of reconstructio[illegible] the final episodes in a drama [illegible]tory, romance and emotion, the [illegible] which has never been revealed [illegible] Its termination is in an allegori[illegible]ture of the coming of permanen[illegible] and the settlement of all [illegible]ferences. To get these varied in[illegible] into his absorbing drama the pr[illegible] used 18,000 people and 3000 horses[illegible] has written history in a specta[illegible] way which was never dreamed of [illegible]fore. He has also linked music t[illegible] drama by the use of accompa[illegible] themes in a score which teems [illegible] the true sentiment of America[illegible] velopment. The Boston productio[illegible] be an exact duplication of the [illegible]tic success which has been ac[illegible] elsewhere.

American
Boston Tpe.

PROTEST "BIRT[illegible]

Protesting the[illegible] day photoplay, "The [illegible] at the Tremo[illegible] say[illegible] April 10, seve[illegible] [illegible]dard and have written a [illegible] "The [illegible]ley, and the [illegible] Spec[illegible] National Assoc[illegible] tells ment of Colore[illegible] re[illegible] resolutions con[illegible]ction The film is [illegible]love on's no[illegible]ponent of a [illegible]ough the stress [illegible] of civil strife.

[illegible] the [illegible] been [illegible] It is [illegible] been [illegible] Negro [illegible]m of [illegible]t in [illegible] features of the film, [illegible]ppear in Boston and other cities.

...urs Ago Today

...Griffith, the $200,000-a-year ...mo of the Mutual Film Cor... ...will commemorate ... anni... ...y of Lee's surrender by giving ...nvitation performance of the first ...film shown, "The Birth of a Nation," ...t the Tremont tonight. The first public ...performance will be given here tomor...row afternoon.

...Nation," runs the story, "signed ...papers by means of quill and ink... ...he had borrowed from a young ...r's kit, for, as it happened, there ...e no writing materials in the Wil...-McLean home. This historical fact ...or the first time brought out by Mr. ...ffith in his play. Lee then handed ...e document to an aide, who placed it ...Grant's hands. The two generals ...hereupon rose, met in the center of ...the room and shook hands. There have ...been several paintings of the historic ...scene, but never, it is believed, had a ...stage representation of the living fig...ures and action been made before Grif...fith's putting it into the present play."

Griffith a Southerner

Mr. Griffith himself, by the way, is the son of Brig. Gen. Jacob Wark Griffith, who fought on Lee's side. It was in Louisville that the foremost moving picture director of the country was born, 15 years after Lee's surrender. The son took up acting as a profession and made his debut in a stock company in Louisville conducted by Oscar Eagle, who, oddly enough, is also prominent today in the moving picture world. Afterward Griffith went to New York and found engagements as juvenile. One of these was under the management of George H. Brennan, who was a newspaper writer in Boston 20 years ago and who managed the company that appeared in the Dixon play, "The Clansman," which in part is used as the basis of "The Birth of a Nation."

But Griffith, it seems, was all the time straining to do big things. He wrote a play called "A Fool and a Girl," which Hackett produced in Washington; but as success didn't pile down upon him, the restless Kentuckian turned to the newspaper field, and he wrote several short stories for the Sunday supplement of one of the New York dailies. The editor suggested to Griffith that some of his offerings would make good scenarios for the "movies." Griffith jumped at the suggestion, rattled ... few photo-plays and awaited re...

By the time two of them were ...ted he was nearly on his uppers, ...so the Biograph people, who were ...oduce the plays, gave the author a ...at $5 a week acting before the camera.

$5 a Week to $4000

This $5 a week job was the making of Griffith, for by-and-by one of the Biograph directors fell sick, and Griffith, who had quietly been musing over the ways and wherefore of the game, took the place. Forthwith he began to submit new ideas. He introduced the "close up" or enlarged portrait of the principal character in each scene—and you ...ll see much of this in "The Birth of a Nation;" he brought out the "cut back" or "insert," which visualizes the thoughts of the characters; he specialized in the reproduction of classic ...tories. The company met the novelties with some misgivings, but Griffith's work spelled success, nevertheless, and before long he was the Biograph's chief director.

...ro year and a half ago he went over ...the Mutual Film Company, which is ...t to the largest picture producing ...nt in the world, as director-in-chief, ...a carte blanche contract—that is, ...thould do virtually as he pleased. ...s salary said to be $50,000. At any ...he is probably the highest paid ...n the theatrical ...orld.

...lith's biggest ... so far is "The ...of a Nation." ...ere were over ...feet of film ... the cameras ...d their ... the West and ...uth, but the ...ss of selection, ...plays ...ch ...g part in these ...ctions, ...as ...d this to about ...The Next ...le, as it stands ...ing pictures ... and three-quar... ...k" Joh... ...a... ...the production cost ...mist went ... presentation was ...the grou... ...s, where the Mutual ... headquarters, two ...) antago... ...pictures are also be... ...bn... ...ancisco and in New ...

...e ...n" fame will be the ...lith's the week of ...

...(Boston) April 6, 1915

Showing ...rth of a Nation"

...t of various socities of ... Mayor Curley has ar... ...public hearing on the ...wing the film drama, ...Nation," to be shown ...

...have protested against ...t this much discussed ...production in this city.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
APRIL 9, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Private Presentation of Much Discussed Picture Play at the Tremont Tonight.

Today, the 50th anniversary of Gen Lee's surrender to Gen Grant at Appomattox, has been selected for the first performance in Boston of D. W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," in which this historic scene is shown. The performance this evening is for invited guests only, the first public presentations at the Tremont Theatre taking place tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr Griffith is said to have reproduced every detail of the great event. The room in which the document is signed is a facsimile of the actual Wilmer-McLean house interior at Appomattox. Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye, in the roles of Grant and Lee respectively, bear a marked resemblance to the great Generals. The costuming is exact—Grant in fatigue clothes, dusty and travel stained, and Lee, the vanquished, scrupulously arrayed in full dress.

LECTURES ON "COURAGE."

EVENING RECORD
Boston, Mass.
APR 7 - 1915

DEFENDS "BIRTH OF NATION" IN STRONG REPLY

Management Takes Exception to Moorfield Storey's Criticism of Play About Negroes

The management of the play "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, which has been strongly criticised by Moorfield Storey, has replied to those who attack the play. The reply reads, in part:

"Whatever may be the differing opinions about 'The Birth of a Nation,' it will do far less harm and excite much less racial prejudice than a newspaper called 'The Crisis' published by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of which Mr. Moorfield Storey is the president.

"Mr. Storey attacks 'The Birth of a Nation' through a letter in one of the Boston morning papers. Perhaps he does not know that the publication issued by his organization is of an incendiary character. In one of the recent issues, of which we have a copy, negroes are advised to meet the white race 'with the rifle and sword.' They are exhorted to fight for their 'rights,' to receive their enemies 'with bullets,' and to 'organize! organize! agitate! agitate!'

"We would not quote these remarks of Mr. Storey's publication but for his obvious intent to denounce 'The Birth of a Nation' for doing exactly what he is doing. But we deny in toto that we are inculcating race prejudice. All of the statements made by Mr. Storey in his letter can be successfully challenged. Are the colored people suffering effects of race prejudice in every relation of life?

"Mr. Storer alleges that 'The Birth of a Nation' distorts the truth of history. David W. Griffith will give to Mr. Storey or to any charity he may name the sum of $10,000 in return for pointing out any such distortion. As a matter of fact, 'The Birth of a Nation' is historically true.

"The 'caricature of the negro' is in Mr. Storey's own imagination. Three out of the five important negro characters are heroes, not villains. The negro is never shown in the play as the sole author of mischief, but rather as incited to unworthy acts by the carpetbaggers.

"Thomas Dixon is not the author of 'The Birth of a Nation' and the play should not be judged by his expression on the negro question. Mr. Griffith made his own scenario, and it is to be judged by what he has done and not by what the National association attributes to Mr. Dixon.

"Toleration is the breath of art. The people of Boston, we feel confident, should appraise for themselves Mr. Griffith's message and Mr. Griffith's contribution to the drama if today. If unwilling to await this verdict, Mr. Storey and his colleagues might at least have informed themselves of the verdict given by hundreds of eminent persons in New York and elsewhere."

BOSTON CHRIS. SCIENCE MONITOR
APRIL 9 1915

D. W. Griffith's motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been shown in New York at a $2 scale, is to be seen at the Tremont theater for an indefinite engagement which begins Saturday afternoon, April 10, and continues with two performances daily.

The film presents in spectacular form the history of the United States, beginning with the early days of slavery and following the civil war and the reconstruction period in the South. Mr. Griffith was eight months in taking the ... and ... $10,000

HERALD
Boston, Mass.
APR 8 1915

HAS NO POWER TO STOP FILMS

Mayor Finds "Birth of a Nation" to Be Neither Obscene Nor Immoral.

As a result of a protest by nearly 200 persons at a meeting in the City Hall yesterday against the motion picture "The Birth of a Nation," the producers of the film agreed to give a private exhibition tomorrow for the municipal censor, John M. Casey, and a representative of the police commission, and to carry out any recommendations the officials may make.

After nearly three hours, Mayor Curley said he has no power to stop the film unless it tends to injure the morals of the community or is immoral or obscene. Those protesting declared the film would engender race hatred and hence could be said to injure morals. Leading the opposition was Butler R. Wilson. Other speakers in opposition were Miss Mary White Ovington, Dr. Francis E. Bowley, the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, the Rev. M. W. Thornton and Moorfield Storey.

D. W. Griffith, producer of the film, yesterday issued a statement in which he said:

"We regret very much that on our first appearance in the city of Boston we should be engaged in such an unpleasant dispute. But we are indeed glad from the bottom of our hearts that it is in Boston we are making this battle—in Boston, the very beginning of the liberty of the American people—Boston, whose very name is synonymous with freedom. We claim the motion picture is a form of speech. We know, and have the indorsement of the world behind us now, that it is a form of speech as clean and pure as the written word or as the spoken word of the drama. So as a citizen of America I have little fear when asking for the privilege of free speech in Boston, that that privilege will not be granted—granted honestly, squarely and surely.

"If it is right for historians to write history, then by similar and unanswerable reason it is right for us to tell the truth of the historic past in motion pictures. If we as a people and as individuals are afraid to face the truth, then in the interest of our children we must conquer this fear and glean all that we can possibly learn of the past in order to guide our footsteps away from the terrific pitfalls that may await our future.

"If the descendants of the people that fought the battle of Bunker Hill, whose red drops made possible our freedom in action as well as in speech, say they do not want to know and are afraid of the truth of any part of American history, then I shall be the last man in the world to dispute their will. I shall withdraw both myself and my argument from off the forum of Boston without another single word of protest. But as an American I shall and will not do this thing without an appeal to Boston entirely—to those millions of Americans that constitute it and its environs. I shall not yield to a small and obstreperous minority who try to disturb the calm and intellectual guiding spirits with a show of fuss and fury; a small minority, in fact, who would censor away the rights of the great majority.

"No society that is organized can keep this picture from being accepted throughout the rest of the civilized world. We do not believe it according to constitutional rights in this country to suppress speech. The old accepted American way has been to listen to both sides of an argument and thus get at the golden desideratum—the truth."

ADVERTISER
Boston, Mass.
APR ... 1915

ASK MAYOR FOR HEARING ON "THE BIRTH OF NATION"

Claim Motion Picture Play Engenders Race Hatred

A public hearing on the question of the presentation in Boston of the motion picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," has been asked of Mayor Curley. The request comes from the Boston branch of the Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This association passed resolutions saying that the film engendered race hatred, and was a libel on the negro race.

The resolutions have been signed by prominent Bostonians, including Francis J. Garrison and Rev. Horace Bumstead. The play is based on Rev. Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," and deals with the reconstruction period after the Civil War.

Among the resolutions passed by the Society for the Advancement of the Colored Race was this one, which was sent to the Mayor:—

"My Dear Sir: At a meeting of the board of directors of Boston branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, held today, the enclosed resolution was unanimously adopted requesting a hearing for the purpose of opposing the production of 'The Birth of a Nation' in Boston. And I respectfully request that such a hearing be granted at some early date prior to April 10, 1915."

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
APR 5 1915

Defend Film Spectacle, 'The Birth of Nation'

The following statement has been issued by the sponsors of the film spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which is now running at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and opens here this week at the Tremont Theatre:

1.—The drama has been given four weeks in the Metropolis, for nine weeks in Los Angeles, Cal., for out the slightest disturbance of kind. The New York run is exp... to continue for many months to ... solute capacity at the regular pr... scale of first-class theatrical attractions.

2—One hundred and fifty thousand patrons have seen and approved the play. The only opposition has been voiced by members of the National Association for the Improvement of Colored People. Their reason, as admitted, is the effect of the play on those Northern States permitting the inter-marriage of blacks and whites. "The Birth of a Nation" exhibits the folly of such miscegenation.

3—The play has been officially approved by the National Board of Censorship, who say: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture production." It is likewise approved as clean and morally pure.

4—Unlike its predecessor, "The Clansman," which was severely criticised artistically and otherwise, this play received the greatest verdict of praise ever given to a production in New York City. The critics hailed as "the triumph of a new art"—this work by a native Southerner, David W. Griffith, who has advanced the motion picture from a toy to the dignity of epic drama.

5—The events of the war between the States and of reconstruction, pictured in "The Birth of a Nation," are matters of authentic history. Every detail has been verified. So confident is Mr. Griffith of its accuracy and truth that he has invited a committee of representative editors to come to New York at his own expense and see the play, with the promise that if they find "The Birth of a Nation" objectionable he will withdraw it from the boards.

The Traveler Evening Herald
April 5, 1915

FROM TRAVELER READERS

Protests "Birth of a Nation."

To the Editor of The Traveler:

The audacious attempt to portray by moving pictures a dramatic caricature and libel which was forbidden representation years ago in Boston, Philadelphia and other cities should be promptly confronted and defeated. "The Birth of a Nation," which is being so lavishly advertised and exploited, is unequivocally condemned by expert sociologists like Frederic C. Howe, commissioner of immigration; Miss Lilian D. Walsh, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and other prominent New Yorkers, who declare that its portrayal of the Negro as a lustful, degraded creature is a "cruel, vindictive and untrue degradation of a part of the country's citizenship," certain to stir up race prejudice and inciting to breaches of the peace. Their protests and the dignified appeal made by representative colored citizens of New York so impressed Mayor Mitchel that he required certain scenes to be cut out. Boston should go farther and forbid altogether the production of so gross and scandalous a misrepresentation. Mayor Curley cannot hesitate as to his duty in the matter. FRANCIS J. GARRISON.
Boston, April 4.

TRAVELER & EV... Mass.

GLOBE
...: Boston, Mass.
APR 5

given it."

MOTION PICTURE ART.

Latest Scientific Devices Used in Projecting "The Birth of a Nation" on the Screen.

Optical experts responsible for the perfect results of "The Birth of a Nation" projection at the Liberty Theatre, New York, arrived in Boston yesterday and started work at the Tremont Theatre. The same scientific methods of meeting eye-requirements will be used.

In the rear of the orchestra stalls masons have laid a concrete base, above which steel workers have built a steel framework for the picture booth, thus insuring the picture machine's perfect rigidity and steadiness. Instead of putting the screen on the curtain drop, the stage is left open and the screen is located as far back as the third stage entrance. The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focusing.

They have likewise selected by means of careful eye-tests those locations in the house which afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. Such seats are in the center and rear of the ground floor and command $2 prices. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted. Its complete success in New York shows the marvelous progress of pictorial drama from the status of a toy to the eminence of an art.

EVENING RECORD
...dress: Boston, Mass.
...e
APR 5 1915

"The Birth of a Nation"

Optical experts responsible for the perfect results of "The Birth of a Nation" projection at the Liberty Theatre, New York, arrived in Boston Saturday and started work at the Tremont Theatre. The same scientific methods of meeting eye-requirements will be used.

In the rear of the orchestra stalls masons have laid a concrete base, above which steel workers have built a steel framework for the picture booth, thus ensuring the picture machine's perfect rigidity and steadiness.

Instead of putting the screen on the curtain drop, the stage is left open, and the screen is located as far back as the third stage entrance. The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focusing. They have likewise selected by means of careful eye-tests those locations in the house which afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. Such seats are in the centre and rear of the ground floor, and command $2 prices.

Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted. Its complete success in New York shows the marvelous progress of pictorial drama from the status of a toy to the eminence of an art.

GLOBE
...: Boston, Mass.
APR 4 - 1915

...e Birth of a Nation"
Pictures at the Tremont

...W. Griffith will present his epic ...tion pictures, "The Birth of a Na..." for the first time here next Saturday afternoon at the Tremont Theatre, beginning an indefinite engagement. Two performances will be given daily. This mammoth presentation of the ...tal story interwoven with American ...story is the first $2 motion picture. It is ...w running at the Liberty Theatre, ...ew York city, where it has been seen ...crowded houses at every performance since its introduction March 3.

...Griffith has taken for his theme the ...development of the Nation and its relationship to the part the slavery problem ...layed in bringing about Daniel Webster's prophecy of a Nation, one and inseparable. The action begins with the introduction of slavery into the colonies and then the start of the abolition movement and the stirring times leading up to the secession of the Southern States and the outbreak of the Civil War.

The audience is carried through the four years of strife to the death of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre. The eight years of reconstruction form the final episodes in a drama of history, romance and emotion the like of which has never been revealed before. Its termination is in an allegorical picture of the coming of permanent peace and the settlement of all local differences.

To get these varied incidents into his absorbing drama, the producer used ...people and 3000 horses. He has ...history in a spectacular way ...was never dreamed of before.

AMERICAN
...s: Boston, Mass.
APR 4 - 191...

'BIRTH OF NATION' AT THE TREMONT

...D. W. Griffith has selected Boston ...the second city of importance in ...rica to present his epic in motion ...ures, "The Birth of a Nation," ...h will be produced for the first ...here on Saturday afternoon, April ...at the Tremont Theatre for an in...ite engagement.

...is now running at the Liberty ...tre, New York city, where it has ...en by crowded houses at every ...rmance since its introduction on ...day night, March 3.

...ith has taken for his theme the ...ment of the nation and its re...hip to the part the slavery ...m played in bringing about ...Webster's prophecy of a ... one and indivisable. The ... begins with the introduction ...very into the colonies and then ...rt of the abolition movement ...stirring times leading up to ...sion of the Southern States ...outbreak of the Civil War. ...udience is carried through ...years of strife to the death ...dent Lincoln in Ford's Thea... eight years of reconstruc... the final episodes in a ... of history, romance and emo... Its ... termination is in an ... picture of the coming of ... peace and the settlement ...al differences.

...these varied incidents into ...bing drama, the producer ...0 people and 3,000 horses.

AMERICAN
...: Boston, Mass.
APR 4 - 191...

...RALD
...Boston, Mass.
APR 4 - 1915

...f a Nation"

...riffith's epic in motion pict... Birth of a Nation," will be ...for the first time here on next ...afternoon at the Tremont The... indefinite engagement. Two ...ces daily will be given at the ... This mammoth production of ...vital story ever interwoven ...erican history is the first $2 ...ion. It is now running at ...Theatre, New York city, ...it has been seen by crowded ...at every performance since its ...tion Wednesday night, March ...Griffith shows the development ...ation and its relationship to ...ver problem. The action begins ...the introduction of slavery, then ...ition movement, the secession, ...il war, the years of strife and ...ht years of reconstruction are ... To get these varied incidents ...absorbing drama the producer ...00 people and 3000 horses. He ...tten history in a spectacular ...h was never dreamed of be... has also linked music to his ... the use of accompanying ...

AMERICAN
...s: Boston, Mass.
APR 4 - 1915

By HARLOW HARE.

Griffith's big picture, "The Birth of a Nation," will come to the Tremont Theatre next Saturday. The Griffith people have rented the house and expect to play to regular theatre prices.

It is explained in justification of the high prices that the picture is most expensively set. A big orchestra is provided and there is a chorus behind the scenes, while twenty-five or thirty of the most beautiful girls who can be found in Boston will be employed to move about the front of the house in Civil War costumes and furnish local color, etc.

In New York the colored population have been protesting against one or two scenes in this picture, and it is possible that some of our Boston colored citizens will be up in arms.

The picture is a dramatization of Dixon's "The Clansman." Its chief incidents are historic. The incident of the negro is responsible for the formation of the Ku Klux Klan, which chased the carpet baggers out of the South, reduced the negro legislator from his superiority to his present place in the South, and rehabilitated the Southland.

Few people know into what a lamentable situation the South fell nearly ten years after Appomatox. The whites were disfranchised because of their part in the war and the Southern States were governed by a combination of newly franchised negroes and carpet baggers from the North whose main object was loot.

How the whites of the South regained control of the country is one of the most dramatic passages in our history.

"The Birth of a Nation" is said to contain films in which 19,000 people and 3,000 horses are used. Nothing so spectacular has yet been seen upon the screen.

Lewis J. Selznick, president of the World Film Company, is considerable of a publicity procurer. For pure nerve his proposition to the Metropolitan Opera Company to get out and let him have the house for pictures next season at $5 per orchestra seat, is one of the most remarkable ever made. The picture man suggests the Metropolitan take the Century Theatre next season until they can build the new home the directors have been talking about for several years.

He plans to hire grand opera singers to appear between the films and professes to consider using Caruso, Farrar, MacCormack and other stars in this manner.

Mr. Selznick in an interview declares that his firm is willing to make a $250,000 production every month if necessary to provide proper fare for the five-dollar movie patrons, if there be any such.

The Metropolitan Opera House may fall some day into the hands of the moving picture folks, but it won't be as a five-dollar picture proposition. Mr. Selznick had much better engage the Metropolitan for the Spring and Summer months after the regular opera season is over, and try out his plan. The eight or nine people in New York who might pay $5 to see a picture would undoubtedly like to begin at once instead of waiting until next Winter.

I'll wager it has never occurred to Mr. Selznick that he might have some trouble getting grand opera singers of note to appear with films. When the Boston Opera House was leased to pictures last fall, Manager W. R. MacDonald thought he could engage some of the minor artists of the Boston Opera to sing, but he found that no salary he could offer would tempt any of them.

I should like to be around when Geraldine Farrar was asked to go on between the third and fourth reels. Her irruption would probably explode the film.

TRAVELER & EVE. HERALD
Boston, Mass.
APR 6 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation" has proved the moving picture sensation of New York. For the first time in the history of the American stage playgoers have paid $3 a seat to see a motion picture play and are united in the expression of opinion that it is well worthy of the same schedule of prices that has prevailed for the highest priced dramatic offerings and famous stars.

"The Birth of a Nation" is something entirely new in the motion picture world and has aroused the greatest amount of interest among amusement seekers of all classes. It will be given at the Tremont Theatre, beginning next Saturday afternoon and evening, April 10. An invitation presentation will be given on Friday evening and the public will have its first chance on Saturday.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
...ress: Boston, Mass.
APR 5 1915

In spite of the changes that were made in the filmed spectacle, "The Birth of the Nation" at the suggestion of the municipal authorities in New York to soothe the wounded sensibilities of the negroes and other protestants in their behalf, objections have been made to the mayor, in the exercise of his chief and most cherished function as regulator of the theatre, against the exhibition of the pictures at the Tremont. In reply, the management has issued a communiqué in which it says that protest comes from no other source and that the reels have been officially approved by the National Board of Censorship as "educationally, dramatically and artistically, a great step forward in motion-pictures."

JOURNAL
...ess: Boston, Mass.
APR 5 1915

Voigt, a New York business man.

Optical experts are the latest innovation in the theatre. They have been brought over from New York to help prepare the way for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," the big photo-play billed to come to the Tremont late this week. Here is the official word on the novel subject.

"The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focussing. They have likewise selected by means of eye-tests those locations in the house which will afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. Such seats are in the centre and rear of the ground floor and command $2 prices. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted."

BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
APRIL 5 1915

...among the old favorites.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" PICTURES ARE COMING

Before the end of the present week Boston theatregoers will have an opportunity of seeing the highest priced picture play ever presented on the American stage, "The Birth of a Nation," which was produced in New York at the same schedule of prices in vogue for the highest class of dramatic attractions.

Week after week it has packed the Liberty Theatre to the doors, according to all reports, and now arrangements have been completed by which Bostonians will have a chance for an exact duplicate engagement at the Tremont Theatre, with a public opening next Saturday afternoon, April 10.

The story of "The Birth of a Nation" deals with the Civil War and the Reconstruction era in the South following the war. The production is on an elaborate scale. An orchestra of 40 pieces will be furnished to interpret the musical score, which is the most important ... upon the pictures.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. HERALD
APRIL 5 1915

1702

PUBLIC LETTER BOX

PROVOCATIVE OF RACE PREJUDICE

To the Editor of The Herald:

It is announced by advertisement in the daily newspapers that the play entitled, "The Birth of a Nation," is to be performed in Boston beginning on next Saturday afternoon. This is a moving picture drama founded on a novel written by the Rev. Thomas Dixon, a mischievous and unscrupulous novelist who has done his best in his writings to misrepresent the colored people of the Southern states, and to ...ingame race prejudice. Miss Jane Addams of Chicago well describes the play as a "pernicious caricature of the Negro race" and as an attempt to make the Negro "appear worse than childish and brutal and vicious—actually grotesque and primitive and contemptible." It contains a wicked libel on the race to which belong many most respectable excellent law-abiding citizens of Boston, and its performance in this city should not be permitted.

The colored people of this country today are suffering the effects of race prejudice in every relation of life. In large parts of the country they are denied the right to vote, are lynched and often tortured if only suspected of crime, are restricted as to residence, employment, education, and everywhere the equal opportunity to which every American citizen is entitled is denied to them. This condition of things is deplorable, and every good citizen should set his face against every attempt to increase the prejudice from which they are now suffering. This is essential to the future of us all, for no state can prosper in which any considerable body of citizens is exposed to systematic injustice.

I earnestly hope that the public opinion of this city will assert itself, and that the authorities will exercise their power to prevent the proposed performance of this play, which in the attempt to make money excites the prejudices and passions of the spectators, while it misleads and perverts the opinion of a generation unfamiliar with the truth of the history which it distorts.

MOORFIELD STOREY.

Boston, ...

POST
...ress: Boston, Mass.
APR 6 1915

Tremont Theatre

Before the end of the present week Boston theatregoers will have an opportunity of seeing the highest-priced picture play ever presented on the American stage, "The Birth of a Nation." Week after week it has packed the ... Theatre, New York, to the ... arrangements have been ... which Bostonians will ... exact duplication ... theatre, opening next ... April 10.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
APRIL 5 1915

...her Eliza Doolittle has seldom been seen upon a local stage.

"The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," has arrived in Boston and will personally oversee the opening performances of the great historical and dramatic spectacle at the Tremont Theatre. There will be a private view of the work to invited guests Friday evening, but the first public representations will be given Saturday matinee and night.

Preparations for the premier are busying a large force of mechanics, stage carpenters, camera men, costumers and directors of supernumeraries. "The Birth of a Nation" combines film spectacle, music and stage effects and tells a romantic tale of Civil War and reconstruction times. The scope of action is vast and intermingled with the love interest is the National theme of a great people reborn through the stress and struggle of civil strife.

...features of the film. ...pear in Boston and other cities. ...the most elaborate and costly of motion picture ...s and begins its course at high prices in leading ...rs. Determined efforts should be made to stop it on the grounds of its false, immoral and hate-inspiring influence.

Herald Boston

APR 21915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Motion Picture of Great Interest to Be Shown at the Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation," a motion picture of exceptional interest and magnitude, will be brought to the Tremont Theatre Saturday afternoon, April 10, for an indefinite engagement. This picture is now being presented at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and has the distinction of being the first motion picture for which an admittance fee of $2 has been charged.

The producer, D. W. Griffith, has taken for his theme the development of the Nation from the time of the introduction of slavery into the colonies, treating of the abolition movement, the War of the Rebellion, the death of President Lincoln and the succeeding years of reconstruction. It is said that 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were used in picturing the varied incidents of this remarkable spectacle.

Globe APR - 21915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

Motion Picture of Great Interest to [illegible], the Tremont Theatre.

"The Birth of a Nation," a motion picture of exceptional interest and magnitude, will be brought to the Tremont Theatre Saturday afternoon, April 10, for an indefinite engagement. This picture is now being presented at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and has the distinction of being the first motion picture for which an admittance fee of $2 has been charged.

The producer, D. W. Griffith, has taken for his theme the development of the Nation from the time of the introduction of slavery into the colonies, treating of the abolition movement, the War of the Rebellion, the death of [illegible] Lincoln and the succeeding years of reconstruction. It is said that 18,000 persons and 3000 horses were used in picturing the varied incidents of this [illegible] spectacle.

American April 3, 1915

'Birth of a Nation' on Film Here Soon

Contracts have been closed for the next attraction at the Tremont Theatre. This will be the wonderful D. W. Griffith motion picture "The Birth of a Nation" which is the sensation of the season in New York, where it is playing at the Liberty Theatre. The wonderful picture production will be given here for the first time to the public on Saturday afternoon, April 10, and will remain the offering at the Tremont for an indefinite period.

Evening Record April 3, 1915

Tremont Theatre

D. W. Griffith's wonderful motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been the sensation of the year in New York since its first presentation at the Liberty Theatre, where it is now breaking all records of the metropolis for attendance, is to be seen in Boston next. Announcement was made yesterday that this marvelous creation will come to the Tremont Theatre for an indefinite engagement with two performances daily.

This is the first $2 motion picture production to reach the American stage. It is a story of the history of the United States woven into a romance of the most stirring nature. It begins in the early days of slavery in this country, and then follows the Civil War and the reconstruction period in the South with a graphic fidelity that makes it the most remarkable drama ever revealed.

Great battles of the Civil War stir one with the pathos and grim reality of human strife, and then the assassination of President Lincoln is shown, and following this the reconstruction in the South, when theories had to be worked out in realistic fashion and the truth and peace of a fuller understanding between the warring sections established.

Mr. Griffith has reproduced these great matters of national import with a touch that is akin to genius. He was months taking his pictures and used 18,000 people and 3000 horses to get the desired effects. It will be given here with an orchestra of 40 and every detail of the great production which is now the talk of New York.

Transcript Per Tue. Herald April 3, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

D. W. Griffith's motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been the sensation of the year in New York, comes to the Tremont Theatre on Saturday afternoon, April 10, and continues with two performances daily. It is a story of the history of the United States woven into a romance of the most stirring nature. It begins in the early days of slavery in this [illegible] of the civil war [illegible] and grim [illegible] then the [illegible] follow [illegible] struct [illegible] company at the Eliot st[illegible] Grif[illegible] fifth [illegible] Birth of a [illegible]

Boston Journal APR 21915

Parkhurst Defends Film

With reference to another disputed film planned to be produced in Boston entitled "The Birth of a Nation," which has a section which has aroused bitter protests from the negroes, the mayor yesterday received a letter from the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst of New York which said in part:

"The criticism that it exhibits the negro in an unfortunate light and that it is calculated to engender racial animosity is fully met by the consideration that it represents the negro, not as he is now at all, but as he was in the days when he had just had the chains broken from him and when he was rioting in the deliciousness of a liberty so new and untried that he had not yet learned to understand it and was as ignorant as a baby of the way to use it.

"It is in this respect exactly true to history and if it reflects upon the negro he was then, it is a compliment to the black man of today. An exhibition of negro lawlessness might not have been proper thirty or forty years ago. Such proprieties, however, change with the passing of time."

BIG PHOTO-PLAY COMING APRIL 10

"The Birth of a Nation" to Be Shown at Tremont Theatre.

Contracts were closed yesterday for the next attraction at the Tremont Theatre, which will be the famous D. W. Griffith motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation." It is the sensation of the season in New York. The Liberty Theatre is reported as being crowded twice a day.

The production will be given here for the first time in public on Saturday afternoon, April 10, and it will remain at the Tremont for an indefinite period. There will be an invitation presentation on Friday night, April 9.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been described as the "harbinger of a new era in dramatic art" and as the "most wonderful story ever worked out in photo-dramatic form," and it is also noteworthy as the first $2 motion picture production. But it has taken rank among the very best theatrical offerings in New York, and it is said to be playing to more people than any two first-class attractions in the Metropolis. Boston will be the second city in America to see it. Mr. Griffith announced yesterday that the New York production will be duplicated here in every detail, including an orchestra of 40 musicians to perform the work that accompanies the play.

JOURNAL
Boston, Mass.
APR 3 1915

FAMOUS PICTURE PLAY AT TREMONT

"The Birth of a Nation" to Open Engagement Here Next Saturday.

D. W. Griffith's noted motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," which has been the sensation of the year in New York, where it is now breaking all records for attendance, will come to the Tremont Theatre for an indefinite engagement, beginning Saturday afternoon, April 10, with two performances daily.

This is the first $2 motion picture production to reach the American stage. It is a story of the history of the United States woven into a romance of the most striking nature. It begins in the early days of slavery in this country and then follows the Civil War and the Reconstruction period in the South with graphic fidelity. Great battles of the Civil War are represented; also, the assassination of President Lincoln, and then scenes depicting reconstruction in the South.

Mr. Griffith has reproduced these scenes, so it is said, with a touch that is akin to genius. He was eight months taking his pictures and used 18,000 people and 3000 horses to get the desired effects.

The production will be given here with an orchestra of 40 and with every detail as faithfully presented as it is in New York, where this photo-dramatic masterpiece is the talk of the town.

With Easter week the stage usually begins to boom again. A boom is due in Boston.

The principal novelties next week will be "Tonight's the Night," the London Gaiety show, which is billed at the Shubert; the English Players' double bill at the Plymouth, "The Sin of David," a poetic drama by Stephen Phillips, and "The Van Dyck," a little comedy by Cosmo Gordon Lennox, which will mark the start of [illegible]

"The Birth of a Nation" Coming to the Tremont

Contracts were closed yesterday for the next attraction at the Tremont Theatre. This will be the D. W. Griffith motion picture "The Birth of a Nation," which is at present the sensation of the season in New York, where it is playing at the Liberty Theatre. The picture production will be given here for the first time in public on Saturday afternoon, April 10, and will remain the offering at the Tremont for an indefinite period. Prior to this Mr. Griffith announced yesterday that the metropolitan production will be duplicated in every detail here, including an orchestra of 40 musicians to handle the score, which is a vital part of the story.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
Boston, Mass.
MAR 3 1 1915

"The Present Climax of 'the Movies'"

"The Birth of a Nation" Soberly and Shrewdly Viewed

By Walter Prichard Eaton

We are not going to invoke the shade of William Lloyd Garrison to rise up in protest at the film drama, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now "showing" at the Liberty Theatre in New York, at the regular $2.00 scale of prices in the evening, and at a half scale in the afternoon. It ought to be sufficiently evident to anybody that a film drama based on a novel by Tom Dixon would be luridly one-sided, unfair to the negro, and ridiculously sympathetic toward the Ku-Klux Klan. Moreover, it ought to be evident to nearly anybody that a motion picture drama of the vexed Reconstruction period in South Carolina couldn't fail to be rather ridiculously inadequate. The problems involved were large ones; the North was split into factions, the South was stricken by war, both sides were left embittered, the negroes were but just out of bondage—indeed, the marvel is, not that there was so much trouble, but that there was, on the whole, so little. To put all this into a movie, expressing it entirely by a pantomimic story, without any chance for debate, for the statement of historical facts, for the expression of both sides, even for the fundamental statement that the South was a conquered country and naturally so regarded by many people in the North, is—to express it mildly—an utterly impossible task. You don't have to see a film drama made from Tom Dixon's "The Clansman" to know that it is an unfair picture of Reconstruction days, that it awakes memories better left sleeping, that what influence it has will probably be pernicious. But, like Cicero, we do not intend to say anything about this feature of "The Birth of a Nation." We would not for a moment hint that the National Board of Censors in passing it showed themselves curiously insensitive to the larger phases of ethical influence. It is quite another side of the picture we wish to consider.

On the programme we read that "Mr. Griffith was eight months making the entire production. During that time he employed a small army of men and women to get the desired results."

Again: "In the great battle scenes which are given in the earlier portions of the picture Mr. Griffith employed many novel appliances to get his effects. For the first time in making motion pictures he utilized the telephone most extensively. Imagine a stage director handling thousands upon thousands of players in one scene and directing them by telephone!"

Mr. Griffith is indeed the von Hindenburg of the movies!

Again, we read that, "25,000 yards of material were used to make the costumes for the women in the spectacle. There were over four hundred different kinds of dresses made. It took five months to make them. Twelve thousand yards of white material was (sic!) used in the costumes for the Ku-Klux-Klan. Twenty dressmakers worked eight hours a day for four months on these."

From private and authentic sources we further learn that the entire production cost about $125,000—or enough money to found and maintain a sensible repertory theatre in a small city.

Thousands of people, months of labor, the massive intellect of Rev. Thomas Dixon, $125,000 in hard cash—and the result a movie drama which sets back the clock for the negro race and reopens old wounds of sectional feeling, while its artistic merits are practically nil! Verily, the mountain labored, and brought forth a mouse!

The extended battle scenes, which were directed by von Hindenburg Griffith over the telephone, are for the most part blind and meaningless. You see great acres of fields, lines of trenches, puffs of smoke, red glare at night, men rushing about; but you get no plan of battle; it is like fireworks gone mad. Perhaps that is what a real battle would look like, to all but the officers in command. It is the business of art, however, to give the spectator the omniscience of the commanders. There is one striking exception. A character in the play—the brave Southern hero—leads a forlorn charge against three successive lines of trenches. All his men fall before they get to the third trench, but he carries the company flag up to the final breastwork. Here the camera is pointed down the line of men, and its field is limited to perhaps an acre of ground. As a result, the spectator sees clearly exactly what is happening and why, a personal note enters in and the picture is continued long enough to permit you to get into the spirit of the thing. In other words, it builds up on a definite climax. Undoubtedly, of all the battle scenes, it was the easiest and least expensive to make—and it is the only effective one!

The scene of Lincoln's assassination in Ford's Theatre is in [illegible] at least it has the interest of an historical reconstruction. The camera was in the balcony, and the film shows the stage, the boxes and even the audience. From that point on the drama is shifted entirely to South Carolina. We see the historic South Carolina black Legislature in session; we see the blacks in possession of the polls; we see various scenes in which blacks pursue white women; and finally we see the Ku-Klux-Klans formed and thereafter they are the heroes of the play.

Mr. Griffith, the producer, who is generally considered the one genius our native screen stage has evolved, uses the "throw back" scene so persistently that it has become with him an almost painful mannerism. The theory is, of course, that in life two related events are often happening simultaneously, and if they are you should give your audience a realization of the fact. You can't do it in a book or a drama, except very clumsily, by stating at the beginning of your next act or chapter that this is what has happened somewhere else during the preceding action. But you can do it in the movies, by the simple device of breaking your film every so often and inserting a section portraying the simultaneous action.

For example, in "The Birth of a Nation" we see a party of whites take refuge in a cabin, where they are besieged by blacks. The blacks batter at the door. First we see those inside firing out. Then we are shown those outside firing in. Then, whiff! the scene changes to a place in the woods, and we see the Ku-Klux Klan assembling. Then we see the cabin again. The defenders are hard pressed. The attackers have battered down the outer wall. Then we are shown a road, and down this road the Ku-Klux horsemen are galloping at least 186 miles an hour. (Tremendous and quite unnatural speed is a convention movie audiences accept without a protest, probably because the slower pace of life without any spoken words, would become very monotonous.) Back the scene flashes to the cabin. The blacks are inside the first line of defences now! Whiff—we are on the road again. The galloping Ku-Kluxers have hit up their pace to two hundred miles an hour! Back to the cabin—out to the road—repeat half a dozen times; in the last picture of the cabin show the inner door about to fall down; and then—climax! show the rescue party dashing up to the cabin!

The formula is really ridiculously simple. Mr. Griffith works it over and over and over again. It seems to have an unfailing potency with the audience—but what an elementary dramatic device it is, what a naive and unimportant dramatic thrill to cost $125,000 in the making.

Mr. Griffith a year ago produced a film called "The Escape" which was largely photographed on the Bowery and which really did carry a distinct idea along with the story. It delivered its intended sociological "message." It did so because it stuck to a limited group of realistic types, whose motives and passions were primitive, simple, and above all personal. Even at that, Mr. Griffith seems to be the only movie producer who can "put over" a theme as well as a narrative.

But in "The Birth of a Nation" he is dealing with a great variety and complexity of people, and the emotions are not simple in many cases, and not personal. They take in the whole range of national passions during a stormy period of our history, and they cannot be adequately represented without speech. The assumption that we can go back to what amounts to sign language at this stage of civilization is one of the most touchingly naive examples of motion-picture makers' credulity on record.

However, perhaps it is, on the whole, a good thing to have the producers thus high-vaulting in their ambitions. Already the movies have begun to reduce the number of dramatic theatres toward a saner proportion. Their own inflation, of course, will be followed by a slump, and they will find their true place by the bitter lessons of experience. Also, in their $125,000 experiments they will, sooner or later, presently develop directors with real pictorial instincts, and motion picture photography may yet give us what it is capable of giving us—beautiful effects for the eye. Simple narrative will probably remain, for the most part, its limit of dramatic appeal; but there is no real reason why, on the pictorial side, it should remain in the state of amateur kodakery where it now is. Sooner or later we are bound to have a Cabiria or a Steichen of the movies, and then will be the date of a new epoch.

Christian Science Monitor

"Birth of a Nation"

Negotiations are under way for the presentation in Boston next month of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." One set of the pictures is being shown at the Liberty Theatre, New York. "The Birth of a Nation" [illegible] consecutive [illegible]

Birth of a Nation" Managers Defend Play

...e letter published by Moorfield ...y criticising "The Birth of a Na... has called forth the following ... from ...nagement of the play ... Theatre:

"...y be the differing opin... Birth of a Nation,' it ... harm and excite much ...e than a newspaper ... published by the ... for the Advance... People, of which Mr. ... is the president.

"... attacks 'The Birth of a ... through a letter in one of the ... morning papers. Perhaps he ... know that the publication is... his organization is of an in... character. In one of the re... issues, of which we have a copy, ... are advised to meet the white ... the rifle and sword.' They are ... to fight for their 'rights,' to ... their enemies 'with bullets,' and ... organize! organize! agitate! agi...

"We would not quote these remarks ...r's publication but for his ... intent to denounce 'The Birth ... for doing exactly what he ... But we deny in toto that we ... race prejudice. All of ... made by Mr. Storey in ... can be successfully challenged. ... colored people suffering effects ... prejudice in every relation of ...

"... at least, they are driv... out of many desirable ... districts. They are political ... cities. They are the re... from the whites to a ... than any of the other ... make up this nation ... the account of debit ... on each side it ... If the negroes have ... advantages and some ... yet received wonder... yes, from Southern ... benefactions to the ... are rarely told of.

...Addams' View

"... from Miss Jane Ad... Storey's letter must be ... of the fact that she saw ... of the play. Has Mr. ... any part of it? Or is he ... merely on hearsay evidence? ... alleges that 'The Birth of ... distorts the truth of history. ... Mr. Storey will give to Mr. Storey ... charity he may name the ... $10,000 in return for pointing out ... distortion. As a matter of ... 'The Birth of a Nation' is histor... ...orical circumstances there... ...fied by reference to the ...drew Wilson, Fleming, ...er writers. The assump... ...play attacks the negro ... race of today is a purely gratuitous one. The 'caricature of the negro' is in Mr. Storey's own imagination. Three out of the five important negro characters are heroes, not villains. The negro is never shown in the play as the sole author of mischief, but rather as incited to unworthy acts by the carpetbaggers.

"Thomas Dixon is not the author of 'The Birth of a Nation' and the play should not be judged by his expression on the negro question. Mr. Griffith made his own scenario, and it is to be judged by what he has done and not by what the National association attributes to Mr. Dixon.

Contribution to Art'

"If Mr. Griffith had invented a steam turbine or an airship or a new chemical process or scientific management, he would be acclaimed as a public benefactor and nothing would be heard of the diatribes. But since he has merely invented a new art that brings the dawn of a better and a greater day to the theatres of the world, he is greeted with abuse and obliquy. Opponents are unwilling to have him give another side of civil struggle than the side of which they have been accustomed, and they lose all perspective of his wonderful art achievement.

"Toleration is the breath of art. The people of Boston, we feel confident, should appraise for themselves Mr. Griffith's message and Mr. Griffith's contribution to the drama of today. If unwilling to await this verdict, Mr. Storey and his colleagues might at least have informed themselves of the verdict given by hundreds of eminent persons in New York and elsewhere, including George Foster Peabody, the banker-philanthropist, or Frank A. Vanderlip, the financier; Revs. Drs. C. H. Parkhurst and Thomas B. Gregory; Congressman Claude Kitchen, the new leader of the House; U. S. Senators Martine, Fletcher, Myers, Walsh and Jones; Governor Johnson of California; Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, the suffragist leader; Richard Harding Davis, Booth Tarkington, Rupert Hughes and Dorothy Dix, among the writers.

...ORD (Mass.) NEWS
APRIL 6, 1915

...E BIRTH OF A NATION."

...Griffith's Famous Spectacle ... at the Tremont Theatre, Bos... April 10.

...nty years after the great ... the close of the Civil war ... treats, D. W. Griffith's ...ic, "The Birth of a Na... presented at the Trem... Boston, opening Satur... April 10. A half cen... ...rred the Appomattox ... Union triumph and the ... of Lincoln's death—... ...ffith believes he has ... reverently reproduced ...l film epic. The film... ...at picture occupied ... enlisted the ser... ...ts of "T... Three thous... ...in the cavalry ...ling Davis, the ...dent, says that ...st time in stage ...sented as it ac... ...de of Petersburg, ... to the sea and ...nes live before the ...

...e national re-birth ...h a love-romance of ...nature. The tale ...arly days of slavery ... takes up the causes ... and its progress and ... in the second part ...nstruction and the ... the carpetbaggers in ...dy, tragedy, romance, ...tic drama are each ...s in the 5000 scenes ... The work is ac... ...full score of symi... ...ndered by an orches... The film play has ...dous sensation in ... Boston is the second ... The prices range ... ...5 evening and Sat... ...25 cents to $1 the ... ...all orders ad... ...Birth of a Na... ...Theatre.

...movies.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
Boston, Mass.
APR 7 1915

The management of the filmed spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," to be shown at the Tremont on Saturday, has put out a reply to the current objections raised by colored persons and their partisans against it. The manifesto very properly asks whether those who speak against these film have actually seen them—a becoming preliminary to protest. It asserts that "the assumption that the pictures attack the negro race of today is purely gratuitous"; that the negro of the reconstruction period is "never shown in these films as the sole author of mischief" but rather as incited to unworthy acts by the carpetbaggers; and that "three out of the five important negro figures are heroes, not villains." It further points out that the scenario came from the hands of Mr. Griffith and not from Thomas Dixon. Thus does controversy prepare the way for audiences.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
Boston, Mass.
APR 8 1915

Fortunately for "The Birth of a Nation" it isn't "high-brow" enough to merit the dignity of Mr. Anthony C. Curley's attention.

Worcester Mass Post
April 6, 1915

Royal Theater

"The Quest," a five act picture shown today for the last time at the Royal Theater is a striking picture play. David W. Griffin, the man who produced "The Birth of a Nation," is the producer of "[illegible]" Tomorrow "The Lost House," a four act picturization of Richard Harding Davis' pet story, will be shown. It gives Lillian Gish a chance to make an impression. Other picturepiays and a Keystone comedy will be shown.

IN REPLY TO MR. STOREY.

To the Editor of The Herald:

Whatever may be the differing opinions about "The Birth of a Nation," it will do far less harm and excite much less racial prejudice than a newspaper called The Crisis, published by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of which Mr. Moorfield Storey is the president. Mr. Storey attacks the "Birth of a Nation" through a letter in The Herald. Perhaps he does not know that the publication issued by his organization is of an incendiary character. In one of the recent issues, of which we have a copy, Negroes are advised to meet the white race "with rifle and sword." They are exhorted to fight for their "rights," to receive their enemies "with bullets," and to "organize! organize! agitate! agitate!")

We would not quote these remarks of Mr. Storey's publication but for his obvious intent to denounce "The Birth of a Nation" for doing exactly what he is doing. But we deny in toto that we are inculcating race prejudice. All of the statements made by Mr. Storey in his letter can be successfully challenged.

The quotation from Miss Jane Addams in Mr. Storey's letter must be judged in view of the fact that she saw only one-half of the play. Has Mr. Storey viewed any part of it? Or is he speaking entirely on hearsay evidence?

Mr. Storey alleges that "The Birth of a Nation" distorts the truth of history. Mr. David W. Griffith will give to Mr. Storey or to any charity he may name the sum of $10,000 in return for pointing out any such distortion. As a matter of fact, "The Birth of a Nation" is historically true. All the historical circumstances therein can be verified by reference to the works of Woodrow Wilson, Fleming, Rhodes, and other writers. The assumption that the play attacks the Negro race of today is a purely gratuitous one. The "caricature of the Negro" is in Mr. Storey's own imagination. Three out of the five important Negro characters are heroes, not villains. The Negro is never shown in the play as the sole author of mischief, but rather as incited to unworthy acts by the carpet-baggers.

Thomas Dixon is not the author of "The Birth of a Nation," and the play should not be judged by his expressions on the Negro question. Mr. Griffith made his own scenario, and it is to be judged by what he has done and not by what the National Association attributes to Mr. Dixon.

If Mr. Griffith had invented a steam turbine or an airship or a new chemical process or scientific management, he would be acclaimed as a public benefactor and nothing would be heard of the diatribes. But since he has merely invented a new art that brings the dawn of a better and a greater day in the theatres of the world, he is greeted with abuse and obliquy. Opponents are unwilling to have him give another side of civil struggle than the side to which they have been accustomed, and they lose all perspective of his wonderful art achievement.

Toleration is the breath of art. The people of Boston, we feel confident, should appraise for themselves Mr. Griffith's message and Mr. Griffith's contribution to the drama of today. If unwilling to await this verdict Mr. Storey and his colleagues might at least have informed themselves of the verdict given by hundreds of eminent persons in New York and elsewhere, including George Foster Peabody, the banker-philanthropist; or Frank A. Vanderlip, the financier; Revs. Drs. C. H. Parkhurst and Thomas B. Gregory; Congressman Claude Kitchin, the new leader of the House; U. S. Senators Martine, Fletcher, Myers, Walsh and Jones; Gov. Johnson of California; Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, the suffragist leader; Richard Harding Davis, Booth Tarkington, Rupert Hughes, Dorothy Dix among the writers.

J. J. McCARTHY.

Tremont Theatre, April 6.

JOURNAL
ress: Boston, Mass.
APR 7 1915

Here is a missive introducing Miriam Cooper, who impersonates Margaret Cameron, a Southern charmer, in "The Birth of a Nation," the film spectacle which is to be seen here for the first time at the Tremont Theatre next Saturday afternoon:

"David W. Griffith, the famous motion picture director, who was anxious to get an ideal type for the role of Margaret Cameron in his epic film, "The Birth of a Nation," selected Miss Miriam Cooper for the part from among nearly 200 applicants. He sought an 'old-fashioned' Southern belle, not the pert, vivacious miss, but the girl of aristocratic traditions who maintains poise and dignity at all times.

"Miss Cooper by descent is a Carroll of Carrollton, Md., her ancestor, Charles Carroll, having been a signer of the Declaration of Independence. All her film training has been under Mr. Griffith's direction. A good part of her availability is due to what the technician calls her wonderful 'inset eyes.'

"This means the young woman's orbs are so perfect that they can be photographed on full screen of 20 feet square showing nothing but the eyes. In such 'close-up' photography, exhibiting minute details of expression, Griffith is said to be without a peer. On the director's return to California this summer Miss Cooper is to be starred in a new picture."

BOSTON (Mass) RECORD
APRIL 7, 1915

DEFENDS "BIRTH OF NATION" IN STRONG REPLY

Management Takes Exception to Moorfield Storey's Criticism of Play About Negroes

The management of the play "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre, which has been strongly criticised by Moorfield Storey, has replied to those who attack the play. The reply reads, in part:

"Whatever may be the differing opinions about 'The Birth of a Nation,' it will do far less harm and excite much less racial prejudice than a newspaper called 'The Crisis' published by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of which Mr. Moorfield Storey is the president.

"Mr. Storey attacks 'The Birth of a Nation' through a letter in one of the Boston morning papers. Perhaps he does not know that the publication issued by his organization is of an incendiary character. In one of the recent issues, of which we have a copy, negroes are advised to meet the white race 'with the rifle and sword.' They are exhorted to fight for their 'rights,' to receive their enemies 'with bullets,' and to 'organize! agitate! agittate!'

"We would not quote these remarks of Mr. Storey's publication but for his obvious intent to denounce 'The Birth of a Nation' for doing exactly what he is doing. But we deny in toto that we are inculcating race prejudice. All of the statements made by Mr. Storey in his letter can be successfully challenged. Are the colored people suffering effects of race prejudice in every relation of life?

"Mr. Storer alleges that 'The Birth of a Nation' distorts the truth of history. David W. Griffith will give to Mr. Storey or to any charity he may name the sum of $10,000 in return for pointing out any such distortion. As a matter of fact, 'The Birth of a Nation' is historically true.

"The 'caricature of the negro' is in Mr. Storey's own imagination. Three out of the five important negro characters are heroes, not villains. The negro is never shown in the play as the sole author of mischief, but rather as incited to unworthy acts by the carpetbaggers.

"Thomas Dixon is not the author of 'The Birth of a Nation' and the play should not be judged by his expression on the negro question. Mr. Griffith made his own scenario, and it is to be judged by what he has done and not by what the National association attributes to Mr. Dixon.

"Toleration is the breath of art. The people of Boston, we feel confident, should appraise for themselves Mr. Griffith's message and Mr. Griffith's contribution to the drama if today. If unwilling to await this verdict, Mr. Storey and his colleagues might at least have informed themselves of the verdict given by hundreds of eminent persons in New York and elsewhere."

ress: New York City Variety
e APR 9 - 1915

SHOWS IN BOSTON.

Boston, April 7.

Monday brought a deluge of openings; "The Blue Bird," "The Little Cafe," "Tonight's the Night," The Aborns into the Boston, "The Sin of David," and the Cort reopened with "Kitty Mackaye," which did no alarming business at the Shubert and was shifted to the Cort.

Saturday matinee this week will bring the opening of "The Birth of the Nation," the spectacular film. A heavy advertising campaign has been in progress all week and a clean-up is expected at $1.50 prices.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
From CONGREGATIONAL
Address BOSTON, MASS.
Date APR 8 [illegible]

One of the worst appeals to race prejudice appears in the motion picture play, The Birth of a Nation, which has been produced by D. W. Griffith in New York recently. It is based on Thomas Dixon's "The Clansman," that has been excluded from the stage of many Northern cities. The Negro is represented as so vicious and degraded that a storm of protest has arisen. Prominent people are making a fight in New York against the objectionable features of the film. Meantime it is advertised to appear in Boston and other cities. It is one of the most elaborate and costly of motion picture productions and begins its course at high prices in leading theaters. Determined efforts should be made to stop it on the grounds of its false, immoral and hate-inspiring influence.

TRAVELER & EVE. HERALD
Boston, Mass.
APR 8 1915

Boston Post
1915
Boston Journal
APR 2

POST
Boston, Mass.
APR

HISS PRESIDENT WILSON AT RACE FILM HEARING

Boston Colored Citizens Jeer at Mention of Cabinet Viewing "The Birth of a Nation"—Can Bar It Only If Obscene, Says Curley.

Boston colored citizens, to the number of more than 200, hissed President Wilson and the members of his cabinet when they were mentioned at the hearing yesterday afternoon in the old aldermanic chamber at City Hall to determine if the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," in which Negroes figure prominently, should be permitted to be shown in this city. The hearing was granted by Mayor Curley, following a flood of protests which swept in upon the announcement of the forthcoming presentation of the film here.

The mayor, after hearing the arguments and protests against the showing of the photoplay, and presenting contradictory evidence, decided that "The Birth of a Nation" should have at least one presentation, after which it would be up to Official Censor Casey and the police censor to determine if it should be barred or permitted to run.

The hearing yesterday was one of the most sensational gatherings of its kind ever held in Greater Boston. The demonstration occurred after Atty. John F. Cusick had brought out the fact that the President and his cabinet had viewed a performance of the much-discussed film, and had expressed their satisfaction. So strong was the feeling of those present that hissing followed this announcement. Patrolmen helped to restore order, and Mayor Curley had to rap with his gavel to restore quiet.

Among those who appeared at the hearing to voice their protest against the photoplay were some of Boston's most prominent clergy and citizens, including the Rev. Alexander Mann, the Rev. Horace Bumstead, Moorfield Storey and Dr. Charles Fleischer. They asked the mayor to refuse permission to have the film shown at the Tremont Theatre, beginning next Saturday, saying it would be a detriment to the Negro race, causing hatred and race feeling. To refute these assertions Mr. Cusick introduced evidence to show that "The Birth of a Nation" had been commended by the chief justice of the United States and other members of this body, more than ten members of the United States Senate and prominent representatives of the press at the national capital, and that the film, instead of being degrading, was of especial educational, instructive and moral value.

Most of the protesters based their argument on three scenes in the production. The first scene to which objection was taken, according to Butler R. Wilson, who was chief spokesman for the protestants, is where a Negro is seen chasing a young white girl up a cliff. At the end, to escape his clutches, she throws herself into an abyss. The second scene objected to is that of a colored Lieutenant-Governor in a southern state who ties a young white girl to a chair and gags her because of her refusal to marry him, the final portion of the scene being where the girl is carried by the assailant into an adjoining bedroom. The third objection was to a scene during the civil war, wherein a father, mother and daughter, with two Union soldiers, are seen defending their home against a horde of Negroes. In the final scene of this part of the production the father is seen holding a revolver against his daughter's head as the Negroes storm the house.

The first opponent to the picture was Miss Mary White Ovington, a settlement worker, who said she had twice viewed the picture, and had heard persons in the audience voice their indignation at Negroes in general. Questioned by the mayor as to her knowledge of Shakespeare, Miss Ovington admitted having seen Lady Macbeth after she had killed her husband, but said the expression on her face was by no means "as awful as that of Gus," the Negro who pursues the girl in "The Birth of a Nation." She also said, in answer to a query from the mayor, that the expression on the face of Shylock, in "The Merchant of Venice," was not nearly so horrible as that on the face of the Negro as portrayed.

Explaining the scene where the father is aiming a revolver at his daughter's head, the mayor said it was done to save her from immorality. An opponent mentioned the fact that in the picture a Negro was flogged, to which Mayor Curley quickly replied that even now, in the state of Delaware, men are flogged, sometimes for petty larceny.

The mayor cited the play "Richelieu," in which the cardinal declares, before all present, his intention of committing an immoral act. "This play has never been stopped," the mayor said, "yet you want this moving picture barred, and so far you have failed to produce evidence that it is indecent or immoral."

Charges Politics.

Moorfield Storey, former president of the American Bar Association, charged that the picture was for political purposes and was to discredit the Negro all over the country. Mayor Curley said the English might just as reasonably enter a protest against Shakespeare, after which he read a letter from an Episcopal clergyman who described the protested picture as wonderful.

An arraignment of "The Clansman," from which the photo-play is taken, was made by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church. "Vindictive," "damaging to American citizenship," and "hurtful to the colored race," were some of his charges against the book. Joseph Prince Loud, a Boston architect, who witnessed the photoplay in New York, criticised the activities of the "Klu Klux Klan" and other illicit bodies of the South after the civil war, which are portrayed in the picture.

Others who spoke in opposition to the film were William Munroe Trotter, editor of the Guardian, and Dr. Francis H. Rowley of the M. S. P. C. A.

Defends Film.

John F. Cusick, attorney for the photoplay company, said the picture demonstrates to the public what they are now enjoying in the way of civilization as compared with that period immediately following the civil war. He produced the official report of the national board of censorship, which read:

"Educational value, excellent; artistic value, excellent; entertainment value, excellent; moral effect, good." This, Cusick said, is the highest rating given by the national board for a production. The report of the board, the attorney said, also read: "Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion-picture productions." Continuing, Cusick said:

"The first production of this photoplay was in the White House, before President Wilson and the members of his cabinet. They declared it wonderful." At these words the hissing began, and it was more than a minute before order was restored. Upon the statement of Cusick that the supreme court judges and representatives of the press had indorsed the picture, the hissing was resumed.

After asserting that the greatest "villains" in "The Birth of a Nation" were whites, Cusick introduced David W. Griffith, who wrote the scenario and produced the play. He produced letters from Catholic clergymen and other prominent members of the cloth, and instructors in New York, in which the photoplay was praised, and he, personally, commended for his work.

Upon being asked by the mayor if he would eliminate the scene showing Gus, the Negro, pursuing the white girl, he said he would if it were insisted upon. The mayor then said he did not want to make political capital out of the affair, and decided that the picture should be produced in its original form at a trial performance Friday night. He said he would have the official censors present, and if it was determined that the photoplay violated the law it would be stopped. Concluding, he said:

"You people have stated your case. You have introduced no evidence that I could use in stopping at least one performance."

"BIRTH OF NATION" TO BE SHOWN

Mayor Refuses to Stop Photo Play

After offering to use his influence for the elimination of a scene in the photo play "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be produced at the Tremont Theatre, Mayor Curley yesterday brought the hearing on the petition of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People that the production be disallowed, to an abrupt close, with the declaration that he would not interfere with the production.

"I shall allow the play to proceed and the municipal censor and a representative of the police commissioner may pass upon its merits," said the Mayor. "The hearing is adjourned." He then abruptly left the room.

HISS NAME OF WILSON

A feature of the hearing was the wave of hissing that swept through the crowd of more than two hundred people, mostly colored, as the name of President Wilson was mentioned. The incident occurred as John F. Cusick, counsel for the theatre, told the play's having been seen and approved by the President and his cabinet at the White House.

Continued on Page 7—Fourth Col.

Continued From First Page

Among those who appeared in favor of the petition were: Moorfield Storey, president of the association; Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church; Joseph P. Loud, a Boston architect; Dr. Francis Rowley, the Rev. M. W. Thornton of the Equal Rights League; B. R. Wilson, and Munro Trotter.

Butler Wilson, counsel for the association, was the first speaker. After declaring that the play tends to excite hatred for the colored people and that "the whole play is suggestive of sensual excesses and an offence against common decency," he read letters from Jane Addams, Dr. Stephen A. Wise and other prominent sociologists, all of whom condemned the play. He then introduced Miss Mary White Ovington.

Scores Gowns of Women

She declared that the play was offensive to common decency, especially denouncing the "sensual and bestial expressions upon the faces of the negro villians in the play and the decollete gowns of the women." The Mayor asked the witness if it were not true that the women of high society wear very low-necked dresses in fashionable hotels. Miss Ovington said that it is true, but that they don't wear the bestial expressions on their faces that are seen in the play.

Witness said that the play shows only the depraved types of the negro race, and is therefore liable to incite race hatred. The Mayor showed some of his old-time form as a Shakesperian scholar by asking the witness if she thought that the murders of Macbeth incited feeling against the white race. He also said that he would not [illegible] preventing the production [illegible] chant of Venice" because [illegible] on Shylock's face.

"So far," said he, "no [illegible] me the grounds upon which I [illegible] under the statutes to prevent [illegible] What your imaginations tell you [illegible] sufficient. You imagine that [illegible] wishes to attack a white girl [illegible] he chases her through a wood until [illegible] hurls herself from a cliff. That [illegible] sufficient grounds for me to [illegible] the production of the play." He [illegible] gave instances of plays that [illegible] closed up, showing the grounds [illegible] which he could act.

Moorfield Storey, the next speaker [illegible] the petitioners, said: "The play [illegible] founded upon the book, 'The Cl[illegible] man,' and is advertised as such. [illegible] a political attempt to discredit the [illegible] gro race. It is bestial, low, and [illegible] incite race hatred. You should [illegible] to it as you would object if [illegible] were slandered thus. It is settin[illegible] against race." The Mayor [illegible] cited instances from the plays [illegible] Shakespeare in which were depi[illegible] abuses in the Episcopal Church [illegible] said that he had never heard that [illegible] church objected to their production.

Mr. Storey said that if the play [illegible] through the country the white peo[illegible] who see it will want to kill every colored man in the United States. [illegible] said, in answer to a question put [illegible] the Mayor, that he had never seen [illegible] play. "According to you," said Ma[illegible] Curley, "the production of almost ev[illegible] comedy on the stage should be [illegible] hibited because of the caricatures [illegible] the Irish, the Dutch, the Germans [illegible] the Jews."

"There is no effort to discredit the [illegible] races in these comedies," replied [illegible] Storey. The effect of this play is [illegible] discredit the colored race." The Mayor [illegible] at this point started to say somethi[illegible] and was interrupted by Mr. Storey, [illegible] asked Mr. Storey's permission to speak. "Go ahead if you represent the other side," was the reply. "I don't represent any side," replied the Mayor.

Dr. Alexander Mann, the next speaker, said that he had not seen the play, but that he had heard that it was pernicious in its effect. He urged the Mayor not to stick too closely to the letter of the law in [illegible] duction.

Joseph P. Loud said that he had seen the play and that the writer had made to appear as perfect men as that the negroes had been made to appear as beasts. He said that the scene in which a negro chases a white girl up a hill until she throws herself from a precipice to escape from his embrace was "horrible." He commented on the lack of attire worn by some of the male characters in the play. The Mayor said that he, also, had objectionable features that were presented at the hearing, such as the chase of the white girl by the negro. He offered at this point that scene be struck out of the production. He then read a letter from the Rev. Thomas E. Greene protesting the play.

Munroe Trotter was the next speaker. He delivered an impassioned plea to the Mayor to prevent the play being produced.

Mr. Cusick, counsel for the theatre, said that the play is based on historical fact, and that any attempt made to ridicule the negro race. He said that the Negro of Congress had endorsed the picture, that there are as many negroes in the play as there are whites, and that President Wilson and his cabinet had seen and endorsed the picture. It was at this point that the hissing occurred. He then introduced David W. Griffith, the author.

Mr. Griffith defended the right of movies to depict history, and said that the play did just that.

Journal (Boston)
April 5, 1915

Optical experts are the latest innovation in the theatre. They have been brought over from New York to help prepare the way for the engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," the big photo-play billed to come to the Tremont this week. Here is the official word on the novel subject.

"The experts have measured to fractions of an inch the exact distance required for perfect focussing. They have likewise selected by means of eye-tests those locations in the house which will afford an optometrically perfect view of the film spectacle. Such seats are in the centre and rear of the ground floor and command $2 prices. Never before in the history of the theatre has minute scientific adjustment of this sort been attempted."

GLOBE
Boston, Mass.
APR 6 1915

"The Birth of a Nation."

David W. Griffith, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," has arrived in Boston and will personally oversee the opening performances of the great historical and dramatic spectacle at the Tremont Theatre. There will be a private view of the work to invited guests Friday evening, but the first public representations will be given Saturday matinee and night.

Preparations for the premier are busying a large force of mechanics, stage carpenters, camera men, costumers and directors of supernumeraries. "The Birth of a Nation" combines film spectacle, music and stage effects and tells a romantic tale of Civil War and reconstruction times. The scope of action is vast and intermingled with the love interest is the National theme of a great people reborn through the stress and struggle of civil strife.

GLOBE
Boston, Mass.
APR 8 19

Boston Christ. Science Monitor
April 6, 1915.

THEATER NOTES

A benefit performance of "Balaustion's Euripides," a Greek play dramatized by Helen Archibald Clarke and based on Browning's "Blaustion's Adventure" and "Aristophanes' Apology," is to be given by the Boston Browning Society at the Plymouth theater Tuesday afternoon, April 20. The play will be produced and staged by Livingston Platt, assisted by William C. Willson. The proceeds are to go to the Women's Peace party and the unemployed of Boston.

In obedience to an order issued by Mayor Curley, the motion picture men who would present the Bosworth film, "Hypocrites," in Boston, are now searching for an artist who can drape the woodland nymphs appearing in several thousand feet of the film with garments of paint. The mayor has declared that unless this is done, the pictures cannot be shown in this city.

Mayor Curley has also declared that he will not allow motion pictures of the Willard-Johnson fight to be shown here, on the ground that it "degrades public [illegible] "Tomorrow the mayor is to [illegible] hearing on the film entitled [illegible] Nation," which is booked [illegible] here beginning Saturday.

Herald
Northampton Mass
Apr. 8, 1915

BOSTON TO SEE "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Mayor Curley Refuses to Put His Ban on the Big Photoplay

BOSTON, April 5.—After offering to use his influence for the elimination of a scene in the Photo play "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be produced at the Tremont theater, Mayor Curley today brought the hearing on the petition of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People that the production be disallowed, to an abrupt close, with the declaration that he would not interfere with the production.

"I shall allow the play to proceed and the municipal censor and a representative of the police commissioner may pass upon its merits," said the Mayor. "The hearing is adjourned." He then abruptly left the room.

CENSORS TO PASS ON IT

Representatives of the Mayor and Police Commissioner to See "The Birth of a Nation."

Whether the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation," scheduled to open here Saturday afternoon but against which objections have been made by many colored citizens on the ground that it is a libel on their race and will incite race hatred, will depend on the opinions of the municipal censors after they attend a special invitation performance tomorrow night.

It is booked to open in the Tremont Theatre and the special performance tomorrow was arranged after a public hearing in protest given by Mayor Curley yesterday. Most of the several hundred persons present were colored.

The Mayor said he had received a promise from David W. Griffith, author of the scenario, to cut from the film any part which the Mayor deemed objectionable. The feature to which remonstrants made the strongest objection was that showing a colored man pursuing a white girl and she jumping off a cliff.

The photo-play is based on events of the reconstruction period. Mr. Griffith and his attorney, John F. Cusick, declared that it was based on historical facts. Moorfield Storey, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Rev. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity, Dr. Francis H. Rowley, J. P. Loud, Miss Mary White Ovington of New York, Rev. M. W. Thornton and W. M. Trotter, some of whom had [illegible] the films, argued that the play is [illegible] ed on a book alleged to be unfair to [illegible] negro race.

Mr Cusick declared the films had been approved by the National censors, that it has been [illegible] ented in the White [illegible] the approval

BOSTON (Mass.) RE

Tremont T

"The Birth of a Nati[illegible] moving picture [illegible] For the first time in [illegible] American stage playgo[illegible] seat to see a motion pi[illegible] united in the expressio[illegible] is well worthy of the [illegible] prices that has prevail[illegible] priced dramatic offeri[illegible] stars.

"The Birth of a Nat[illegible] entirely new in the moti[illegible] and has aroused the gre[illegible] interest among amusement[illegible] classes. Boston is fortunate[illegible] ing able to be the second cit[illegible] try to see this notable wo[illegible] be given at the Tremont [illegible] ning next Saturday afterno[illegible] April 10.

Are You on the Way to Health?

Byron Tyler, located at [illegible] street, Kansas City, Mo., [illegible] a guide to health in w[illegible] how he has lived 75 years [illegible] without an ache, a pain, [illegible] shows how this kind of [illegible] constipation, biliousness, [illegible] obesity, rheumatism, colds [illegible] other ills. Invaluable [illegible] and nursing mothers. A [illegible] using this book free, any [illegible] copy should send their [illegible] dress at once.

TRAVELER & EV
Boston, Mass.
PR 1915
ON (Mass.) JOURNAL
JOURNAL
Boston, Mass.
APR 8 1915

NEGROES HISS WILSON'S NAME

Protest Production of "Birth of a Nation" Film Here—Mayor to Send Censor.

President Woodrow Wilson and his cabinet were hissed for more than a minute by 200 negro citizens of Boston yesterday afternoon in the old aldermanic chamber at City Hall, when it was brought out by Lawyer John F. Cusick that the chief executive and his advisers had viewed the first performance of the feature moving picture film, "The Birth of a Nation," in the East Room at the White House and were much pleased with it.

Mayor Curley, after hearing all the speakers, decided that the picture could have at least one performance, but would be viewed by Official Censor Casey and the police department censor.

COMMENDED BY SUPREME COURT JUDGES

A few minutes later evidence was introduced to show that the same photo-play had been commended by the chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, other members of this distinguished body, more than ten United States senators and several representatives, at a private exhibition at the National Press Club, Washington. Again the hissing started, and Patrolman Dougherty and Leahy had to quiet the crowd, while the mayor pounded with his gavel for order.

The demonstration occurred at the hearing given representatives of the film, "The Birth of a Nation," which is now being exhibited in New York, and which will be shown at the Tremont Theatre next Saturday afternoon. Some of Boston's most prominent clergymen and citizens appeared against the production, and requested the mayor not to allow the pictures to be shown, saying it would be a detriment to the negro race, causing race feeling and hatred. Only three of those present, two men and one woman, had seen the pictures. The objections were based almost wholly on three scenes said to appear in this film.

Object to Chase

The first objected to, according to Butler R. Wilson, who handled the case for the protestants, is where a negro called "Gus" is seen chasing a young white girl up a cliff. At the end she throws herself over to escape the negro's clutches.

The second scene, to which objection is raised, is that of a negro lieutenant governor in the South, who likes a young white girl to a chair and says her because she will not marry him.

(Continued From First Page.)

ice,' which is probably one of the best of Shakespeare's plays," continued the mayor. "In that you have seen Shylock. Don't you think the Jews have as much right to protest this playing as you have to oppose the moving picture of the negro. Was not the expression on Shylock's face more horrible than the face of this 'Gus' in the picture?"

"No, the face of 'Gus' was much more horrible," replied Miss Ovington.

To Save Daughter

The mayor explained that the scene where the father was aiming at the daughter's head with a pistol was to protect her from immorality. One of the opponents mentioned the fact that a negro was flogged. The mayor came back with the fact that even now in the State of Delaware men are flogged, sometimes for petty larceny. He also stated that "Richelieh" was played, and that, as he understood from the opponents of the film, it was more immoral. The mayor has not yet seen the picture nor read the manuscript.

"In 'Richelieu' the Cardinal declares, before everybody, his intentions of doing an immoral act. This play has never been stopped. Still you want this moving picture stopped, and so far you have not produced evidence that it is indecent nor immoral," said the mayor.

Moorfield Storey arraigned the mayor, the mayor and the people who stood for the picture.

"This picture is for political purposes. It is to discredit the negro all over the country," he said.

The mayor interposed and said that the English could enter just such a protest against Shakespeare's "Henry III." He then read a letter from an Episcopal clergyman, who said the moving picture was wonderful. Mr. Storey then said that if the priests and the priesthood were portrayed in the way this film is alleged to portray the colored race, he would have plenty of supporters among the population of Boston to suppress it.

Arraigns "The Clansman"

The Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church, arraigned the book, "The Clansman," from which the play is taken, calling it "vindictive," "damaging to American citizenship" and "hurtful to the colored race." He was followed by Joseph Prince Loud, a Boston architect, who saw the film in New York. Loud criticized the display of the activities of the "Klu Klux Klan" and other [illegible] bodies in the South, which are portrayed [illegible] accurately. [illegible] champion. [illegible] negroes in [illegible]

Wilson also added that the young woman was last seen being taken into an adjoining bedroom. The third objection was to a scene during the Civil War, when a father and mother and young white daughter, together with two Union soldiers, are holding a lone farm house against a horde of negroes. The final scene shows the father holding a pistol against the young girl's head as the house is stormed by the negroes.

Before any of the witnesses were heard, the mayor read the statutes which state that if a play, film, production or any such form of amusement is indecent, immoral or tending to corrupt the public morals, the mayor, with the approval of the police commissioner, may censor the production, and then, if both find it objectionable, the mayor may forbid its production.

Heard Negroes Denounced

Miss Mary White Ovington of New York, a settlement worker, was the first opponent called. She said she had seen the play twice and had heard members of the audience after the show say, "I would like to kill every nigger," and "I would like to sweep every nigger off the earth." She also said: "Why, the colored women in the pictures are shown in low gowns, and drink champagne."

"Did you ever see anything like this in the so-called 'high society?'" asked the Mayor.

"I never saw much society," said Miss Ovington, "but the expressions on the faces of these people are awful."

"Do you know any Shakespeare?" asked the mayor. "You have seen, then, where Lady Macbeth commits murder, and her husband's bloody hands. Was there not an awful expression on her face at the time?" Miss Ovington contended that it was not as horrible as Gus'."

"You have seen the 'Merchant of Ven-

(Continued on Page 5—Column 4)

corridor near the mayor's office. The two police officers and the mayor held up their hands, and then the mayor rapped for order.

Attorney Cusick looked up at the mayor and said with a smile: "To think that this would happen in the good old Democratic cit yof Boston." The mayor laughed and added: "And a non-partizan mayor in the chair."

Cusick continued: "Then the picture was produced at the National Press Club, at Washington, to which practically all of the senators, representatives and big men of the country belong. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was the host and his colleagues, as well as ten senators and a number of congressmen, were present. All declared that the picture was wonderful and educational." Again the hissing broke out.

Commended by Priest

Cusick then stated that the biggest "villains" in the photo-play were white men, and that only two out of six of the "villains" were colored. He then introduced David W. Griffith, who wrote the scenario. Later it was stated that this photo-play has netted him $200,000. Griffith told of the play, and stated that protestations like yesterday's would mean that the Indians could protest moving pictures, for in many Western pictures they are shown killing white men. He read a letter from a Catholic priest connected with the Columbiad, the official Knights of Columbus paper, commending him on the play. Also three letters from Catholic clergy in New York, received Monday, wishing to take the children of their parish schools to see the production in New York; also six letters received last week from principals of New York schools, who praised the play, and wanted to take their scholars to see it.

On being asked by the mayor if he would eliminate the scene where the negro "Gus" is seen chasing the white girl up the cliff, off which she throws herself, he said he would if the mayor wished it, after having the film reviewed by the official censor. The mayor then said:

"My power is limited in this matter. I do not want to make political capital out of it, and I do not want to hurt a legitimate firm doing business. You people seem to want everything pertaining to the negro cut out of this picture. Are there not good negroes and bad? Are there not bad whites as well as good? Do you want the assassination of Lincoln cut out? Why, the white people of the country would protest that. You must remember that history cannot be denied."

At this point William M. Trotter interrupted, and stated that the colored voters had supported the mayor at election. The mayor paused a moment. "This photo-play will be produced," he said. "I will have the official censor of the municipality there, and I will notify the police commissioner of the City of Boston to have his censor present. If this film violates the law it will be stopped. I shall not take any hand in the matter. You people have stated your case. You have introduced no evidence that I could use in stopping at least one performauce."

John B. Schoeffel of the Tremont Theatre told a Journal reporter after the hearing that the first production of the photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," will be given there next day afternoon. Henry MacMahon, business manager for the film [illegible] also appeared at the hearing, [illegible] of these men spoke.

"This can be seen any night in any first-class hotel in Boston," said the mayor.

William Munroe Trotter, editor of a paper published in the interests of the colored race, whom the President asserts insulted him in Washington, was the next speaker. He gave a lengthy and lurid speech, telling how he had supported Curley for mayor, and expected that Curley would put the ban on the show. He said, "I'm 43 years old and ought to be some judge." After him came Dr. Francis H. Rowley of the M. S. P. C. A. This ended the opposition. John F. Cusick, attorney for the photo play company, stated that although more than 200 were present in opposition, only two men and one woman had seen the picture. He also asserted that the author of "The Clansman" was not responsible for the picture, but David W. Griffith, who later testified. He said the play shows the people what they are now enjoying in contrast to the past.

Praised by Censorship Board

"Here is the official report of the National Board of Censorship," said Cusick, handing it to the mayor. "This report reads: 'Educational value—excellent; artistic value, excellent; entertainment value, excellent; moral effect good. This is the highest percentage given by this board for a production. It adds the opinion of the board. 'further comment.' This reads: 'Educationally, dramatically and artistically this should prove a great step forward in motion picture productions.' This is the opinion of the government censors.

"The first production of this play was in the East Room of the White House, before President Wilson and the members of his Cabinet. They declared it wonderful." At this point practically every negro in the chamber was hissing loudly. The crowd was so big that persons were sitting on window sills, standing up around the walls, and stretching out into the big corridor near the mayor's office.

WATERTOWN (Mass.) ENTERPRISE
APRIL 9, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION."

D. W. Griffith's Famous Spectacle Opens at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, April 10.

Exactly fifty years after the great events at the close of the Civil War of which it treats, D. W. Griffith's mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is to be presented at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, opening Saturday matinee, April 10. A half century ago occured the Appomatox surrender, the Union triumph and the awful tragedy of Lincoln's death—scenes Mr. Griffith believes he has faithfully and reverently reproduced in this historical film epic. The filming of the great picture occupied eight months and enlisted the services of 18,000 people. Three thousand horses were used in the cavalry scenes.

This story of the national re-birth is interwoven with a love-romance of the most stirring nature. The tale begins with the early days of slavery in this country, takes up the causes of the Civil War and its progress and conclusion, then in the second part deals with Reconstruction and the struggles over the carpetbaggers in the South. Comedy, Tragedy, Romance, Spectacle, Domestic Drama are each presented by turns in the 5,000 scenes of the production. The work is accompanied by a full score of symphonic music rendered by an orchestra of 40 players. The film play has created a tremendous sensation in New [illegible] and Boston is the second city to [illegible] come it. The prices range [illegible] to $2.00 evenings and [illegible]

(Mass.) AMERICAN
APRIL 7, 1915

MAE MARSH, who captivates as Flora in great film spectacle.

MAE MARSH REAL PRODIGY OF FILMS

Miss Mae Marsh, who will be seen as the captivating little Flora in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre beginning Saturday, is a prodigy of filmdom.

The young girl, who lives near Los Angeles, met so many rebuffs at first that she almost gave up hope of a stage career. A small job at spear-holding with the "merry, merry" was at last promised her. While awaiting this, she decided one day to sneak behind "big sister" to the motion picture studio where the latter was employed. The tall director, Mr. Griffith, saw the young stranger and asked her whether she wanted to act. Everybody laughed.

Griffith was in earnest, however. He saw under the freckles a visage born to comedy and tragedy, the high lights and deep shadows of feeling. He sensed also a temperament of electrical quality. Under his tutoring she lost some of the awkardness and kept the rest for "slavey" parts. Fine frocks made a wonderful difference. The other actors found that Mae Marsh, with equal facility, could queen it in a palace or play a part in a kitchen.

This chameleon quality led the director to entrust her with important characters. Lately he has been using her in the very greatest emotional roles. Everybody in New York, when "The Birth of a Nation" was produced there, felt that the biggest individual hit—with the possible exception of Henry Walthall, playing the hero—had been achieved by Mae Marsh.

POST
Boston, Mass.
APR 9 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Today is the 50th anniversary of General Robert E. Lee's surrender to General U. S. Grant at Appomattox Court House, and it has been selected for the first performance in Boston of D. W. Griffith's war epic, "The Birth of a Nation," in which this historic scene is shown. The performance this evening is for invited guests only, the first public representations at the Tremont Theatre taking place tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr. Griffith has reproduced every detail, in his motion picture, of the great event celebrated today. The room in which the document is signed is a facsimile of the actual Wilmer-McLean house interior at Appomattox. Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye, in the roles of Grant and Lee respectively bear a marked resemblance to the great generals. The costuming is exact—Grant in fatigue clothes, dusty and travel-stained, and Lee, the vanquished, scrupulously arrayed in full dress.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT
Boston, Mass.
APR 8 1915

Passed by the Mayor

The mayor made short work yesterday, at a hearing at the City Hall, of the protests of sundry colored persons and their partisans, against the representation of the filmed spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." By sharp questioning he elicited the fact that several of the protestants had never seen the pictures about which they were affirming so confidently; pointed out that many pieces of the theatre set races, institutions and the like in an unfavorable light; and reminded the company that the statutes gave him no authority to suppress plays or pictures, because one or another believed them a misrepresentation or found them unpleasant. Throughout, Mr. Curley, as he can be, was shrewd in question and quick-witted and sensible in comment. Thus, "The Birth of a Nation" bids fair to run its normal course in Boston as a notable spectacle for the screen.

GLOBE
Boston, Mass.
APR 9 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION."

Private Presentation of the Much Discussed Picture Play at the Tremont Tonight.

Today, the 50th anniversary of Gen Lee's surrender to Gen Grant at Appomattox, has been selected for the first performance in Boston of D. W. Griffith's motion picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," in which this historic scene is shown. The performance this evening is for invited guests only, the first public presentations at the Tremont Theatre taking place tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr Griffith is said to have reproduced every detail of the great event. The room in which the document is signed is a facsimile of the actual Wilmer-McLean house interior at Appomattox. Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye, in the roles of Grant and Lee respectively, bear a marked resemblance to the great generals. The costuming is exact—Grant in fatigue clothes, dusty and travel-stained, and Lee, the vanquished, scrupulously arrayed in full dress.

Mayor C[illegible] he will not allow [illegible] Willard-Johnson fight to be [illegible] on the ground that it "degrades public [illegible]. Tomorrow the mayor is to [illegible] public hearing on the film entitled "[illegible]rth of a Nation," which is booked [illegible] here beginning Saturday.

POST
BOSTON (Mass.) JOURNAL
APRIL [illegible] 1915

TO IMPERSONATE A SOUTHERN CHARM[illegible]

MIRIAM COOPER
Who will appear in the film spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Tremont Theatre.

Here is a missive introducing Miriam Cooper, who impersonates Margaret Cameron, a Southern charmer, in "The Birth of a Nation," the film spectacle which is to be seen here for the first time at the Tremont Theatre next Saturday afternoon:

"David W. Griffith, the famous motion picture director, who was anxious to get an ideal type for the role of Margaret Cameron in his epic film, 'The Birth of a Nation,' selected Miss Miriam Cooper for the part from among nearly 200 applicants. He sought an 'old-fashioned' Southern belle, not the pert, vivacious miss, but the girl of aristocratic traditions who maintains poise and dignity at all times.

"Miss Cooper by descent is a Carroll of Carrollton, Md., her ancestor, Charles Carroll, having been a signer of the Declaration of Independence. All her film training has been under Mr. Griffith's direction. A good part of her availability is due to what the technician calls her wonderful 'inset eyes.'

"This means the young woman's orbs are so perfect that they can be photographed on full screen of 36 feet square showing nothing but the eyes. In such 'close-up' photography, exhibiting minute details of expression, Griffith is said to be without a peer. On the director's return to California this summer Miss Cooper is to be starred in a new picture."

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
APRIL 9, 1915

'BIRTH OF NATION' OPENS ON LEE DATE

Today's fiftieth anniversary of General Robert E. Lee's surrender to General U. S. Grant at Appomattox has been fittingly selected for the first performance in Boston of D. W. Griffith's war epic, "The Birth of a Nation," in which this historic scene is shown. The performance this evening is for invited guests only, the first public representations at the Tremont Theatre taking place tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr. Griffith has reproduced every detail of his motion picture of the great event celebrated today. The room in which the document is signed is a facsimile of the actual Wilmer-McLean house interior at Appomattox. Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye in the roles of Grant and Lee respectively bear a marked resemblance to the great generals. The costuming is exact—Grant in fatigue clothes, dusty and travel-stained, and Lee, the vanquished, scrupulously arrayed in full dress.

General Lee signed the surrender papers by means of quill and ink-stand he had borrowed from a young officer's kit, for as it happened there were no writing materials in the Wilmer-McLean home. This historic fact is for the first time brought out by Mr. Griffith in his play.

Lee then handed the [illegible] an aide who placed [illegible] and the municipal two-man [illegible] sentative of the police commissioner may pass upon its 'merits,'" said the [illegible] adjourned." [illegible] was eight months in taking [illegible] required 18,000

Boston Worcester. Mass
April 10, 1915

Plaza Theater

A star in a play that has caused talk from the Atlantic to the Pacific, Henry Walthal in the space of a year has taken a prominent place in the "movie" world. The first picture spoken of is "The Birth of a Nation," which Mayor Curley commended in the face of protest the past week. It is not exaggeration to say that the presence of Walthal in the picture had a deal to do with its tremendous success.

From American
Lawrence, Mass.
APR 7 1915

"The Birth of a Nation," the much discussed moving picture production, which is being exhibited in a Boston theatre, is very objectionable to the colored citizens of the Hub. Mayor Curley has arranged for a public hearing on the question of allowing the exhibition to continue.

Enterprise
Marlboro. Mass
April 9, 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Exactly fifty years after the [illegible] events at the close of the Civil [illegible] of which it treats, D. W. Griffith's [illegible] mighty spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is to be presented at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, at the Saturday matinee, April 10.

[illegible] century ago occurred the Appomattox surrender, the Union Grant[illegible] the awful tragedy of Lincoln's death. In scenes Mr. Griffith believes he has faithfully and reverently reproduced in this historical film epic. The [illegible] ing of the great picture occupied eight months and enlisted the services of 18,000 people. Three thousand horses were used in the cavalry scenes. Richard Harding Davis, the eminent war correspondent, says that in the play, for the first time in stage history, war was presented as it actually is. The Battle of Petersburg, Sherman's march to the sea and other military scenes live before the spectator.

This story of national re-birth is interwoven with love—romance of the most stirring nature. The tale begins with the early days of slavery in this country, takes up the cause of the Civil War and its progress and conclusion, then in the second part deals with Reconstruction and the struggles over the carpetbaggers in the south. Comedy, tragedy, romance, spectacle, domestic drama are each presented by turn in the 5000 scenes of the production. The work is accompanied by a full score of symphonic music rendered by an orchestra of 40 players. The film play has created a tremendous sensation in New York and Boston is the second city to welcome it. The prices range from 25c to $2.00 evenings and Saturday matinees. Mail orders addressed [illegible] inees. Mail orders addressed [illegible] Manager "Birth of Nation" Comp[illegible] Tremont Theatre, Boston, Mass. [illegible] be promptly filled if accompanied [illegible] remittance and stamped self-addr[illegible] envelope.

ON (Mass.) JOURNAL

AMERICAN
Boston, Mass.
APR 10 1915

TRAVELER & EV
Mass.

POST
Boston, Mass.
APR 10 1915

GUESTS SEE "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Civil War Photoplay Is Produced at the Tremont

BY EDWARD H. CROSBY

The widely-discussed photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," was given last evening for the first time in this city at the Tremont Theatre, before an audience of invited guests. No public entertainment has received so much advance comment, on account of race prejudice which it has been predicted might be excited, and serious offence given, and its coming has been awaited with unusual anticipation. The title was probably decided upon for the reason that the subjects treated are chiefly those just prior to and following the Civil war, when the disruption of the country was threatened, and the terrible times through which the South passed in what is known as the "reconstruction period."

SOUTH BEFORE THE WAR

The photoplay opens with a peaceful picture of the South in the ante-bellum days. Here the love story which runs through the entire plot is formulated, but is frequently interrupted by the exciting episodes incident to the outbreak of the conflict. Then follows a series of pictures, showing actual engagements with all the horrors of war graphically portrayed. One action is particularly vivid and is accompanied by the sounds of cannonading and the shouts of the combatants.

The surrender of General Robert E. Lee to General U. S. Grant at Appomattox Court House is a brief but interesting incident, and then comes a singularly-life-like picture of the assassination of President Lincoln at Ford's Theatre, Washington, on the night of April 14, 1865. This, it is said, is the only photographic reproduction of the national tragedy ever given and has been arranged with much attention to detail, taken from the most reliable records available.

The second half of the photoplay, and the one to which the most exceptions have been taken, represents the South when it was under the regime of the so-called carpetbaggers and the lawless actions of the colored people who had not forgotten the wrongs heaped upon them during the days of slavery. This feature is accentuated even to the outrages of some of the negroes which led to the formation of the Ku Klux Klan for the protection of the white residents. Some of the scenes shown are more thrilling and realistic than the actual battle pictures and aroused quite a degree of enthusiasm on the part of the audience. The story terminates somewhat abruptly and the apotheosis to peace was a trifle vague.

As a display of motion picture photography "The Birth of a Nation" is the most remarkable ever witnessed here. Not only were the pictures unusually clear and steady, but the grouping of the various actors and the action was decidedly out of the ordinary. It seems almost incredible that this could have been accomplished in such a realistic manner, and must have required no little skill and even exposure to danger on the part of the players.

A large orchestra played specially composed music and appropriate numbers were sung by a concealed chorus. The atmosphere of the long ago was further enhanced by soldiers in the uniform of both the federal and confederate armies stationed in the lobby, while girls in the raiment of the early sixties gave out the programmes and acted as ushers.

The principal roles were taken by Henry Walthal, Miraim Cooper, Mae Marsh, who, by the way, was especially clever, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aiken, Ralph Lewis, Lillian Gish, George Seigmann, Joseph Henabery as President Lincoln, Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye.

"Birth of a Nation" Enthralling Story

1,500 Guests See History Told on Film

Scenes in "The Birth of a Nation."

Beauty and Magnitude of Griffith's Work Noted at Tremont Theatre Production.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

David W. Griffith has written an epic on a film.

"The Birth of a Nation," which was shown to 1,500 special guests of the management at the Tremont Theatre last night, is a wonderful historical drama and an enthralling human story combined by one of the master dramatists of the generation.

I cannot describe this picture in a half column, or a column. A page would not do it justice. There has been some talk that it contains scenes offensive to negroes.

It deals boldly with the negro excesses during the reconstruction period in the South, which are historical, but most certainly does not reflect upon the race and I am quite sure nobody last night left the theatre feeling inflamed against the respectable and industrious colored population of Boston.

Mr. Griffith came before the curtain at the end of the first act, which deals with the Civil War. A moment before, standing in the wings, he heard a Boston audience burst into applause at the sight of the Stars and Bars waving over a Confederate company marching to war to the tune of "The Bonny Blue Flag." He is a Southern man, and he was so moved by the sympathy of his audience that he could hardly speak. He declared he felt so happy over that applause that he didn't care what became of the picture.

IMPRESSIVE PICTURE.

"The Birth of a Nation" is based upon Thomas Dixon's novel "The Clansman," but of course Griffith has widened and expanded upon the theme. The first part deals with the Civil War period, the second with the Reconstruction and the Ku Klux Klan.

It is impossible to keep from bursting into admiration at the marvelous way the author has woven the great incidents of the war into his film. He is an amazing impressionist; his scenes flash the story at you with never a rest. You sit overpowered by the beauty and the magnitude of the pictures.

You see a whole battlefield covered by thousands of men as from a hilltop, and again you are in the trenches witnessing a bayonet charge in ghastly detail. His battles are stage managed so that all the drama which is contained in a titanic struggle of armies is converged towards you. And the finale of the first part, the death of Lincoln, is also enacted with terrible realism.

The first part is history we know. The second is history less familiar. It deals with the conquered South after the war. We see the Confederate returning to his shattered home, endeavoring to begin again. And then comes the enfranchisement of the negro, the carpet bagger, and negro domination, the most terrible punishment ever inflicted upon a proud white race.

It is shown how the whites, abandoned by their brethren in the North, who never learned the truth, finally recovered their country through the agency of the Ku Klux Klan, that mysterious secret order of ex-Confederates which rode only at night and which disarmed the negroes. This whole story is told more graphically than novelist or dramatist could possibly tell it.

Griffith scenes are like short sentences; no long pictures, no dialogue, no elaborate pantomime. And yet it is extraordinary how you come to love his heroes and heroines, both of the North and South, revealed as they are in these glimpses.

SHOWN PUBLIC TODAY.

The actors of this drama deserve the highest praise. Henry Walthall as the Confederate colonel who founds the Ku Klux; Miriam Cooper and Lillian Gish, the heroines, and Mae Marsh, as the fascinating little girl who leaped to death from a cliff to avoid a negro pursuer; Spottiswoode Aiken, George Seigmann, Josephine Crowell—they are all good. Griffith employs no poor actors. There is a large orchestra which plays admirably chosen music. The picture will be shown to the public today.

BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
APRIL 10, 1915

Tremont Theatre

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with matinee and evening performances today, opens an indefinite engagement at the Tremont Theatre. The first half of the great picture exhibits the salient events of the Civil War, which came to a close at Appomattox just 50 years ago. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the Battl eof Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theatre live before the spectator of the Griffith drama.

In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpetbag regime, is shown in a thrilling story of reconstruction days. The romance of the "Little Confederate Colonel," Ben Cameron, with the Northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist Capt. Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love-interest throughout the story.

The fun and frolic of plantation days as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South, are shown. The great out-of-doors is Mr. Griffith's special field. Great battle scenes and the rides of the clan are staged with thousands of participants. There are 5000 scenes in the spectacle, and (it is estimated) no less than 200,000 interesting historical details.

On the musical side Mr. Griffith attempted something previously unheard of in connection with motion pictures. This was the synchronizing of a complete symphonic score with the appearance of the important character and the enactment of the principal scenes. This instrumental music is played by a large orchestra, and supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes.

EVENING RECORD
ess: Boston, Mass.
APR - 9 191

By F. H. CUSHMAN.

Today's fiftieth anniversary of General Robert E. Lee's surrender to General U. S. Grant at Appomattax has been fittingly selected for the first performance in Boston of D. W. Griffith's war epic, "The Birth of a Nation," in which this historic scene is shown. The performance this evening is for invited guests only, the first public representation at the Tremont Theatre taking place tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr. Griffith has reproduced every detail, in his motion picture, of the great event celebrated today. The room in which the document is signed is a facsimile of the actual Wilmer-McLean house interior at Appomattox. Donald Crisp and Howard Gaye, in the roles of Grant and Lee respectively, bear a marked resemblance to the great generals. The costuming is exact—Grant in fatigue clothes, dusty and travel-stained, and Lee the vanquished, scrupulously arrayed in full dress.

Gen. Lee signed the surrender papers by means of quill and inkstand he had borrowed from a young officer's kit, for as it happened there were no writing materials in the Wilmer-McLean home. This historical fact is for the first time brought out by Mr. Griffith in his play.

TRAVELER & EVE. HERALD
Boston, Mass.
Apr. 10, 1915

"Birth of a Nation"—Tremont

"The Birth of a Nation," bringing forward David W. Griffith's new art of musical spectacle, with matinee and evening performances, opened today at the Tremont Theatre. The first half of the picture exhibits the salient events of the civil war. Lincoln's call for troops, Sherman's march, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender to Grant, and the awful tragedy at Ford's Theatre live before the spectator. In the second half the South's "second uprising," this time against the carpetbag regime, is shown in a thrilling story of Reconstruction days. The romance of the "little Confederate colonel," Ben Cameron, with the northerner, Elsie Stoneman, and that of the Unionist captain, Phil Stoneman, with Margaret Cameron, the South Carolina lassie, maintain two threads of continuous love interest throughout the story. The fun and frolic of plantation days, as well as the heartache and pathos of the stricken South, are shown. The music is by a large orchestra, supplemented by part-singing behind the scenes. Matinees will be given daily throughout the engagement.

Enterprise - Marlboro Mass
Apr. 10, 1915

All the protesting in the world will not avail in injuring so magnificent a work as "The Birth of a Nation. There has been such great progress made by the negro in the past 40 years that it is as though the picture applied to a different race. The production is its own argument and needs no champion.

...lass.) AMERICAN
APRIL 7, 1915

...AUSE FOR MR GRIFFITH

...rowd Greets "Birth of a Nation."

...e Is Elaborate and ...nished in Detail.

...ictures Scenes of the War Period.

... pictures, "The Birth of a ...re given a first presentation ...t the Tremont Theatre last ... packed house sat for nearly ...urs more dazed than anything ... the spectacle.

... the acme of moving picture art, there were few present who did not ... sympathize with D. W. Griffith, genius who conceived and produced ...spectacle, in his nervous emotion ... he came before the curtain when ...rst half had been unrolled.

...ould seem as if Mr Griffith had ...ed to expect that his production ... meet with a hostile reception in ...ty and he showed his feeling when ...nd that this Boston audience ap...ted what he had done.

... work of art it is so wonderful ... beautiful, and so full of life ...roba one of the power of crit... It is true that this was an in...nce, but it was also a critical

...reat work of art, first, last ...he time, and it stamps Mr ... a master artist in whom the ... visual interpretation reaches ...that cannot easily be compre...t one sitting.

...h a man there must be the ...ion of the poet, the creative ... the artist, and with these the ...rchitect, the dramatist ... stage manager who ... the subtleties of stage ...elation to human emo...

...ma.

... simply hurled through ...n American history, the ...during, and after the ...the events which it in...ost as remote to this ...begrosse's pictures of ...Error" in France, or ...n of the "Chouans."

American drama, in ...t of a Nation and the ...a great epoch are the ... vivid human-interest ...ose same passions and ...oved a Nation move the ...l the families—North and ...s center the dramatic in...

...southerner," said Mr Griffith, ...d your applause when 'Dixie' ... I don't care how much you ...now, for I know we are all ... I feel that you appreciate ...

... of the great expense which the ...n involved and that is obvious. ...he war scenes there are not ...undreds, there are thousands, ...night bombardment of Atlanta ...ary involves thousands of peo... that is a scene to be remem... is the scene in which Sher...victorious army is seen in its ... the sea.

...ivil War scenes are done with ...as in the shooting of Lincoln in ...Theatre, and some of the bitter ...arrels during the presentation of ...onstruction era in the South with ...Klux Klan accompaniment.

...remote all this seems, and yet the ...that the Nation passed through ... in the course of its develop...

...e incidents which some people ...ish recalled, but they are only ... the "passing show" in this ...drama.

...s of the '60s.

... not merely the pictures that ...s work its distinction. There ...oral and musical accessories that ...olly adequate and satisfying to ...see. In this way the visual sense ...ictures and the life and the vari...es are all emphasized.

...are prepared for the unusual the ...t you enter the theatre. A young ... evening dress and a silk hat ...your ticket, then two young wom... ...ounced hoopskirts and with long ...e fashion of the 60s—make a ...raceful, minuet bow, and hand ...ograph. Next you come upon ...iers "on guard"—in the Civil ...forms of the North and South, ...ly a young woman in flounced ...t and long curls escorts you to ...t. By that time you are pre...r anything.

...omes a series of pictures show... ...mestic life in the South and ...efore the war—principally in ...th—and a few political episodes ...nation that prepare you for the ...cession of events that are ...t you and take your breath

...e lost in amazement at the ... these hundreds and hundreds ... in this drama, and especially ...incipals. An incident is pre... ...d then instantaneously there ... a sort of vision of the thing ...nd, or in the mind of the ...he drama, and in this way ... consciously made to feel the ...human interest in the large... ...n unfolded.

...nderful achievement—as a ... ...re wasn't the slightest ...nce. The first pe... ...n'll be given this ...

HERALD
...ress: Boston, Mass.
APR 10 1915

PICTURE PLAY ROUSES FURORE

"The Birth of a Nation" Given First Production in This City at the Tremont.

TREMONT THEATRE—"The Birth of a Nation," an historical drama in two acts, founded on Thomas Dixon's story "The Clansman." First performance in Boston.

Last evening the theatre was filled with a curious and expectant audience present by invitation at the first performance in Boston of the much discussed photo play. A picturesque note was struck at the beginning, for young women in crinolines and pantalets, with flowing curls, distributed programs in the lobby, while others acted as ushers with young men in the uniforms of the Blue and the Gray.

"The Birth of a Nation" is a triumph in motion picture photography upon which the producer, Mr. Griffith, and his associates may well plume themselves. As a spectacle it is unrivalled by any other photo-play seen in this city. In no other production has there been such effective concerted action, such extraordinary achievements in perspective.

The picture is much more than an engrossing entertainment. The first part is an eloquent and impassioned protest against the horrors of warfare. The tragic leavetakings, the wrecking of homes, the broken ties, the fearful sights on the battlefield are depicted with relentless fidelity. The flower of young American manhood is shown going forth from northern and southern homes to certain destruction in the terrific conflict which rages with appalling realism. The calamity in Europe is brought home with sickening vividness.

The picture is valuable as a lesson in history, for besides the decisive battles of the civil war, Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Sherman's March to the Sea—one of the finest pictures—President Lincoln in office and on the night of his assassination, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan are among the incidents depicted.

There is, of course, an exciting plot, which concerns the Cameron and Stoneman families, respectively, of the South and North. There is romance and tragedy, and in the second part of the picture thrilling melodrama. Here, Flora Cameron, terrified by Gus, a renegade Negro, jumps from a high cliff to her death. Her brother, Col. Ben Cameron, swears revenge, and this enables the producers to show the activities and ceremonies of the Ku Klux. The play reaches an exciting climax in which the Ku Klux is triumphant and villany is punished.

It was difficult to pick and choose among the most striking pictures. The war scenes, the remarkable representation of Ford's Theatre, with views in turn of the audience, the play in progress and the President's box, the sheeted Ku Klux riders hastening on their deeds, the mob scenes, the happy plantation life which preceded the war, all these excited admiration and wonder.

The cast, too, was excellent, each member was individually striking in facial play and pantomime. Young Ben Cameron was a picturesque hero, and the Misses Marsh, Cooper and Gish rivalled each other in daintiness and girlish charm. Mr. Seigmann was a stalwart and insinuating villain. Mr. Henabery's portrayal of Abraham Lincoln was effective in make up and bearing. Miss Lee provided comic relief.

Mr. Griffith, himself a southerner, spoke briefly and with emotion after the first part. It had been his object and that of his associates to produce something which would equal in eloquence the spoken word, he said.

A feature of the performance was the music, carefully and appropriately selected, while a chorus sang at intervals and heightened the realism of the mob scenes.

The audience was enthusiastic throughout the evening and at the close. The picture, an unusual and admirable entertainment, deserves every success.

POST
BOSTON (Mass.) RECORD
APRIL 10, 1915

MISS MAE MARSH AS FLORA IN "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," AT THE TREMONT THEATRE.

Birth of Nation Is Wonderful Accomplishment

Invited Guests See Much Discussed Photo Play at Tremont Theatre

At the Tremont Theatre last night, before an audience that completely filled the house, at the invitation of the management, the much discussed photo-play, "The Birth of a Nation," was given its first exhibition in Boston.

It should be stated at once, that the reviewer was in no sense a censor of the film; and has no intention of going into the ethics of the play, and is prepared to accept as historically accurate the events as pictured on the screen. Starting with that in mind, what is the judgment of the court as to the picture itself? It was not necessary for the jury to leave their seats in order to bring in this verdict:

Nothing approaching "The Birth of a Nation," as a picture show, has been seen in Boston, as far as the judgment of the reviewer goes. It is a magnificent spectacle, wonderful in its scope, dramatic to a degree in its construction, faithful in detail and convincing in its argument. Those who may feel inclined to take offense at alleged offenses of half a century ago, and find it difficult to square such offenses with latter day conditions, should bear in mind that the traitor Arnold, of the Revolution, was the same Arnold who, as the daring "rider of the Black Horse" was the hero of the siege of Quebec.

Beginning with the troublous times just preceding the Civil War, "The Birth of a Nation" takes us through that awful struggle, culminating in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, into and through the reconstruction period, which has been classed by many as the darkest period of United States history, to a peaceful and logical solution of the problems involved.

The battle scenes of the war, the death of the martyred Lincoln, the formation of the "Klu Klux Klan," its night ridings and its swift vengeance, are pictured in a way that even at this late day makes us wonder at the possibilities of the motion photo, and compels admiration for the mind that could conceive such a wonderful scenario and for the will that could master the difficulties of its staging.

A wonderful accomplishment.

Gazette
Worcester, Mass.
4-10-15

Royal

Pictures

"The Birth of a Nation" David W. Griffith's great spectacle, gave Miss Mae Marsh her greatest opportunity to display her talents as a dramatic actress. Now comes "The Outcast" a Mutual Master-picture with Miss Marsh as its star. This picture is to be shown at the Royal, Monday and Tuesday. The story is by Hon. Thomas Nelson Page, the United States Ambassador to Italy, and its picturization is in four reels. It is a vital subject, handled in a masterly fashion. A girl of the slums earning her living by dancing is persecuted by a man who has evil intentions. In a struggle between the villain and Robert Harron as the hero, the aggressor's pistol is discharged and he dies. The girl is accused of the deed. At the trial, it is proven that the stern judge who presides, is the father of the accused girl, and that he deserted her mother many years before. In the final scenes the girl wins her freedom. "Ancestry," a two-reel "American" feature with Miss Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen, also "The First Born," a moral lesson beautifully told, as well as a Keystone comedy have places on the bill.

Wednesday and Thursday "The Devil" in five reels is the star feature and is said to be replete with new and novel effects. The devil assuming human form, seeks to find a human being who cannot be tempted. He appears and disappears at will, and in the final scenes presides over "Hades." This scene is heralded as one of the biggest and most impressive shown on a screen. Miss Bessie Barriscale and Edward Connelly are the stars. For Friday and Saturday a mixed feature program has been prepared that bristles with excitement and sparkles with fun. Several special releases have been booked which assure a program of satisfying quality and quantity. A different Keystone comedy is a part of every program.

BOSTON (Mass.) ADVERTISER
April 10 1915

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" STUPENDOUS PHOTO-PLAY

Nothing Like It Seen in Boston, Is Verdict of Critics

The first exhibition of the much discussed photo-play, the "Birth of a Nation," was given last evening at the Tremont Theatre before an audience that completely filled the house. The common verdict of those who witnessed the production was that it was one of the most wonderful accomplishments since the photo-play has been adopted as a means of amusement. Brilliantly staged and with the characters portraying so vividly the events of the time intended to be placed before the audience, it was the common verdict that nothing like it had ever been seen in the city before.

Post Worcester, Mass.
April 10 1915

Royal Theater

In "The Outcast," the four-reel Mutual Master-Picture to be exhibited at the Royal Theater Monday and Tuesday, Miss Mae Marsh, star of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," is the star. "The Outcast" is from the pen of the Hon. Thomas Nelson Page, the United States ambassador to Italy, and it portrays the cruelty of human justice and man-made laws.

On Wednesday and Thursday another Mutual Master-Picture, "The Devil" is to be shown. The story is the famous play of Franz Molnar, in which a personal "devil" appears in the flesh and seeks to find a human being who cannot be tempted.

For Friday and Saturday a mixed program is to be offered, headed by two multi[reel] features, "His Brother's Keeper" and "Chinatown Mystery."

REVIEW
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
APR 10 1915

BOSTON, MASS.
Boston, Mass., April 9.—THE GLOBE says:—

William Grant Jones, editor of the Boston Budget, died suddenly to-day.

The "Birth of a Nation," was given its first performance here to-night, the Mayor having refused to forbid its production.

...RALD
...oston, Mass.

...RTH OF A NATION,' CIVIL WAR MOVIE, GIVEN AT TREMONT

By SALITA SOLANO.

"The Birth of a Nation" was given at the Tremont Theatre last evening to an audience present by invitation. The film is an historical drama in two parts founded on "The Clansman" by Thomas Dixon. It shows the North and the South at war and the reconstruction period which was the aftermath of the war.

The scenes of "The Birth of a Nation" are magnificently done. Never has there been a photoplay shown in this city which combined such beauty and artistry with such a powerful dramatic appeal and fidelity to details.

A northern home and a southern home are shown before the war. The call to arms comes, and the sons of both houses leave for the front. Battles and battlefields are rolled out in marvellous perspective. The most striking scenes from the four years' war are pictured, including Sherman's march to the sea. Then comes the assassination of President Lincoln, the getting into power of the men who exploited the Negroes, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

Nor is the love element lacking. A northern girl who visits in the South dismisses Col. Ben Cameron, her lover, when she discovers he belongs to the dreaded Ku Klux. She herself is captured by a Mulatto and is rescued by the Ku Klux. The colonel's little sister is pursued to the edge of a cliff by a renegade Negro and throws herself over to escape him.

Then the Negroes are shown inflamed with drink and their newly given power. They taunt the whites, refuse to allow the former men in power to vote and wish to secure "a white South under the heel of a black South."

Objectionable Scenes Eliminated.

It would be evident to the least discerning that the film was created by a man altogether imbued with the Southern viewpoint. It has been said that the story it tells is unfair to the Negro. It is also unfair to the North. Some of the objectionable scenes mentioned at the hearing on Thursday before the mayor have been eliminated. The face of the Negro grimacing at the white girl he is pursuing to her death has been cut out. The later episode of the Mulatto bearing another white girl into a bedroom has also been withdrawn.

In spite of these eliminations, the film is a subtle reflection upon the Negro, inasmuch as it does not show him in his enslaved condition before the war in the true condition of that slavery, nor does it show him after the reconstruction period was over and he began to "grow up."

Fails to Show Cruelty.

The author of this picture would have the audience believe that the southerners were doing the Negroes a favor by supporting them in return for a little work before the war. No whipping posts were shown in the picture, no auction blocks, no brutal overseer, no maltreatment of any sort. On the contrary, we see the "happy cullud folk" dancing and making merry in a two-hour interval for dinner that the author would have us believe was the customary noontime allowance.

And then the contrast after the war when the white carpet baggers descended like devastating locusts upon the wretched and poverty-stricken South. It was then the injustices toward the Southern whites began, and the outrages against white women. But never a word has been said or a picture shown of the crimes of the Southern men against black women—the well-known "shame of the South." The 2,000,000 Mulattoes in the United States can scarcely be accounted for by the crimes of black men against white women.

The Ku Klux are represented as the illegal, yet noble, protectors of the honor of the South. Each is the knightly defender of some wrong done by a northern rascal or a Negro. That they were later destroyed when they became but a band of outlaws, preying upon each other, is not hinted.

D. W. Griffith, who as a director maintains his national reputation as a wizard in the filming of a picture, made a speech at the conclusion of the first part of the film. With a sob in his voice he told of his birthplace and his poverty when he was a boy. On account of the war he was brought up on some sort of corn. One could see the reason for his prejudices at any rate.

In spite of the beauty of "The Birth of a Nation," it tends to revive the memories of old wounds and to increase the prejudice of unthinking whites against the blacks. It is unfortunate that every one who will go to see this photoplay will be unable to separate the true from the false—the chaff from the grain.

As a spectacle it is wonderful, probably the finest example of the moving picture art Boston has ever witnessed. It was most enthusiastically received and will doubtless have a long run. The more the pity that its lesson is so insidious.

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
APRIL 10, 1915
170

FILMED SPECTACLE

"The Birth of a Nation" Shown—Motion Pictures of the Civil War and the Reconstruction Period on a New Scale of Magnitude and Variety—No Cause for Racial Objection

JUDGMENT of "The Birth of a Nation" is based on two factors: the dramatic worth of the film and its historical value. Doubtless it has more of the latter than of the former notwithstanding the very intense moments during the course of the play. As history "The Birth of a Nation" sets the North right concerning some phases of the activities in the South in carpet-bagging days after the war, sets the North right in such a manner as no book could do, as certainly the novel of Thomas Dixon on which the film is based, has never done. Historically also the play reconstructs for the visual eye some of the scenes of fifty years ago that have filled the text books ever since. The surrender of Lee at Appomattox, the assassination of Lincoln, Sherman's march to the sea, the burning of Atlanta move upon the screen as they never moved in print. And in so far as they surpass the written word in vividness they justify the emotional little speech of Mr. D. W. Griffith, the producer, who told the audience during the intermission last night at the Tremont that he had tried to do something out of the ordinary in the realm of moving picture.

From the standpoint of filmed drama the picture scarcely reached the heights it attained historically. Not that it was not very dramatically tense at times; it was. It presented some harrowing scenes of battle, of attack upon defenceless women by bad negroes and worse whites. It pictured death and love, and able actors carried out the illusion. More exactly expressive facial play than that of Miss Mae Marsh could scarcely be imagined. Yet one had seen similar scenes rather too many times in the movies before. The fight in the cabin against overwhelming odds with the "throwback" to show the galloping Ku-Klux riding to the rescue has been one of the mainstays of the movies ever since they became essential to our civilization. The battlefield scenes have been done for us many times before. The first difference between Mr. Griffith's dramatic scenes and those of the films to which we have been accustomed is that Mr. Griffith's production is of greater magnitude. Where three riders have been enough Mr. Griffiths gives us three hundred, and where other pictures have shown riders in this costume or that of the more common sort, Mr. Griffiths has given us the ghostly impressiveness of the white-clad Ku-Klux now riding fast on the hilltops against the red morning and now in the dawn-silvered valley where the still river splashes at their horses' tread. His picture is on a larger scale than any we have seen; it is extremely well arranged with regard to getting the maximum history and drama in an evening's space; it is well photographed with an eye to really impressive spectacle like the far-seen valley down which flies Sherman's interminable army marching to the sea, it is very shrewdly speeded up when the emotions of the audience run hot and fast. And if the "throwback" is abused to flash one from scene of conflict to oncoming rescue, from hospital to home, from any one place to another intimately related to it, it must be admitted that after the early moments of the evening when the scenes are mostly those showing plantation life, that the device does not much confuse the spectator. And further, the worded explanations that appear on the screen to assist the drama are blessedly both brief and pointed.

Last night Boston applauded the Ku-Klux whereat Mr. Griffith publicly and other Southerners privately expressed their gratification. But there was nothing surprising in the expression, for the conflict of the Ku-Klux and the negroes whom they fought to subdue was only the usual movie conflict between the powers of good and evil. As had been expected, nothing in the picture could legitimately call up race hate, however strongly race instincts momentarily were touched. This phase of "The Birth of a Nation" is one that one agitation makes worth mentioning. [illegible] that a picture his[illegible]ccurate[illegible] negroes in [illegible] also

BOSTON (Mass.) TRANSCRIPT
APRIL 10, 1915
170

"The Birth of a Nation" for Filmed Spectacle of the Civil War on a New Scale—The Bills at the Modern and the Bijou

THIS afternoon and this evening begin at the Tremont the exhibitions of the much-heralded and much debated spectacle of the screen, "The Birth of a Nation." They will continue there every afternoon and evening at a scale of prices that approximates those of regular entertainment. The piece is practically a filmed spectacle on a scale that the movies hereabouts have never before known. The earlier reels unroll vividly scenes and incidents from the Civil War—Sherman's march to the sea, the battle of Petersburg, Lee's surrender and the assassination of Lincoln. These are figured on a scale of numbers, diversity and vividness new to motion pictures in America. The second half of the spectacle pictures scenes and incidents in the South during the period of "Reconstruction," the carpet-baggers and the Ku-Klux clan, and ranges from intimate domestic life to turbulent episode in a tumultuous time. Into both the pictures of war-time and Reconstruction are woven the sentimental adventures of a soldier of the North and a woman of the South. Finally the whole spectacle is accompanied by atmospheric and enhancing music, played by a numerous orchestra and synchronized to the progress of the films. Much of this music is built upon the old tunes of the sixties and the seventies. The exhibition, alike in its entirety and diver[illegible] is accounted the present climax o[illegible] movies.

PHOTOPLAY CENSORED BY CURLEY

Parts of "Birth of a Nation" to Be Eliminated

The official censors representing the Mayor and police commissioner have reported that the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," is not obscene or immoral. Mayor Curley, however, has had some portions of the film 'cut out" and many minor changes have been ordered before the p[illegible] can be produced in Boston.

MAYOR'S STATEMENT

In a statement issued yesterday the Mayor said:

"With the desire that the fullest possible measure of justice be accorded the colored citizenship of Boston, I attended the production last evening and today requested the management to eliminate the prefatory statement thrown on the screen at the opening of the production, believing it unfair to the colored citizenship. The statement in question is as follows: 'The bringing of the African to America in the seventeenth century planted the first seed of disunion.' This request was complied with.

"I requested the elimination of a portion of the chase of the white girl by Gus. I further requested that the management eliminate at least five exhibitions of the face of Gus, to which objection had been made. I further requested that the management eliminate at least five exhibitions of the face of "Gus," to which objection had been made. I further request certain scenes, while not immoral or obscene, yet might be offensive to certain of the public, descriptive of the visit of Charles Sumner to the home of Austin Stoneman and his meeting with the mulatto woman there, be eliminated. I further requested that certain scenes between the mulatto woman and Austin Stoneman and between the mulatto woman and Silas Lynch be eliminated.

"I further requested that portions of the reels portraying scenes in the South Carolina House of Representatives wherein a member is shown removing his shoes and the consideration by the said assembly of a motion requiring the member to replace his shoes be eliminated.

"To these requests the management has assented. In addition thereto the changes made in the original films while exhibiting in New York will be in force in Boston."

WOULD BAR PLAY

Mott Hallowell Declares Photo-Play "Birth of a Nation" Slanderous Assassination of a Race

J. Mott Hallowell, former Harvard baseball star, and son of Colonel E. P. Hallowell, who led a colored contingent in the Civil war, last night sent the following letter to Mayor Curley and Police Commissioner O'Meara:

To the Honorable James M. Curley, Mayor; Stephen O'Meara, Police Commissioner:

Dear Sirs—Last evening I witnessed by invitation the pre-public private performance in Boston of the moving picture spectacle entitled "The Birth of a Nation," produced in the Tremont Theatre. Francis Hackett, the theatrical critic of the New Republic, says in his issue of March 20, that the film is "aggressively vicious and defamatory. It is spiritual assassination. It degrades the censors that passed it and the white race that endures it." It was with curiosity that I accepted the invitation of the editor of one of our leading religious weekly papers to be present and give my judgment on the performance.

The performance is misnamed. It should be called "The Assassination of a Race."

The play is in two parts. The first part portrays life before the war, introduces the characters who appear in the love story that is woven into the production; reproduces battle scenes during the war and closes with Lincoln's assassination.

TRAVELER & EV[illegible]

During the [illegible] Picture[illegible] colonel (white [illegible] takes a mas[illegible] charge; Old Glory [illegible] heroically defended (by whites); the colored soldiers' part is a troop of ne[illegible]ro raiders destroying a civilian's house and shooting an old man.

When the war is over we have a representation of appar[illegible]tly drunken negro soldiers in a Southern town; a ludicrous scene of negroes in court; a scene in the Legislature with the negro members leering in a licentious manner at the white women in the gallery; the exceptional male negro in the performance who has any good qualities strung up and whipped by the other negroes; the pursuit of a black beast after a charming, beautiful white girl for the purpose of raping her, which she avoids by throwing herself from a cliff; the death scene of the girl; an attempt by the negro leader to rape a white Congressman's daughter through the mockery of a false marriage, with the girl screaming for help, then gagged and finally taken in the negro's arms and lugged away. Without going into further detail, every beastly, contemptible characteristic is laid upon the black race, and emphasized by contrast with the heroic virtues of the whites, saving and excepting, of course, those few whites who lead the colored devils.

Stirs Race Hatred

A young man who saw the film in New York remarked on coming out of the show house "I'd like to kill every nigger in the country." He was an average young man. It was a natural remark. If the negro race is as represented in this performance I should feel as he does. If this film is allowed to be produced, there are thousands of others who will be taught to feel as he does.

The play was collaborated and is based upon a novel called "The Clansman." It is so advertised. Five years ago a dramatized production of "The Clansman" was produced at a theatre in Boston and was stopped by your predecessor, John F. Fitzgerald. Common decency demands the suppresion of this movie show.

On Friday evening's performance the collaborator stated between the acts that he claimed the same right to give this performance that a historian has to write history. A lie can be told by omission as well as by what is said. Whatever incidents may or may not have happened in reconstruction times the omission of the good and the slanderous exaggeration of individual crimes until the race is confounded with the individual criminal so that an average spectator will say "I'd like to kill every nigger in America" is not history. Would you allow such a rotten history to be used as a text book in our schools? Why then, under the guise of history, allow it to be used as a text for children in our public halls?

Race That Kept Faith

The facts are that during the Civil war when the white men were fighting at the front, the Southern women and children at home were practically defenceless. What race ever kept better faith than did the colored people of the South with those unprotected ones during the war? What soldiers of the North fought more gallantly than the colored regiment decimated before Fort Wagner? What down-trodden race in the same space of time ever made more progress both in education and material prosperity than have the colored people of this country since the close of the Civil war?

If mud-slinging is to be propagated by movies, what is it that has produced the race of mulattos in this country? Not the rape of white girls by colored men. If history is to be taught, let us have history.

The play is a slanderous assassination of a race. What its purpose is I do not know. Probably commercialism, as it is spectacular, and if permitted will draw crowds. Its result will be to increase race hatred. What we need in this country, now above all times, is peace and harmony. We have 10,000,000 colored citizens in our land. They are here to stay. Why let this negro-baiting slanderer of the past come here waving his bloody shirt and stirring up race hatred? We want less of this and more of Christ's "Sermon on the Mount."

Play Public Menace

The play is a public menace and should be suppressed. If you expect our colored population to be law-abiding citizens, the law must give them equal protection with the other races. No movie play which slandered the Irish, or the Catholics, or the Yankees as this play slanders the negro race would be allowed an hour in Boston, and I challenge any person to see this performance and then deny this statement. Why not give fair play to the weaker race as well as to the stronger, a race more sinned against than sinning?

The manager advertises his play by letters of encomium from a few members of the clergy. There are thousands of clergymen and they are not responsible for the tastes of an exceptional few. The minister's calling is a high one and the church, taken as a whole, is a magnificent engine for good. On the other hand, we executed a minister only three years ago.

The great abolitionist, Wendell Phillips, brought his wonderful eloquence to bear for the Irish at a time when they stood in sore need. It takes little imagination to see his shade now looking upon this city governed by a Mayor representing the race for whom he fought. What will he see?

Enterprise. Marlboro
Mass. apr. 10, 15

All the protesting in the world will not avail in injuring so magnificent work as "The Birth of a Nation. There has been such great progress made by the negro in the past 40 years that it is as though the picture appl[illegible] to a different race. The produc[illegible] its own argument and need[illegible] [illegible]ame[illegible]

[illegible] race hatred.

...TED FILM PLAY SEEN AT THE TREMONT

"Birth of a Nation" Pictures Shown to Invited Audience.

FIRST ACT SCENES THE MOST STRIKING

Wonderful Realism in Films Picturing Lincoln and Battlegrounds.

After the first part of "The Birth of a Nation" had been shown to an invited audience at the Tremont Theatre last night the opinion seemed to be unanimous that the films were wonderfully realistic and in this particular respect by far the most impressive ever brought to Boston.

This first part or act introduced the romantic element connecting young Northerners and Southerners, Civil War scenes and the shooting of President Lincoln in Ford's Theatre.

The second part went on with the love story films and made these incidental to the display of scenes illustrating Reconstruction days in the South, with the Klu Klux Klan in the foreground. This part was not so interesting as the first. The subject-matter, barring the love story, was not so appealing, nor were the pictures so entirely worthy of wonder and admiration.

Mayor and Censors Present

In the audience were Mayor Curley and the censors from City Hall and Pemberton square. They were concerned, officially, with the second act films, which depict the aggressive political movements of the negroes and their carpet-bag patrons in the South, and in particular the behavior of Silas Lynch, the negro leader, who tries to force a white girl to marry him, and of Gus, a "renegade" negro, who pursues a little white girl up a cliff and finally threatens her until she leaps

...rical accuracy aside, these later ...cenes are not to be compared with the earlier ones, either in subject or in treatment. The films showing the milk-and-honey days in the old South, the wonderful battle scenes, the White House episodes that reveal the ever-touching nobility of Lincoln, the meeting of Lee and Grant at Appomattox and the tragedy that takes place in the presidential box while the actors on the stage are playing "Our American Cousin" are all tremendously realistic and therefore affecting. It is doubtful whether these scenes, which so deeply touch both the sympathy and the patriotic pride of the public, or which convey so thrilling a sense of the horrors of war, could be so faithfully presented in any other way than the one selected by D. W. Griffith, the genius who conceived and produced "The Birth of a Nation."

A Prodigious Achievement

The pictures, taken as a whole, make up the most extraordinary historical motion cyclorama so far brought forward. It is not Mr. Griffith's fault that the second part is not equal to the first. The fault lies primarily with the subjects.

"The Birth of a Nation" deserves a careful study from an artistic point of view, for it is a prodigious achievement, no mistake, and such a study will be presented later in The Journal. The public exhibition of the pictures will begin at the Tremont this afternoon.

LINCOLN'S ASSASSINATION SHOWN IN "MOVIES"

One of the striking scenes in the photo-spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," which will have its first public performance in Boston at the Tremont Theatre this afternoon.

POST
Boston, Mass.
APR 1 1 1915

Tremont Theatre

David W. Griffith's epoch-making spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was publicly presented for the first time in Boston yesterday afternoon and evening. The Tremont Theatre engagement promises to be the most successful in the history of that playhouse. "The Birth of a Nation," by picture, orchestral music and song, tells the story of a nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters—slavery, the prime cause of the Civil war; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the rebellious States; the big battles and private tragedies of the conflict; the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the President; the harsh radical policy to the prostrate South; the uprising of the clans, and the overthrow of the carpet-bag regime—these great factors and events pass in review before the thrilled spectator.

The love interest is based on the friendships between the Stonemans of Pennsylvania and the Camerons of South Carolina, two families involved in the struggle. Mr. Griffith took most of the scenes in the great out-of-doors, where nature painted the backgrounds and army men directed the mimic campaigns. The notable indoor scenes, like Ford's theatre on the night of Lincoln's death, are exact facsimiles of the originals. Altogether, it is the first time in art-production that history in the large has been presented in living pictures. Of nearly equal importance to the films is the music that interprets it. The latter consists of an elaborate symphonic score arranged by Joseph Carl Briel, after Griffith's suggestions of the musical motifs for the leading characters. It is played by an orchestra of 40 pieces. Vocal music is also provided, the stirring old tunes of long ago dominating fancy and feeling as the historic incidents unfold. Henry Walthall carries superbly the chief heroic role, while among the women the work of Misses Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish and Miriam Cooper stands. Joseph Henabery's President Lincoln, Donald Crisp's General Grant and Howard Gaye's General Lee are among the vivid historical portraitures.

BOSTON (Mass.) AMERICAN
APRIL 11, 1915

A complete symphonic orchestral score, especially written for and synchronized to the pictures, is the decided novelty of a film play at the Tremont Theatre, called "The Birth of a ... The music was amplified and thematically varied by the composer, Joseph Carl Briel, from old-time Southern melodies, many of them hitherto unrecorded. The novelty consists in giving each character a theme, as in grand opera, and in timing the strains accurately to the characters' appearances. The immensity of this labor is due to the fact that each character of note has hundreds of entrances, and there are no less than 5,000 scenes in the "picture." By comparison, even the scoring of a grand opera seems simple. The work was finally accomplished, in a sort however, by Mr. Briel and a large band, or his assistants, and the artistic effect of the drama, and its synchronization are consciously made to ... David W. Griffith, human interest in the ... Nation" produced, is unfolded.

...derful achievement—musical values as ... There wasn't the slightest ... aggregate worth ... one. The first ... be given this ... Willard ... and on the ground ...

...ublic clearing on the film ... "Birth of a Nation," which is booked ... Saturday, ... here beginning ...

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
APRIL 11, 1915

"The Birth of a Nation" Pictured at the Tremont

David W. Griffith's remarkable motion picture production, "The Birth of a Nation," was given its first public presentation in Boston at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon.

"The Birth of a Nation," by picture, orchestral music and song, tells the story of a Nation reborn through the storm and stress of internecine strife. Instead of the four to six scenes of the conventional play, its technique permits of filming literally thousands of scenes and covering a wide range of history and characters.

Slavery, the prime cause of Civil War; Lincoln's call for troops to subdue the rebellious States; the big battles and private tragedies of the conflict; the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomattox; the assassination of the President; the harsh radical policy to the prostrate ... the uprising of the clans, and ... overthrow of the carpetbag regime ... factors and events pass ... review before the ... spectator.

... may ... sented ... of the ... the approv ... Griffith was eight months in taking ... required 18,000 ...

BOSTON (Mass.) POST 1709
APRIL 11, 1915

...sence.

It would seem that the wonders of motion photography would never cease. This is illustrated by "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theatre. No photoplay and very few legitimate dramas have been subjected to so much discussion as has this spectacle, and whatever the outcome it has received a publicity that cannot be measured in value by dollars and cents. I understand that it is the intention of the management of the Tremont to continue "The Birth of a Nation" all summer, and that neither "On Trial" or any other spring attraction will be seen at the Tremont. If all accounts are correct it is a spectacle quite out of the ordinary and possesses many of the elements of longevity.

✦ ✦ ✦ ✦ ✦ ✦

Far be it from me to criticise the authorities of this great and glorious city or to in the slightest degree question their motives, but of late there has been such a marked tendency toward the censorship of dramatic entertainments, more so than ever before in the history of the Boston stage, that the subject is being quite generally discussed. In London there is an official censor appointed, who passes judgment on plays before they are produced. He reads the manuscript, and if there is anything in the text or situations or plot which will cause serious offence, or, in his opinion, be detrimental to public morals, the objectionable features must be eliminated before a production is authorized.

When Gilbert and Sullivan wrote "The Mikado" it was prohibited by the official censor for the reason it might give offence to the Japanese, with which race England was not only on friendly but treaty terms. It was many years before this opera was produced in London or England, and when it was finally given the Japanese neither privately or officially made the slightest objection. The London censor is more or less trained to his task, for if one will pause for a moment to consider what power to apply great financial loss lies in his hands, it is essential that he should be a man of education, discernment and more than ordinary diplomacy and judgment.

✦ ✦ ✦ ✦ ✦ ✦

I think the scheme of an official censor is an excellent one, as we are finite creatures and require the legal hand to keep us in the path of rectitude, for most of us are tempted to open one eye when anything is passing we should not observe. But isn't it the proper thing to have for our moral advisers those whose business is to inform themselves impartially, accurately and intelligently? No reputable theatrical manager wishes to hand out to his patrons any-

... a degrading nature, nor does he desire to have upon his stage a performance which is detrimental to public morals or that will give serious offence to any one, no matter what his race or position in the social strata. A wise unbiased decision on the part of one who was by training capable of judging would never meet with the slightest objection.

BOSTON (Mass.) MORN. GLOBE
APRIL 11, 1915

"BIRTH OF A NATION" APPROVED BY MAYOR

Minor Changes Are Made at His Suggestion.

Censors Find Photo Play Is Not in Any Way a Violation of the Law.

Approval of the photo play, "The Birth of a Nation," has been granted by Mayor Curley, in spite of the objections raised by some colored persons and their sympathizers, on condition that some minor details were eliminated. These eliminations have been made, he says, and the production now has his approval.

The Mayor, in his statement, said:

"The official censor, representing the city of Boston and the censor representing the Police Commissioner of Boston have this day submitted their reports relating to the photo play entitled 'The Birth of a Nation.' Their censor in the conviction that the photo play entitled 'The Birth of a Nation' is not obscene or immoral or tends to injure the morals of the community.'

"With the desire that the fullest possible measure of justice be accorded the colored citizenship of Boston, I attended the production last evening and today granted the management to eliminate the prefatory statement thrown on the screen at the opening of the production, believing it unfair to the colored citizens, which the statement in question is, as follows: 'The bringing of the African to America in the 17th century planted the first seed of dissension.' This request was complied with.

"I requested the elimination of a portion of the scene of the white girl by Gus. I further requested that the management eliminate at least five exhibitions of the face of 'Gus,' to which objection has been made.

"I further requested that certain scenes, while not censored, be observed by the management of the theatre, as offensive to certain of the public, descriptive of the visit of Charles and his meeting with the mulatto woman there, be eliminated. I further requested that certain scenes between the mulatto woman and Austin Stoneham and between the mulatto woman and Silas Lynch be suppressed.

"I further requested that portions of the reels pertaining to scenes in the South Carolina House of Representatives wherein a member is shown removing his shoes and the consideration by the said assembly of a motion requiring the

GLOBE
Boston, Mass.
APR 1 1 1915

The censure of "The Birth of a Nation" has incidentally given rise to a flood of suggestions to David W. Griffith concerning his next picture. In fact one of these—the suggestion of Shakespeare's Holy Grail story—has

1915

RALD

oston, Mass.

APR 1 1 1915

HOTO PLAY, 'BIRTH OF NATION,' ALL RIGHT, SAYS MAYOR

Management Has Agreed to Cut Out Certain Features in the Original,

Mayor Curley announced last night that the photoplay "The Birth of a Nation" would be permitted in Boston, with the elimination at his request of certain scenes which he thinks might be offensive to some of the public. The mayor's statement follows:

"The official censor representing the city of Boston and the censor representing the police commissioner of Boston have this day submitted their reports relative to the photo-play entitled 'The Birth of a Nation.' Both concur in the conclusion that the photoplay entitled 'The Birth of a Nation' is not 'obscene or immoral or tends to injure the morals of the community.'

"Under the statutes, chapter 494 of the acts of 1909, authority to censor all productions is vested in the mayor of Boston and the police commissioner of Boston, and their findings in every case are based upon the reports received by the censors duly appointed to witness productions that from time to time appear.

Preparatory Statement.

"With the desire that the fullest possible measure of justice be accorded the colored citizenship of Boston, I attended the production last evening and today requested the management to eliminate the prefatory statement thrown on the screen at the opening of the production, believing it unfair to the colored citizenship. The statement in question is as follows: 'The bringing of the African to America in the 17th century planted the first seed of disunion.' The request was complied with.

"I requested the elimination of a portion of the chase of the white girl by 'Gus.' I further requested that the management eliminate at least five exhibitions of the face of 'Gus,' to which objection had been made. I further requested that certain scenes, while not immoral or obscene, yet might be offensive to certain of the public, descriptive of the visit of Charles Sumner to the home of Austin Stoneham and his meeting with the mulatto woman there, be eliminated. I further requested that certain scenes between the mulatto woman and Austin Stoneham and between the mulatto woman and Silas Lynch, be eliminated.

Removal of Shoes.

"I further requested that portions of the reels portraying scenes in the South Carolina House of Representatives, wherein a member is shown removing his shoes, and the consideration by the said assembly of a motion requiring the member to replace his shoes, be eliminated.

"To these requests the management have assented. In addition thereto the changes made in the original films while operating in New York will be in force in Boston.

